In this connection, insistence upon the right of groups to function in a responsible fashion within the union is of the greatest significance. Having such groups is not by any means without precedent in the American Federation of Labor. In the Typographical Union, for example, there have for years been two or more openly recognized "parties" putting forward their programs, putting up states in the local and national elections, etc. The Printers find it as logical to have parties functioning in the trade union democracy as that there should be parties, for example, in a political democracy. A similar situation has existed, though perhaps not so continuous or on so large a scale, in many other A. F. of L. unions.

There are bound to be varying points of view in any living organization. It is far better that they should function openly than that they should operate in an underground fashion.

Why is it that the reactionaries in a union always fight against the existence of "groups," insist that this means splitting up the union, etc.? Does this mean that there are then no groups in the union? Not at all. What it means is that there is only one group and that is the group which is dominated by the union machine. It is perfectly well known that in the unions thus bossed there are always organizations, frequently known as "clubs," which constitute in effect the caucuses of the trade union machine. The cry of "no groups" means "no groups except our own" representing the union bureaucracy.

Bureaucracy is Organized

The bureaucracy always functions in an organized fashion and never relaxes its vigilance. Consequently, even if an occasional revolt breaks out, the machine presently rides roughshod again, because the opposition does not maintain a continuous organization. The Teachers must not only give up the right of groups to function but must steadily and rapidly extend the organization of the progressives.

Nor must the teachers permit themselves to be intimidated by the cry of such elements as Linville and Lefkowitz, that these groups are "dominated by political parties and do not have the genuine interest of the union and of the Teachers at heart." To say that the politically most developed members of a union must not function as factions in an organized way is to say that precisely those elements which should know most about the problem and be most devoted to the cause of the working class must not make their maximum contribution to the solution of the union's problems.

To try to forbid members of a revolutionary party to function as factions in the union and in progressive groups does not mean to remove political influence. Any one who has the slightest acquaintance with the union movement in this country knows that in proportion as the influence of working class parties is weak, the capitalist parties (Tammany Hall in the New York building trades and printing trades unions, etc.) dominate the union. Trade unions cannot possibly function in a non-political world, least of all unions of teachers.

"Politics" in the Union

The Stalinists have, of course, by the irresponsible and disruptionist fashion in which they have functioned or tried to function in the mass movement, put a weapon in the hands of the trade union bureaucrats and have alienated many honest but uninformed workers. But this does not mean that "politics" must be kept out of the union.

Political organizations, the same as progressive groups in the unions generally, must be tested first by the program for the union which they advance, and secondly by the way in which they seek to advance that program. The Workers Party stands for a progressive, militant Teachers Union in which trade union democracy obtains and believes that its membership should seek to advance what they regard as the sound program for the union openly, by educating the membership, trying to win them to this program, at no time seeking mechanical domination or resorting to cheap politics, alliances with reactionaries, etc. in order to advance their views. The members of the Workers Party, bound to act under the discipline of their party in the union, will, precisely because they are under that discipline, work harder for the union, fight more vigorously in all its battles, display a deeper and more consistent loyalty to the union.

Revolutionists Play Their Part

It is not an accident that in each of the situations mentioned earlier in the article the Workers Party and its members have played a part—in some instances as in Minneapolis and among the automobile workers in Toledo a leading and conspicuous one; in others as among the teachers and rubber workers a lesser role. We are not by any means seeking to make revolutionary political parties out of the unions. But even now, only with a core of revolutionists equipped with Marxist methods of analysis and disciplined and hardened for struggle, can progressive groups be built in the unions which can successfully challenge the entrenched and hardened bureaucracies; and in the end it is only under the leadership of the revolutionary party that the workers will be able really to solve the problems which the present age creates and to free themselves from poverty and insecurity and the frustration of spirit to which the masses under capitalism today are subjected.

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY

Manager's Corner

Responses to the financial needs of the NEW MILITANT have continued in a very excellent fashion during the last few weeks. Many party branches have sent in special contributions, not listed under the campaign for the eight-page weekly. Accounts for bundles received are being paid up and subscription renewals are taken care of more promptly than before. Due to this fact we have been able to pay up a number of bills and make a beginning toward putting the printshop in a better shape.

We are building up a solid economic foundation for our press. This is an essential prerequisite for the launching of the eight-page weekly. Now we are making real progress in this respect and, naturally, we can only urge the branches and the sympathizers to continue the good work.

Our proposal is to begin now a very active concentration to obtain new subscribers. It is the most effective and substantial way of extending the NEW MILITANT circulation and, of course, it brings in additional funds. Enlargement of its size would not have any real value unless also accompanied by a corresponding increase in circulation. This is the main aim. We ask the comrades in every city to get busy in a systematic manner, to get subscriptions from all contacts. Periodic distribution of free copies at certain selected neighborhoods, factories or workers' organizations will be a help when followed up thoroughly to obtain subs. But the important question is to make sure that all contacts established be asked to become regular readers of our press.

This is the kind of work in which all comrades and all sympathizers can participate. It does not hold out any special reward except the fulfilling of a very important task—to build up the revolutionary press. In this we feel sure, however, that all our supporters will join wholeheartedly. But there are also some direct inducements. We need only remind you of the prizes for the best sub-getters that have already been announced. One comrade has almost reached the point of making prize number one, and as soon as he completes his record the prize is his.

Again we also remind you of the simple and effective method of securing four three-month club subscription cards at the price of $1.50.

It is necessary to get to work with speed and dispatch. When subs come rolling in we gain new readers for our press, we help to build it up and we help to build the revolutionary movement. When subs come rolling in we will soon make the eight-page weekly a reality.

During the past few weeks the comrades of the Los Angeles branch have rolled up quite a record. They have made special contributions not listed here; they pay all their bundle accounts in advance, they send in regular subscriptions and additional funds for the eight-page weekly campaign.

Since our last report on this account we have received the following amounts:

The U. S. in the Philippines

By LO SEN

The Philippines have acquired Manuel Quezon for a president and General Douglas MacArthur of the United States Army as a "special military adviser." Thus auspiciously opens the 10-year period of the Philippines "Commonwealth" which is to culminate in the complete "independence" of the islands. The appointment of MacArthur "to supervise the organization of the national defense forces of the new commonwealth government" (New York Times) underlines the one fact about this Filipino independence affair of which little mention is made. American imperialism retains full control over the military and naval bases in the islands and full control over the future foreign policy of the islands. The change in the form of American control—and it is only a change—is designed primarily to assure the support of the Filipino bourgeoisie for America's war plans in the Pacific.

"Democracy" in the Philippines

"Enlightened" American imperialism has long known how to give its regime in the Philippines the semblance of "democracy" which assures to it the support of large native capitalist and landowning classes in the Filipino population. That these classes have been well tutored in the machinery of "democracy" is demonstrated by the presidential vote which tallied some 700,000—out of a population of nearly twelve millions! The semi-autonomous Filipino regime which had existed in the islands under the provision of the Jones Act of 1916 and the control of which has been concentrated for years in the hands of small political cliques headed by Quezon and the new vice-president, Sergio Osmena, has been corrupt and oppressive enough to measure up to the standards of our best democracies here in the West.

Under its rule vast holdings in land and other properties have been concentrated in the hands of a few families stemming from the old mestizo (mixed-blood) aristocracy and the millions of toilers have been reduced to conditions of helotry equalled only by those which exist in nearby China. Under this regime the revolutionary movement and the trade unions have been greeted by a policy of implacable terror. The Philippines Constabulary has been called into action almost exclusively to smash peasant revolts, such as the recent Sakdalista uprising in Northern Luzon, and to keep in subjection the Moros and other minority tribes in the South and in other parts of the islands. The new "commonwealth" under Quezon-Osmena-McArthur guarantees the continuity of these conditions.

Illusions of "Independence"

This arrangement is better suited to the war plans of American imperialism in the Pacific because it enables the Filipino bourgeoisie to develop the more easily illusions of "independence" under American protection in contrast to the prospect of subjugation by colony-greedy Japan.

The "commonwealth" is to last for ten years. Those ten years are likely to see a solution to the basic imperialist antagonism in the Pacific—the Japanese-American fight for hegemony. Only the development of the revolutionary movement of the Filipino workers and peasants, along with the movement in China, Indochina, Japan, India and the United States will determine whether the Philippines will in reality decide and govern their own destiny or whether they will remain a pawn on the imperialist chessboard of the Pacific.

New Bolivian Party Formed

A new party of the Fourth International has been formed in Bolivia, called the Revolutionary Workers Party (P.O.R.). It was born in the midst of the greatest difficulties—difficulties engendered by years of strife between that country and Paraguay.

It cannot be said that the coming to "Trotskyism" of our Bolivian comrades was accomplished precipitately; nor that the organization lacks a real base. It has considerable influence among the masses.

It is necessary to point out that the "Grupo Tupac Katari" (Bolivian revolutionary refugees in Argentina) which with the "Bolivian Left" formed the P.O.R., carried on an effective struggle in making contacts with the army. The international outlook of the forces that formed the new Bolivian party brought them to the camp of Bolshevik-Leninism and was crystallized at the congress of Cordoba, Argentina, in June, 1935 where they declared their adherence to the International Communist League.

The groups that make up the P.O.R. gained the right to be considered the only revolutionary working class organization by working valiantly in the struggle against the war. The nucleus that today makes up the Revolutionary Workers Party of Bolivia made contact with the soldiers at the front and had considerable success in the organization of Military Committees and in the distribution of its literature to the worker and peasant soldiers. One hundred of the prisoners in Asuncion (Paraguay) are militants of the party. In the rearward, where work was most difficult, its influence, established sporadically, is starting to be transformed into organized activity.

In Bolivia there never was much of a section of the Communist party. Despite objective conditions for revolutionary struggle and with the feudal bourgeoisie very weak, Stalinism was, however, unable to form any cadres before the war.

The Workers Party of the United States sends its heartfelt revolutionary greetings to the Revolutionary Workers Party of Bolivia, born in the fires of war, and pledges loyal and fraternal collaboration in the solution of its tasks which in essence are our tasks also.

NEW YORK BANQUET

You can't afford to miss the banquet to greet the Third Plenary Session of the National Committee of the Workers Party. It will be held Thursday, October 3, 7:30 P.M. at Irving Plaza. Vincent Dunne will tell of the recent magnificent battles in Minneapolis. Arnold Johnson, secretary of the National Unemployed League, the largest and most stable organization of the unemployed in the country, will briefly review the recent struggles of that organization.

Germinal Allard—"Gerry" to thousands of miners who have fought side by side with him against coal barons and reactionary labor officials—will talk on the situation in Illinois.

Maurice Spector, chairman of the Workers Party of Canada and one of the best speakers that the Canadian revolutionary movement has produced, will trace recent political developments—"Social Credit," "COCC," and the coming elections in Canada.

In addition to the above, A. J. Muste and James P. Cannon will deal with the perspectives of the W. P. and the Fourth International. Max Shachtman will preside.

Good food and a short but excellent musical program will be provided. The limited capacity of the hall and the rush for tickets is a warning to the tardy. Get your tickets now!

The time: 7:30 P.M., Thursday, Oct. 3. The place: Irving Plaza, 15th St. and Irving Place. Tickets: 50 cents (can be secured at Party headquarters, 55 East 11th St.)

CALIFORNIA—

The San Francisco branch of the W. P. will conduct a write-in campaign in the forthcoming elections in San Francisco. An educational leaflet for use in the campaign is being drafted by the Pacific Coast District.

The Educational Committee of the West Coast District is calling upon all the branches to carry on an intensive campaign of meetings, leaflet distribution, etc. during the next few weeks on the war danger.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

ARMY RULE IN THE PHILIPPINES

In the modern world the crude methods of direct and brutal colonial oppression by the "advanced" imperialist nations are resorted to only as a final means when more subtle methods fail. It is far easier and no more costly for the foreign exploiters to strike a mutually helpful bargain with the native bourgeoisie and its representatives. In Cuba the puppets Mendietta and Battista take their orders from the American capitalists through the United States Minister. In the Philippines the figure-head Quezon will take his orders from the "military adviser" McArthur, whose appointment to that post has just been announced. In the very way in which the news is made public, there is revealed the "open secret" that the election of Quezon was a pre-determined, cut-and-dried affair. The elections have only just been completed and yet it is stated that Quezon, precisely Quezon, had called for the appointment of General McArthur last summer. This is obviously revealed only now, after the elections, since it might have embarrassed Quezon in his campaigning. The United States Army, with commendable courtesy and in a spirit of cooperation, has graciously consented to transfer the former Chief of Staff to this new service, to help supervise the organization of the national defense forces for the new "commonwealth" government of the Philippine Islands. Under McArthur's rule the work of militarizing the Islands and the adjacent possessions will go forward to completion. The Philippines will be made a strong naval and air base for use in the coming war with Japan.

Gentleman's Agreement

Not that the threat of this war has again reached the acute stage. On the contrary, it suits the aims of both countries at this time to cultivate each other's friendship. Thus Ambassador Saito has just arrived at a "gentleman's agreement" with Washington to limit the volume of textiles to be exported by Japan to the Philippine market. This was done in order to avoid the imposing of an additional 50 to 75 per cent duty on Japanese goods entering the Philippines. The Japanese have even agreed to accept a smaller quota than the 52 per cent they had captured in 1934. This avoidance of a trade war in textiles may be extended to the general exports of the rapidly expanding Japanese capitalism to the United States and its possessions. But let it be inferred that the threat of war in the Pacific area is abating, one has only to glance at the enormous imports of scrap steel and other forms of steel from the United States to Japan. The latter has increased her average takings of these vital materials by 800 percent. This means that in the last thirty months Japan has imported more of this war material than in the previous eight years combined. Despite the rise in price that has resulted, the rate of import has, if anything, increased.

ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE

What is of greater importance to both the Soviet Union and to U. S. imperialism, there are rumors of a revival of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Speculation concerning the mission of the English economist Leith-Ross in the Far East centers on this interpretation. With the naval race in full swing as the result of the scrapping of the Washington naval treaty, the English find themselves more exposed than ever to attack in and from the Far East. The Italian threat to the Mediterranean line of communications that is like a sacred cow to British imperialism, only serves the more to emphasize England's weakness at the far end of these communications in Singapore. An alliance with Japan would serve to check the threat of the latter to build a canal through Siam that would "short-circuit" Singapore and shorten the route to India by two or three days. Japan would be given assurances against America and would police the Far East for the interests of both imperialists. Japan could then feel free to launch her attack finally against the Soviet Union. The resumption of this Far Eastern alliance would be in line with England's policy with respect to Germany; that is, of encouraging Hitler to expand eastwards at the expense of the Soviet Union.

REVOLUTIONARY ACTION AGAINST IMPERIALIST WAR

All these machinations of the imperialist robbers are directly and violently opposed to the vital interests of the world proletariat. This is the manner in which the bourgeoisie propose to maintain the system of exploitation, against the physical and economic well-being of the working class. The organizer and leader of the British Labor Party, Herbert Morrison, defending his betrayal of the working class by the support of British imperialism, says: "We are not interested in the struggles of rival imperialists and we are not going to be drawn into them." Such an ostrich policy places the workers in chains and hands them over to imperialist slaughter. On the contrary, we are vitally interested to oppose by revolutionary means all the machinations of all imperialists.

Side Lights on the "New Turn" of the Stalinists

By HENRY THURMAN

Manuilsky

D. Z. Manuilsky, reporting on "The Results of Socialist Construction in the Soviet Union," began by pointing out that since the Sixth Congress of the Communist International, the complete victory of socialism in the Soviet Union as well as the second great victory over world capitalism since the October Revolution has been achieved." (Daily Worker, August 20.)

"We have realized," Manuilsky is quoted as saying, "what the best minds of mankind formerly dreamed of, socialism."

Here the Daily Worker resorts to a curious journalistic trick, unsurpassed in cunning, in order to confuse and mislead its readers. It outlines Manuilsky's characterization of the Stalinist struggle against the Left Opposition, and follows on the heels of this with:

"Then Manuilsky described how the party had repelled the attacks of the Opposition who expressed the interests of the rich peasants, opposed the high tempo of industrialization, and the development of Soviet collective farms."

Now obviously the spokesman must be here referring to the bloc of the Right, not the Left who fought for the struggle against the Kulak, urged a higher tempo of industrialization, and advocated collectivization for the peasantry. But the Daily Worker cleverly presents a juxtaposition of texts that will be sure to lead the uninformed astray.

The assembly of learned parrots permitted the crowding disgrace, the strangling of all discussion. Manuilsky ended his distorted report with a tribute to "our Stalin the great, wise, beloved leader of mankind," and the Daily Worker concludes smugly:

"Manuilsky's words at this point were greeted with a hurricane of applause lasting fifteen minutes. Andre Marty of the French Communist Party ascended the platform to read a statement in the name of special delegations enthusiastically approving Manuilsky's report and proposing that the Congress refrain from discussion. Amidst loud applause, the Congress unanimously agreed."

But then, why not?

Brown

One good turn deserves another. Heywood Brown gives the Stalinists a boost, and they in turn have made a comradely gesture to the Workers Party. It all happened like this. Brown wrote a column exonerating the Stalinists from all suspicion of intentions to undermine capitalism in the United States. He implies that Stalin just can't muzzle the movement for revolution in this country because of the Workers Party.

"As a matter of fact there exists in America a small but highly articulate group which contends that they are the real custodians of true Communism, since they follow the teachings of Trotsky and totally reject the leadership of Stalin. How could a Russian Ambassador promise to silence them? And our own Mr. A. J. Muste, who was once head of the federation's labor college, frankly advocates the overthrow of the government by armed force but without benefit of orders from Russia."

Brown then proceeds to give a reformist whitewash of the C. P., absolving it from the accusation of revolutionism.

"But what are the revolutionary things which Earl Browder, American citizen, said in Russia? ... If those are subversive utterances please pick out my wall and firing squad."

Eager to show that they are really good reformists, not bad revolutionists, the Stalinists have accepted Brown's whitewash with glee. The Daily Worker has given its approval. And in Cleveland the grateful innocents have proudly pasted Brown's column up in the middle of the show-window in the Workers Bookshop!

THE MASS TRIAL OF A "LABOR MAYOR"

"My wife said, 'Oh, Daddy, I'm hit.' Just then Mrs. Thompson turned around to help her and that tear gas bomb exploded right in her face alongside of my wife and she went down."

Just one quotation from the testimony of one witness of the police outrage at the Flour City Ornamental Iron Works in Minneapolis on September 11. Just a chance phrase from a mass of testimony on the conduct of the police department under the leadership of a Farmer-Labor city government. While the grand jury delivered a white-wash of the mayor and his police in the murder of two young workers and the wounding of many more men, women and children, a mass trial conducted by the N.P.L.D. before an audience of 700 on September 16 brought out the real facts.

Two witnesses testified before the court, where Wm. Brown of Local 574 sat as judge. Frances Heisler of the N.P.L.D. prosecuted, and Gilbert Carlson, also of the N.P.L.D., conducted the defense, on the failure of the defendants, who were invited, to appear. The stories told by the twelve witnesses of the fatal night of September 11 are almost incredible in the brutality and horror they reveal. Police gassing, shooting, stoning, beating, defenseless men and women. The trial was conducted before an audience of about seven hundred—a jury of twelve citizens, carefully selected from among those who had not been near the scene of the police riot brought in a verdict of guilty.

Address of Heisler

The trial opened with an address for the prosecution by Attorney Heisler who said: "I have defended many cases many times before a jury where workers or farmers were charged with the commission of a certain crime, but this is the first time I have ever appeared in the role of the prosecution."

"However I believe, the prosecution is on the side of the people this time, and therefore I shall conduct the prosecution in a manner that is not very often done by City or State Attorneys...."

"We shall present your testimony by witnesses that shall not be prepared by the prosecution, because I met these witnesses for the first time four hours ago. Most of the witnesses were not known to the prosecution up to this afternoon. The only instructions which were given the witnesses were that they shall come here and tell their story, tell the truth irrespective of where the guilt may fall."

Gustave Beck was sworn in by Clerk of the Court Roseland. Mr. Heisler opened the direct examination:

Q. Your name is Gustave Beck?

A. Yes.

Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Beck?

A. Machinist.

Q. I call your attention to Wednesday last about 11 o'clock in the evening, were you present on or about 26th or 27th Street in the neighborhood of the Flour City Metal Works?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell the court and the jury in your own words what happened after you arrived and until you left the place?

A. Well, I came down to the corner of 26th Street and I saw some people parading up and down the place. They paraded three or four times and as far as any violence was concerned on the part of the people parading there, I didn't see anything that was wrong.... Then the cops started to shoot those gas bombs right into the mob and I got some of it right into my own face, so I got out of there.... I walked across the street and a cop pushed me in the ribs and says, "Go on, run, you son-of-a-bitch," and I says I couldn't because I have a sore leg and then one of them started to club me and I got across the street where I had my car parked and then a few more cops came around toward the north side and started to beat me again.

Testimony of Hendrickson

Mr. Hendrickson was sworn in, he testified that he was a machinist and draftsman, and had been at the Flour City plant "out of curiosity." Excerpts from his story:

"All of a sudden it seemed like everybody broke out and started throwing bombs.... the cops on the other side of the street ran across the street (toward us) and we broke up and ran. I ran toward 26th street and a policeman came around the corner just then and I run squarely into him and he hit me on the head and we both fell down and I got away and I heard him say "Get that guy." I turned the corner and I heard a shot, I didn't pay any attention until I was running by a house over on 26th Avenue and a fellow says, "There is blood running down your leg." And then they took me to the hospital...."

Q. Will you please state where you were shot?

A. Well, it is a kind of difficult place to tell, right in back, you know.

Engene Benjamin being sworn in testified that he lived only three quarters of a block from the Flour City Plant.

Q. Will you tell the court and the jury and the larger jury here what happened on that Wednesday night?

A. Everything. I saw the worst thing I ever saw. The police started to crowd the people off the streets with the armored cars and then the shooting started and the crowd of course scattered. They started to run up the street.... An armored car came driving by and got past us, then it backed up and shot another bomb, and struck Mrs. Anderson (who was with Benjamin) in the leg and broke her leg.

Q. You saw Mrs. Thompson was hurt did you not....?

A. Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Anderson were both hurt at the same time.

Q. Did you see whether Mrs. Thompson or Mrs. Anderson were attacking the armored car?

A. They attacked nothing, they were trying to get out of the road.

Q. Did you see the police use the armored cars to go after the women?

A. Yes.

Q. Were they successful?

A. They were successful, they got both women.

Q. Did you see the police shoot at the workers when they were running away?

A. Shot them in the back, yes sir.

Another Eye-witness

Mrs. Ebert, a householder who has lived in Minneapolis for twenty years, who is located just across from the Flour City plant, was sworn in.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the strike?

A. No.

Q. Were you on the picket line, Mrs. Ebert?

A. No, I don't know what that means; I didn't know what it means.

Q. You say before the police started to shoot the people were standing in the street in front of your house....?

A. Yes, I'll tell you how I saw it. I saw people standing there like in my church. I belong to the Pentecost Church. It was on the corner like it was in my church.

Q. The people were as quiet as they were inside your church?

A. Yes.... It was so quiet I didn't know a strike was there. Then I heard a shot, I thought it was something else and then it came a second time, several of the same kind of shots and then there came right there on the corner where I live, people standing all quiet, a rush and my heart almost stopped beating. The people around 26th Street started to run up in my yard, and I bet I had 100 people there. One of the cars then came close to the house, then I took the people inside so they could get away from this. Then comes the police with shot guns, running, I don't know how many, about fifteen or twenty of them, and then shots. I started back in my house and started to pray to God.... that no souls should be harmed in my house.

I want to be sure I'm telling you right now, I don't want to be confused. The police were shooting and I heard screams and swearing.... and an ambulance or some automobile was taking two people right from between my house and the house next to me. Right on the porch they were shot. Then after that it was so quiet I thought everything was over and I went to the window, I went up to the window and then I stepped to the side and then there was a pain in my arm. It was a shot from the window.

Parade of Pickets

After some further examination in which Mrs. Ebert produced the bullet and several other slugs dug out of the furniture, the defense declined to cross examine. Eliza Blachir, who also lives near the plant was sworn in and told the usual harrowing tale, his wife also took the stand and related:

"There was no disturbance.... The pickets were parading and singing this "Solidarity Forever.".... All of a sudden there was a shot, and more shots, tear gas.... About this time there was a young man, a man in the thirties I imagine, he tried to cross the railroad tracks and a policeman pushed him first and because he didn't fall kicked him, kicked him just as hard as he possibly could, and then hit him again and then hit him over the head with a club.

Then a lady, a lady also in the thirties, she was coming along, was going home and she was hit over the head and dropped right there; and then two men picked her up, and carried her away. A few minutes after that.... there was an old lady, I presume to be about seventy years old. I believe she was with her husband and a young man. As they came up in front of our house they were approached by a number of policemen.... one of the policemen hit her over the head with a club with the result that she fell against the policeman and then she was clubbed more by the others. The old man with her protested and was knocked down the same way. One of the policemen knocked the young man's hat off his head and when he bent over to pick it up he was severely beaten by four or five policemen.... the cars that passed by were stopped and the people were dragged out and searched for weapons.... We saw instances where police picked up rocks and threw them at the folks walking by in the street and then called to us and our neighbors and told us if we didn't quit throwing rocks they would come in and get us. There were no rocks thrown by the neighbors that we could see. They all came from the police themselves.... I have never seen the like of this in Minneapolis and I've lived here 43 years.

Spectator Wounded

Mrs. Ray Thompson, who was wounded during the riot, was next sworn in. She testified that she had nothing to do with the strike, that she was just passing by a block away from the plant after twelve, more than an hour after the first police outbreak:

"I was with five others, my sister was one of them, and she met her son and stopped to tell him he had better go home. He said, 'Mother, here come the armored cars, you had better run.' So we left the street and went in between houses about 33 feet from the street and I happened to notice an armored car went by. I turned around and my sister was lying on the ground. She had been shot and then something hit me in the face."

Many other witnesses were called. All had the same story of absolute unprovoked attack by the police, of a regular police riot that went on for more than an hour with unrestrained brutality....

While the jury was out a vote was taken among the assembled workers and a resolution condemning the police responsible for the massacre and demanding the removal of every officer who participated was adopted. The jury found the defendants guilty, the sole jury, incidentally, that could find anything but a white-wash for the mayor and his police, although the evidence against them was overwhelming.... but then, this was a working class jury.

Japan's Advance in China

By LO SEN

Four years ago this week the armed forces of Japanese imperialism swept into Manchuria. As now with Ethiopia, the best the League of Nations could propose was a plan for imperialist collaboration in the control and exploitation of China's northeastern provinces (the Lytton Report). Like Italy, Japanese imperialism thumbed its nose at the League's proposals and proceeded with its plans for the extension of its empire on continental Asia.

Japan's advance into China was in its way as great a threat to British imperialism as Italy's projected attack on Ethiopia. But in the Far East two other factors intervened which led Britain to give Japan a free hand. The first was Britain's desire to support a Japanese offensive against the Soviet Union. The second was Britain's inability to meet with American imperialism on common ground against Japan. Dollar diplomacy, hopeful that Japan would break her neck in an attack on the USSR, contented itself for the time being with the Stimson doctrine and proceeded with its military and naval program for an eventual clash in the Pacific.

That is why Japan was able to proceed, virtually unhindered, in its continental conquests. Since Britain was content to lay low, the League of Nations patiently took it on the chin, tagged a little and carried on. Today, because Italy's plans for expansion in Africa far more directly affects the so-called lifelines of the British Empire and because they are more directly linked to a tense and complicated pattern of antagonisms in Europe itself, Britain is massing its might to fight it out if necessary and therefore the League is permitted to make or threaten to make use of its sanction powers.

Japanese Offensive

Meanwhile Japan has proceeded methodically with the realization of its own "manifest destiny." Manchukuo was established. Pu Yi was put on a new Manchurian throne. A further attack drove the Japanese line of penetration into North China itself. A whole network of political military and trade agents was spread over Inner Mongolia with a view to its eventual incorporation into the new Manchurian "state". Most recently the remnants of Chinese control over the provinces north of the Yellow River were disposed of and new pressure brought to bear on the Nanking Government for compliance. Japanese demands for political, military and economic control are a hundred times more sweeping than the famous "Twenty-One Demands" of 1915.

In the face of this invasion the Kuomintang, political instrument of the Chinese bourgeoisie, has consistently capitulated and begged only that the invaders leave it a scrap or a bone for itself. This capitulation has been accompanied by savage measures of repression against groups and individuals in the country who have tried to organize resistance to the imperialist invasion. The boycott in 1931-32, accompanied by considerable ferment among the petty bourgeoisie and among the workers, was smashed by the Nanking Government at the demand of Japanese imperialism. All fantastic propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding, the failure of revolutionary forces to grasp and develop this spontaneous burst of national revolutionary sentiment stands mute and terrible witness to the bankruptcy and failure of Stalinism in China. Only the absence of a strongly organized movement in the urban, industrial centers made it possible for the Kuomintang to give free entry to Japan and to turn its forces on the peasant Red Armies bottled up in the mountains of Central China. Only the continued absence of these proletarian forces made it possible for the Kuomintang to continue its relentless war against the peasants and eventually to drive their forces to the remote provinces of the West.

Task of New Revolutionary Party

Try as they may, the Stalinists cannot stretch the position of the embattled Red Armies of the Szechwan-Kansu-Shensi borders to the decisive sectors of Central China. In the key urban, industrial centers the proletarian movement has been left to its fate. Without a resurgent movement of the working class the struggle of the peasants against the landlords and the nationalist sentiments of sections of the petty bourgeoisie remain without outlet. Here lies the task of the new revolutionary party that has to be built in China: to find its way once again to the workers, to help them raise their heads and to put themselves in the van of a revolutionary alliance capable of smashing the Kuomintang reaction and of offering resistance to the continued offensive of Japanese imperialism.

To this there is no short cut. The new turn of the Comintern (shouldn't we now begin calling it Comintern?) expresses itself in China in the readiness of the Stalinist Party to throw in its lot once more with any groups of politicians and militarists willing to use anti-imperialist phrases in their scramble for power. This promises new defeats and new disasters. To the youthful and struggling Communist League of China falls today the mighty task of rebuilding the cadres of the Chinese proletariat for tomorrow's revolutionary struggles.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

L.I.D., NEW YORK—

Question: The Stalinist press (see the New Masses for Aug. 20) in order to support the Stalin-Laval pact, quotes Lenin to the effect that he would not hesitate a single second to come to the same kind of an 'agreement' with the German imperialist robbers as he had reached with the French against the Germans, etc. What is the source of this quotation?

Answer: The quotation was taken from Lenin's "A Letter to American Workers." (See the comment on this by Trotsky in his article in the NEW INTERNATIONALIST for August, entitled "An Open Letter to the French Workers.") Following its customary practice of deceiving the workers, the New Masses does not quote the entire section of Lenin's pamphlet dealing with his "agreement" with the French imperialists. Otherwise it would be clear that Stalin-Laval could get no encouragement from it.

Lenin first explains the exact nature of his "agreement": "When the German imperialist robbers in February, 1918, threw their armies against defenseless, demobilized Russia, which staked its hopes upon the international solidarity of the proletariat before the international revolution had completely ripened, I did not hesitate for a moment to come to a certain 'agreement' with the French monarchists. The French captain Sadoul, who sympathized in words with the Bolsheviks while in deeds a faithful servant of French imperialism, brought the French officer de Lubezars to me. 'I am a monarchist. My only purpose is the defeat of Germany,' de Lubezars declared to me. 'That goes without saying (cela va sans dire),' I replied. But this by no means prevented me from coming to an 'agreement' with de Lubezars concerning certain services that French officers, experts in explosives, were ready to render by blowing up railroad tracks in order to prevent the advance of German troops against us. This was an example of an 'agreement' of which every class-conscious worker will approve, an agreement in the interests of Socialism. We shook hands with the French monarchist although we knew that each of us would readily hang his partner. But for a time our interests coincided. To throw back the rapacious advancing Germans we made use of the equally rapacious counter-interests of the other imperialists, thereby serving the interests of the Russian and the International Socialist revolution. In this way we served the interests of the working class of Russia and other countries, we strengthened the proletariat and weakened the bourgeoisie of the whole world, we used the justified practice of maneuvering, necessary in EVERY war, of shifting and waiting for the moment when the rapidly growing proletarian revolution in a number of advanced countries had ripened."

What was the nature of Lenin's "agreement" therefore? To blow up bridges. Did Lenin, as Stalin now does, tell the French workers that they should not fight against the capitalists of their own country, because the French were his "allies" against Germany? He did nothing of the sort, and no thoughtful worker will find any equality between his "agreement" and Stalin's. Immediately following the section of the article above quoted comes that part which is quoted by the New Masses: "And despite all the wrathful howling of the sharks of Anglo-French and American imperialism, despite all the calumnies they have showered upon us, despite all the millions spent for bribing the right Socialist-Revolutionary, Menshevik and other social-patriotic newspapers, I WOULD NOT HESITATE A SINGLE SECOND to come to the SAME KIND of an 'agreement' with the German imperialist robbers, should an attack upon Russia by Anglo-French troops demand it...." (All quotations are from the International Publishers, 1934 edition. Emphasis in original.) It is interesting to note that the miserable editors of the New Masses are crawling here in a double sense: First because of the difficulties in apologizing for Stalin before the workers, and secondly because, having, on the previous week been confused as to what was to be the new "line," they used the wrong apology and had to make a correction. In order to avoid embarrassment the article was buried as an "editorial comment" in the "Correspondence" section, the apology being made by saying that the "... editorial last week—is wrong, since it is open to misinterpretation (!!!)"

The Coal Strike

AFTER repeated postponements by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, the bituminous coal strike was finally called at midnight last Sunday. The one hundred percent walk-out is a magnificent exhibition of solidarity on the part of the 400,000 miners involved. It suggests the power that the American trade union movement would possess if these masses were under class-conscious leadership and could therefore express their native militancy and achieve real results for themselves.

The militancy of the miners is not, however, what Lewis depends upon. He fears it. He is engaged in shadow-boxing with the operators in order to impress the Roosevelt administration with his "influence," his power to keep the miners in check. Thus he believes that "favors" will be granted to him which he can pass on to the miners. Only on this basis of government favor and support can unions be built or maintained today, according to the Lewis philosophy.

The result of repeated postponements of the strike in order that the Guffey Act, "the little NRA" for the soft coal industry, might be passed is that on the eve of the strike thirty-three and a quarter million tons of coal were above ground, representing an almost two months' supply, nine million tons more than on the same date in 1934 and thirteen and a half million tons more than in 1933. Before Lewis finally called the strike, he had come to an agreement with the operators on all essential points and only a difference of a couple of pennies on the basic rate and some questions as to differentials between north and south remain. The operators and union leaders are in constant conference on these points and all the indications are that they will come to an agreement in a few days. Thus the magnificent solidarity of the miners is being prostituted for a fake battle which gives the operators a chance to get rid of some of their surplus coal, the demand for which is stepped up by the stoppage, and John L. Lewis a chance to show that he is "not to be trifled with."

Let this serve as another warning that the Lewis-Hillman-Dubinsky group in the A. F. of L. are not progressives and cannot be counted on to support progressive causes and groups. The left wing must be built against them, not as the Stalinists seek to do, by the favor of these bureaucrats.

As for the miners, though even under existing conditions, their united strength is compelling the operators to give some concessions, "the little NRA" will not save them. Soon an intensified crisis will grip the industry. Let them prepare for that day by building their union and developing an honest, fighting leadership.

The N.P.L.D. and Sacramento

SOME 18 months ago, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, having initiated a protest against the deportation from Holland to Hitler Germany of four young revolutionaries, was told by National Secretary Patterson of the I.L.D. that the Stalinist defense arm would not collaborate in a movement including counter-revolutionaries and such "social fascists" as Mary Fox of the League for Industrial Democracy who had endorsed the protest.

Much water has since flowed under the bridge. One of the four exiled youths has been killed by the Nazis. The C.P. has now changed its mind about "social fascism"; according to Sam Darcy's Western Worker, Huey Long, not Mary Fox, was a "social Fascist." As for the N.P.L.D., it has not fulfilled Patterson's diagnosis, made in rejecting the invitation to help the victims of Dutch "justice," that it had "died aborning."

The cases of Antonio Bellussi, Harold Robins and Andre Gras, all handled efficiently by the N.P.L.D. are history by now. The work of the N.P.L.D. in the Fargo riots, the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial, the Hallert case, the Philadelphia Fruit Clerks cases, and in an auxiliary capacity in the cases of Ward Rodgers, Ferrero and Salitto, the struggles against Hitler and Mussolini in New York on May 17 and Columbus Day last year all made their mark.

The latest news from Minneapolis indicates that the Mill City branch of the N.P.L.D. is in a fair way toward duplicating the splendid record of the parent organization in New York. The mass trial held by the N.P.L.D., which convicted Thomas Latimer, Farmer-Labor Mayor, of shedding the blood of workers, was the authentic voice of the Minneapolis proletariat and allied progressive elements. Not even the capitalist press could escape the significance of the revolt against Latimer's bloody persecution of striking workers and sympathizers. Column-reports of the N.P.L.D.'s mass trial, at which Attorney Francis Heisler of the Chicago N.P.L.D. served as prosecuting attorney, testify to the principled and efficient fight of the Minneapolis N.P.L.D.

No, the N.P.L.D. did not die aborning. It did not die even of the attacks of the I.L.D., ranging from slandorous backbiting to physical onslaughts. It has grown and increased its activity. Its name is known and respected in the radical and labor movements of New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Allentown, Fargo, San Francisco, Oakland and other cities where it has participated in important struggles.

True, the N.P.L.D. has not achieved its objective of uniting many political currents in a single defense organization based on class conceptions broader than any partisan viewpoint. But the fault is not the N.P.L.D.'s.

Its moral right to the adjective "non-partisan" is unassailable. That the Socialist Party, which a year ago this month agreed upon a plan for entering and building the N.P.L.D., has not done so, is the responsibility of the Socialist N.E.C. The N.P.L.D. has shown by its policy in aiding members of the Workers Party, anarchists, Socialists and—more than once—misled Stalinist workers called upon it when the I.L.D. was betraying them, that it has a genuinely non-partisan viewpoint. Even Stalinist functionaries are compelled to admit this truth in deeds when they turn to the N.P.L.D. for aid in a jam!

The Workers Party, consequently, continues its firm support of the N.P.L.D. And today this means, above all else, supporting the National Sacramento Appeal Committee of which the N.P.L.D. is one constituent and a driving force. The work of that committee can mean not only the freedom of our comrade, Norman Mini, but a step forward for labor throughout California, a blow to the Hearst-inspired reaction.

The N.S.A.C. has plenty of obstacles to overcome. During the Sacramento trial the Stalinists called Norman Mini a stool-pigeon. For a time, just after he rejected probation and went to San Quentin, they felt forced to tone down to the insulting remark that he was "an honest, misled class prisoner." Now, again, they have begun an undercover attack on Mini; while their press religiously avoids all mention of his name, one of their people has just sabotaged the work of the N.S.A.C. in a San Francisco workers' organization by a speech about "Mini's dubious conduct at the trial."

Despite the fact that the I.L.D. is glad to have the aid of the N.P.L.D. when it finds itself in a jam in one of its cases, this is the way Stalinism treats the sole defense of a class prisoner now in San Quentin!

Our members and sympathizers have a great task to perform in the Sacramento case. There is no greater obligation than the rescue of a comrade from a capitalist prison. New directives have just been sent to all branches and the party calls upon every member to put them into effect energetically and immediately.

The Role of the P. M. A.

THE little bureaucrats at the head of the Progressive Miners of America (the independent union in Illinois) have a policy of keeping their members at work during the strike, though not all of them are following it out. These little bureaucrats play upon the resentment still felt by many of their members over the fact that in 1932 members of the U.M. W. worked under Lewis orders while they fought a bitter strike. There is no defense for Lewis's course in Illinois or anywhere else. The Illinois miners have often been in the lead in the fight against the Lewis bureaucracy and the Lewis sell-out policies in the miners' union. But today and for months past there has been no essential difference between the officialdom of the P.M.A. and Lewis, save that the former carry out feebly and on a small scale the autocracy, the cheap political trickery, the persecution of "reds," the class-collaborationism which Lewis carried out on a large scale and in an impressive manner.

Under these circumstances, it is heartening just now to learn that the left wing movement in the P. M. A. is on the up grade, that there is a split between Percy and Keck in the ranks of the little bureaucrats, and that a petition movement for a special constitutional convention of the P.M.A. will probably succeed.

The miners have nothing to gain from a separation which has no other basis any more than a private quarrel between big thieves and little thieves. A united union and a united left wing to make that union clean, militant, powerful, is the need of the hour.

Help Our Chinese Comrades

ONE of our Chinese comrades, just released after four years in a Kuomintang prison, describes in a letter how he was hung up by the thumbs and suspended from a beam until he lost consciousness. During his whole four years in prison he was kept chained at the ankles so that when released he was unable to walk. This treatment, he writes, is the common fate of all the political prisoners who were in there with him.

This is the fate now faced by our comrades who were recently arrested in Peiping and Shanghai, Niel Sih, Sze Chao-sing, Wang Yao-hua, Hu Hwang-chang and Liu Chia-lang. The Communist League of China, an organization committed, like our own, to the fight for the Fourth International, has appealed to us to mobilize aid and protests on behalf of these comrades. We cannot let this appeal go unanswered. Organize demonstrations before your local Chinese consulates! Adopt resolutions of protest, send them directly to the Executive Yuan, Nanking, China, demanding the release of our comrades and send copies to party headquarters in New York. Call for the release of Chen Tu-hsiu, of Niel Sih, Sze Chao-sing and the other imprisoned Bolshevik-Leninists, and for the release of all political prisoners!

Push Fight For Sacramento Appeal

A San Francisco sub-committee of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, set up at a conference on Sept. 22, has begun functioning in the fight for liberation of the Sacramento workers now in San Quentin and Tehachapi prisons on 14-year sentences for organizing a union. An East Bay Committee and a Los Angeles Committee will be set up at conferences to be held in the near future.

The Workers Party, the Socialist Party, I.W.W., Y.P.S.L. and S.Y.L. constitute the San Francisco sub-committee of the national joint defense body, which includes nine organizations. Efforts will be made to widen the front in San Francisco. Tom Kerry, Pacific coast correspondent of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee as well as of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, is secretary of the new San Francisco committee.

The local committees will circulate collection lists, sell the official pamphlet of the N.S.A.C., approach unions for moral and financial aid for the defense, and lay the basis for mass meetings to be held on the eve of the appeal hearing.

Pressure on the Stalinists

As a result of the activities of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, the Communist party and I.L.D. have at last been forced into action on the Sacramento case.

Last January, when the N.P.L.D. was called into the Sacramento trial by Norman Mini, now Prisoner 57606 in San Quentin, the C. P. suddenly terminated its apathy (caused by the "deviations" of some of the prisoners), and became quite active, especially in attacking the N.P.L.D. and Mini. Ever since the convictions in April, the Stalinists have played the case down, as they did before January.

Progressives Win Rubber Workers Elections at Akron

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 24.—After progressive forces made a virtual clean sweep of offices in the United Rubber Workers of America and the convention closed, attention was turned this week to the problem of obtaining financial support from the A. F. of L. and solving the status of the newly-formed international union.

The three executive officers went to Washington, D.C. to discuss with William Green his promise to aid the rubber workers and make plans for actual changing of the federal unions into affiliates with the international United Rubber Workers of America.

The officers, who represent the choice of the progressives, are Sherman H. Dairymple, president, formerly Goodrich local president; Thomas F. Burns, vice-president, key anti-bureaucracy fighter at the convention; and Frank Grillo, secretary-treasurer, of Los Angeles.

Six delegates were chosen on the executive council. Only one of them could be termed a Green henchman. He is George B. Roberts, an organizer and assistant of Coleman Claherty, whose plans, following his repudiation by the rubber workers, are uncertain. The other members of the council were very prominent in the fight against Green.

When Green left Akron he claimed the convention had voted down financial support when they turned down a resolution asking him to appoint Claherty as president. This is purely a threat. To include a financial clause in a resolution on elections is illegal, progressives argued, and they expect to take this question before the national convention of the A. F. of L. in October, if Green doesn't give them any satisfaction.

Dillon at Akron

AKRON, Ohio.—Although the Toledo Chevrolet strike was ended nearly four months ago, Francis D. Dillon, reactionary president of the auto workers international, still smarted strongly under the criticism given him by the Workers Party for his treacherous role in compromising the strike.

Dillon told rubber workers at the convention here that "the auto workers heeded the words of A. J. Muste and listened to direct action talk. They wouldn't follow me and the A. F. of L. leadership."

He implored the rubber workers not to listen to such talk in Akron. "They said the strike would have been won if I didn't come on the scene. They charged I was selling the boys out. They said I was reactionary," Dillon cried.

He didn't attempt refutation of the charges. All he could say was, "I challenge any man to prove those charges."

Dillon spoke on behalf of Green's leadership and urged the delegates to be satisfied with anything Green did. "It'll be for your own good." He was referring to the possible appointment of Claherty. His talk fell on deaf ears.

Mixing Quotations

By HANK RICE
Somebody once said that mixing quotations was worse than mixing drinks. In the one case you have only yourself to be befuddled, in the other you befuddle and confuse an entire rank an file. Here are a couple of mixed "drinks" that I rescued from that fountain of wisdom, the Daily Worker. I submit them without further comment.

The first one is from the copy of Nov. 10, 1934. John Little, District Organizer for the Y.C.L., explains in an Open Letter to the Y.P.S.L. why he can't engage in a united front with the "renegades." About three-quarters of the way down he says:

"The Y.P.S.L. cannot insist that the Y.C.L. shall abandon what we consider our correct policy of fighting against bourgeois democracy and for the proletarian dictatorship, a policy which the Y.P.S.L. erroneously considers to be the cause of the rise to power of Fascism. Neither do we insist that the Y.P.S.L. shall abandon what we consider its thoroughly false and dangerous theory that it is possible to fight against Fascism by supporting bourgeois democracy through the theory of the lesser evil and the way for the rise to power of Fascism as in Germany and Austria. This policy is what we call social Fascism! Our characterization of it flows from our basic principles. We will not and cannot change our position on this question."

Now get a load of this from A. B. Magill's article in the Daily Worker of August 16, 1935:

"Where parliamentarism and remnants of democratic freedom exist, there, in spite of the capitalist interference, where it is possible for open fighting organizations of the proletariat to exist, there we defend parliamentarism and democracy against Fascism and continue to struggle for the proletarian dictatorship."

Latimer Grets Jobless

From the Minneapolis Tribune, Friday, Sept. 13. We quote the following report of the reception prepared by the Farmer-Labor administration of Minneapolis for a delegation of unemployed:

"Before the marchers made their appearance at the City Hall, extensive police precautions were taken. The 4th and 5th Street entrance doors were locked and policemen stationed at the 3rd and 4th Avenue entrances to question persons seeking to enter the City Hall. Sheriff Wall called in 70 deputies, who supplemented the police. He said machine guns were ready if 'anything breaks.'"

"About 75 policemen were thrown about the building, most of them carrying riot clubs that resembled short baseball bats. . . . Cordons of police and deputy sheriffs armed with machine guns and riot weapons stood by."

Chaining the Workers to Imperialist War Machine

French C.G.T. is even warning its workers to be ready to put the boycott into effect the moment that Geneva acts. But in our opinion Italy the boycott did not invoke against Geneva. But in our opinion Italy the boycott did not invoke against Geneva. But in our opinion Italy the boycott did not invoke against Geneva.

But let us suppose that Geneva really does decide on a boycott of Italy. Is Germany going to observe the decisions of the League to which it does not belong? Will the United States and Japan, neither of them members of the League, observe them? In no case will the League boycott hinder the Italian march on Ethiopia. Even the closing of the Suez canal would not work, for in order to close it effectively the war front would have to be extended until it led into a new European configuration.

And France, Britain, and the U.S.S.R., the guardians of the status quo in Europe, have no desire to lose the collaboration of Italy.

Arbitration Ineffective
From the preceding it follows that: arbitration is ineffective in as much as the aggressor is already known; it is useless to count on a boycott to stop the war. On the contrary, the war, now limited to Ethiopia, would become European and world-wide by action of the so-called "powers interested in the maintenance of peace."

Hitler, taking advantage of the diversion created by Mussolini in Ethiopia, might suddenly launch an attack toward the East or into Central Europe.

The powerlessness of Geneva is plain. Geneva is no more able to stop war than capitalism is able to stop war. What is then to be done? The appeal of the L.S.I. concludes: "In case of such a failure the international calls on the working class to avoid war." The appeal terminates by telling the working class that it is within its power to stop the war. To the failure of the League is added the failure of the L.S.I., which falls and has failed, by the admission at the end of its own appeal.

But, you say, the L.S.I. calls on its parties to organize protest demonstrations against Mussolini. That is clearly practical and worthwhile; but only on the condition that such demonstrations are not used to mask the class peace concluded by the Socialist parties and their auxiliary organizations with the bourgeoisie of their respective countries; as is the case with the British Laborites who are even now acting in concert with the leaders of their imperialist government. Demonstrations against Mussolini and for Ethiopia must be organized, of that there can be no doubt; but such demonstrations can only be effective and profitable if the working class demonstrates as an independent and autonomous force; not as an auxiliary in the service of this or that imperialism, satisfied (Britain) or unsatisfied (Italy) with its colonial loot. Only under such conditions can international protests be of assistance to the Italian people in their struggle against Fascism and aid in their deliverance. Any other conditions, which enable Mussolini to represent the workers of foreign nations as the allies of their imperialist governments, can only facilitate Rome's work instead of hindering it. This is what would happen if the example of the British Laborites, acting in accord with their imperialist government, were followed; and if the directions of the L.S.I. were followed and the actions of the proletariat were subordinated to the League.

In order to preserve peace we must not rely on the intervention of Paris or London; we must coordinate action of the working class of every nation with action of the U.S.S.R. No other course is possible. And to do this we need not wait for the League, nor for the African war to actually break out. A boycott of Italian imperialism should be decided upon by proletarian organizations and applied internationally. But do not associate the action of the international proletariat with the interested maneuvers of this or that imperialism. To do this is to render the action of the international proletariat suspect in the eyes of the Italian workers, and consequently useless in the cause of peace and the overthrow of Italian Fascism.

There is little to be said for the Comintern. The Seventh Congress closed without one word, one whisper, on the war in Ethiopia. The Italian delegate, Ercoli, in making his closing speech on the discussion of the war question, called on the preceding speakers to "be concrete." In order to give them an example of concreteness, the Italian valet of Stalin ignored the war danger, and forgot to discuss any methods of combating Mussolini on an international scale, in the "concrete" case of an African war.

The Seventh Congress of the Comintern simply confirmed for the thousandth time the death of this organization as an instrument of guidance and struggle for the international working class; and confirmed, on the other hand, its complete subservience to Soviet bureaucracy and diplomacy. The slogans of the Comintern are determined by Soviet foreign policy and for the present the U.S.S.R. does not wish to alienate Mussolini in the international race. That is the truth of the matter.

Another "Decorative" Conference
In the meanwhile the Italian Socialist and Communist parties, living in exile, have called a Congress of Italians in Foreign Lands. It is the latest style. Since Stalin has said that "we love our country" every Stalinist party, aping the master, has forgotten that outside of Russia, the first task of the workers is to conquer their country. This Congress of Italians in Foreign Lands, put off from month to month, is to meet the end of September, when Mussolini will in all probability already have started his African war. The Congress, if it ever does meet, will be nothing more than a congress of the Socialist and Communist parties. For the sake of decoration there will probably be a representative of the L.S.I. and a representative from France for the Comintern. But the whole affair will move in the language and in the spirit of the People's Front; one more demonstration, without any concrete goal and without results.

The duty of the international proletariat is not to limit itself to protest meetings. The ranks of the international proletariat must be reformed in action, in the boycott of Italian imperialism and its accomplices. To this end the coordinated efforts of the French, the British, and the American proletarians could do much. But it must be the coordinated efforts of the proletariat—not of their governments! War has become once more the touchstone of true proletarian internationalism. It is in the struggle against war that the true internationalists will come forward and that the idea of the Fourth International will take on concrete form.

N.Y. District School to Open Oct. 21

The Winter 1934 term of the International Workers School in New York will open the week of October 21. The curriculum includes five regular classroom courses, several lecture series in political, philosophical and cultural subjects as well as symposia and debates. Sidney Hook, James Burnham, James Rorty, Charles Malamuth and other prominent speakers will deliver lectures for the school. The schedule for the regular courses are:

Monday, 8:40-10:10 P.M., Fundamental Elements of Marxism—Ben Borkeson, instructor.

Monday, 7-8:30 P.M., Organization Principles, Structure and Methods of Party Work—Martin Abern, instructor.

Wednesday, 7-8:30 P.M., Programmatic Foundations of the Workers Party—J. G. Wright, instructor.

Thursday, 7-8:30 P.M., Theoretical System of Karl Marx—Rubin Grote, instructor.

Friday, 7-8:30 P.M., State and Revolution—Jack Weber, instructor. In addition to the five courses, a lecture series on Trends in the American Trade Union Movement, under the supervision of A. J. Muste will begin Wednesday, October 23.

Radicals Barred From All Influence in County Congress

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30.—Hiding behind the innocuous non-deplume of the Lucas County Congress for Political Action, the Toledo Central Labor Union and the Toledo locals of the Railroad Brotherhoods have blossomed forth into independent political action. With a conglomerate state of politicians, supposedly friendly to labor, conservative union officials, and a couple of Socialists to provide a radical face, the Congress, which is completely dominated by the craft union officialdom, is attempting to gain control of the local city government in the next election as a "labor" ticket.

Boasting a program of various municipal reforms, the Congress is attempting to rally the support of organized labor, liberals and reformers.

The local union leadership is taking no chance that genuine radical influences will have any voice in the Congress, and is seeing to it that control remains solely in the hands of the local A. F. of L. and Railroad Brotherhood officialdom. Organizations like the Lucas County Unemployed League, and independent organizations like the M.E.S.A. and the Toledo Newspaper Guild were specifically excluded from representation in the Congress. The local Workers Alliance is included in the Congress as a "safe" organization.

Union bureaucrats, such as Otto Brach, secretary of the Toledo C.L.U., are backing the move, as they believe it will not compromise them with the old-time political machines with which they have been cooperating for years. Since the elections permit only "non-partisan" candidates, they feel safe in endorsing

'Militant Socialist' Program Hedges on the Question of War

(By the Editorial Board)

A revolutionary program on which to unite for years has been, and still continues to be, the basic need of the left wing currents in the Socialist Party. This fundamental task has been constantly avoided by the "Militant" Socialist leaders, who are a heterogeneous combination of working class theory and strategy. The first "Militant" program, hurriedly gotten up within a few days of the June, 1934 convention, was the work of a few individuals; it was quickly scrapped at the convention for the sake of an unprincipled alliance with Hoan and Thomas, and was never heard of again.

Now that their 1934 alliance has come to grief (which was a foregone conclusion, predicted by us a year ago, and did damage only to the potential left wing which was never built because of the alliance), the "Militants" are again under pressure to produce a program. Characteristically, the new program, again the work of one or two individuals, was presented at the recent "Socialist Call" Institute without any decisive action being taken on it; it was referred back to an editorial committee together with all comments and criticisms. Equally characteristic, the draft program has been distributed only to a select few; it has been published nowhere; the rank and file in the Socialist Party are in no way involved in a broad discussion of what the finished program should contain.

Yet only a very few months remain before the election of delegates to the next biennial convention of the Socialist Party! The "Militants" vacillate, while the Old Guard, having re-established its prestige by the capitulation to it of the N.E.C. majority, prepare to complete their victory at the convention. There is very little time left for the genuine left wing forces to gather strength for the struggle

Both Int'l's For League War Moves

Even as the first blood has been shed on the mountainous plateaus of Ethiopia, the two Internationals of the Third, hasten to conclude the last terms of their pact with the bourgeoisie... they seek to surpass even the capitalists in their anxiety to push the workers whom they pretend to represent, into a new and bloodier slaughter. Both the Socialist and Communist parties of Britain demand—that their government apply sanctions against Italy... they can hardly wait for the blood bath.

The British Labor Party, the hope and glory of the Second International now that the German Social Democracy has been led into the pit, has just voted for war, twenty to one! George Lansbury, the aged pacifist leader of the Labor Party rose at the congress and said: "I cannot believe—may it be impossible to believe—that there should be anyone in this assembly who could uphold the opinion that there could be a pretext—even that of counter-attacking—to throw bombs and deadly gas on the women and children of another race."

"I cannot see any difference between massacre organized by the League of Nations and massacre organized by the nations individually."

A Song and a Vote
Says the New York Post: "Thunderous applause and spontaneous shouts of 'For he's a jolly good fellow' greeted the seventy-six year old leader." Immediately afterwards the assembly voted twenty to one to support League Sanctions against Italy—to support the present agent of British imperialism, the League of Nations, in any measures it may take...not pledging to support, but urging the League to "take action." Thus lightly these jolly

Revolutionary Policy Alone Can Defeat Imperialist War

STATEMENT OF THE THIRD PLENUM OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE, WORKERS PARTY OF THE U. S., NEW YORK, OCT. 4.

1. The armies of Italian Fascism, after months of deliberate preparation, have now launched their attack upon the Ethiopian peoples. Driven by the intolerable strains of internal social and economic contradictions, Mussolini and the Italian bourgeoisie seek a solution in open imperialist aggression against the last of the independent nations of Africa.

2. The outbreak of war in Africa demonstrates that the conflicts of world imperialism have reached the stage of armed struggle for a re-making of boundaries, and a re-division of territories and colonial possessions. Though the Italian campaign in Ethiopia may not lead immediately and directly to a world struggle of the imperialist powers, this delay can prove no more than temporary. The war in Ethiopia must be understood as the prelude to the new imperialist world war.

Expose the Bandit League

3. In the preparation for the Italian seizure of Ethiopia, the League of Nations has once more demonstrated beyond any possible doubt its true role. The League is not in any sense whatever "the defender of peace." It is the legal and hypocritical cover for the maneuvering of the dominant imperialist powers. Since Ethiopia first invoked League assistance on December, 1934, the negotiations have served to permit uninterrupted preparation for the war by Italy, and to deter defensive preparation by Ethiopia. The League has been utilized above all to serve the ends of British imperialism. Behind its cover, the agents of Great Britain, France and Italy have haggled over the price in terms of treaties, guarantees, protection, and territories, which each was willing to pay to preserve its own interests. The threat of League sanctions has been made not to save Ethiopia—which the League report itself offered to sacrifice—but to safeguard British colonial possessions and lines of communication, and to try to close the opening for Germany in Central Europe. The League of Nations is the agency, not of peace, but of imperialist aggression.

The struggle against imperialist war demands the unremitting exposure of the role of the League of Nations.

4. No less than the European powers is U. S. imperialism bound by the iron chain of cause and effect to the events in Africa and to the new world conflict which they herald. The sentimental dream of U. S. isolation, Roosevelt's promises that the U. S. will remain "free and untangled," have no more force than the unctuous phrases of Wilson in 1916. The U. S. will, on the contrary, play the dominant and decisive role in the new imperialist struggle. Behind its pacifist covering, the Roosevelt government is pouring more funds into its war machine than any other nation in the world. Both navy and army are constructed on a purely offensive strategic basis. The U. S. bourgeoisie, waiting and preparing, expects to intervene in the later stages of the world struggle, when the other powers are mutually exhausted, to achieve the world domination of U. S. finance-capital.

Against Stalinist Betrayal

5. The U.S.S.R. cannot avoid implication in the world conflict. The very life of the workers' state is threatened by the approach of war. A central task of the struggle against imperialist war is the defense of the U.S.S.R. But, in the last analysis, this defense can be based only upon the revolutionary advance of the international proletariat. Stalinist diplomacy, on the contrary, to an ever increasing degree, serves solely to disorient the international proletariat, break up the struggle against imperialist war, and thus undermine the real defense of the U.S.S.R. Basing itself not upon the international working class, but upon military pacts with bourgeois states, upon diplomatic deals, appeals to pacifist and liberal anti-war sentiment, and the maneuvers of the League, Soviet foreign policy promotes the most disastrous illusions in the minds of the workers, and acts in effect to further the interests of French and British imperialism.

The struggle against imperialist war requires the constant exposure of the foreign policy of Stalinism.

6. One of the most dangerous illusions fostered by the diplomacy of the Soviet Union, in company with demoralized liberals, reformists, and pacifists of all shades, is the notion that the world is now divided between "peace-loving democratic" nations and "war-loving fascist" nations. This notion is part of the preparation for support of the "peace-loving nations" in the coming war. Marxism rejects and dispels this illusion or any form of it. The idea that there are peace-loving as opposed to war-loving capitalist nations, like the idea that one or another nation is "guilty" in an imperialist war, is at best formalistic ethical sentimentalism, not political realism. The causes of war are to be found in the internal structure of world capitalism, operating within all nations. The national state of every capitalist nation, without exception, is the political instrument of the class enemy, the first and implacable enemy of that nation's proletariat. The revolutionary party can make no distinction between "good" and "bad" capitalist states. It is the enemy of every capitalist state, to the death.

7. At the outbreak of the last imperialist war, the Second International revealed its internal degeneration by betraying the working class to the class enemy, by espousing the cause of national defense and patriotism, by a truce with the bourgeoisie in the interests of "national unity," by going over to social-patriotism and social-chauvinism. Already, before the outbreak of the new war, the leaders of the Socialist and Labour International have announced a repitition of the betrayal, are already preparing to turn over their following to the war-makers. In England, the British Labour Party, by calling for government applied sanctions and the closing of the Suez Canal, once again takes the position of national unity—that is, solidarity with the class enemy—before the war danger, and of fully developed social-patriotism. In France, the leaders of the S.F.I.O. have taken the same position—to defend the interests of the bourgeoisie against "Hitler aggression," and now to "implement the League Covenant" by government sanctions. In August, the Executive Committee of the Socialist and Labour International adopted a program of full-blooded social-patriotism.

The struggle against imperialist war means the struggle against the Second International.

Combat Social Patriotism

8. During the past year, the Communist International has passed from a policy which weakened and disoriented the revolutionary struggle against war to an active espousal of the policies of class truce and social-patriotism. By the Franco-Soviet Pact, the Stalin-Laval communique, the conduct of the Soviet Union in the League during the development of the Ethiopian crisis, and above all by the Seventh Congress of the C.I., the Communist International stands unmasked as the heir of social-democracy's betrayal on the issue of war, announcing itself as ready to do the hangman's job of turning over the proletariat of England, France and the U. S. to their national bourgeoisie in the coming war, in return for paper promises of protection for the borders of the Soviet Union. In England, the Communist party applauds the position of the Labour Party; in France, the Communist party supports enthusiastically the worst betrayals of Blum and Herriot; and throughout the world the Communist International prepares the sacrifice of the working class on the altar of imperialism.

The struggle against imperialist war means every where the relentless struggle against Stalinism.

9. Throughout the world the only organized forces conducting and advocating the revolutionary struggle against imperialist war are the parties and groupings of the Fourth Internationalists. The Workers Party of the U. S. carries on this struggle in the closest solidarity with its comrades in all countries.

Against the betrayers, the Workers Party rejects every form of social-patriotism and social-chauvinism; it rejects every conception of national unity and national defense; it rejects all ideas of truce with the bourgeois state, democratic or fascist; it exposes the role of the League of Nations as the pawn of the imperialist member states; it rejects the sentimental illusions of pacifists and petty bourgeois liberals; above all it directs its attacks against the enemy at home, against U. S. imperialism.

The Workers Party places no reliance on the "peaceful" intentions of bourgeois-democratic nations, nor upon spineless "united fronts" of liberals, ministers, bourgeois women's clubs and "anti-war" professionals.

Defend Ethiopian People

The Workers Party calls for the defense of the Ethiopian peoples against Italian aggression, for the defense of the U.S.S.R. for unremitting struggle against the coming imperialist war. But for this defense and this struggle, the Workers Party calls at the same time for the sole means by which they can be, in fact, conducted: for the independent and autonomous action of the working class. It is the international working class, especially the Italian working class, together with the oppressed colonial peoples, who are the true allies of the Ethiopian peoples—not "peace-loving" Britain, nor the League of Nations, nor Stalin-Laval, nor Roosevelt, nor their own Christian Emperor and semi-feudal chieftains. It is the independent sanctions of the working class, its own boycotts, strikes, defense funds, mass demonstrations that can aid the battles of the Ethiopian peoples, not the sanctions of finance-capital and its puppet states. And likewise for the defense of the U.S.S.R. and the struggle against the approaching world war, it is only the independent action of the working class together with its allies under its leadership which gives hope to the working and exploited masses—a struggle not in collaboration with the bourgeoisie through the

Bombs Rain On African Mud Hovels

The Ethiopian butchery begins with the corpses of hundreds of native men, women and children torn to pieces by bombs rained down on the helpless and poverty stricken hovels of Adiglat and Adowa. The great civilizing mission of the modern Caesar begins with his Italian son-in-law dropping T.N.T. from planes on the uncivilized natives to give them a first lesson in the amenities of capitalist culture. And the torn and broken bodies of the first victims in this senseless war, killed in cold blood without chance of reply, are the first lessons in civilization.

With machine guns, artillery, tanks, and airplanes the "courageous" Italian generals advance against a practically unarmed horde of natives swarming to the defense of those rights for which thousands of Chinese, thousands of Indians, of Mohammedans, of Boers, of Africans, have given up their lives in the last century—the right of national peoples to live outside the crushing yoke of British, French, Italian, and American imperialism.

The first reports indicate that the Ethiopians are retreating before the Italian advance, concentrating around the town of Adowa, scene of one of the only successful stands against an all-embracing imperialist civilization in the history of the last century, in 1898—to make another attempt to beat off the Italian Fascist vampire.

The outcome of the war does not depend upon the fortune of individual battles but upon the staying power of the Ethiopians. If they can keep the field, constantly harass the Italian army, retreat without engaging in hopeless battles, split the Italian army and fight it in pieces, they can exhaust not only the army, but more important the Italian nation and the Fascist regime, which embarked on this war, in the first place, as a last resort to bolster a tottering economy and an explosive political situation.

N.P.L.D. Aids Cuban Workers In Struggle against Terror Rule

A terrible picture of the terror waged against the Cuban masses by the American-controlled dictatorship, and an appeal to American trade unions for solidarity against their common oppressors, is contained in a letter just received by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense from the Committee Pro-Amnesty for Social and Political Prisoners, on which is represented every important political and trade union organization of Cuba, including the Havana and National Federations of Labor, the Communist party, the Bolshevik-Leninist party, and the National Revolutionary party of former President Grau San Martin.

In response to this letter, the N.P.L.D. has appointed a special Committee on Cuba, of which Anita Brenner, well-known writer on Latin-America, is chairman. A campaign to aid the struggle for amnesty has been launched.

The letter gives a graphic picture of the Cuban terror:

"After the strike last March, the entire police-system of the Government plunged into systematic persecution of all revolutionary parties and trades-unions. Not a single workers' headquarters was left open. Every labor party and trade union was outlawed. Arrests and sentences by emergency tribunals marked the conclusive blow of this bloody Thermidor. Thousands of workers, students and intellectuals were given sketchy trials, and monstrous sentences. The mere suspicion of having taken any part what-

Iron Workers Victorious in Minneapolis

74 Day Battle in Which Two Were Killed Comes to End

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The 74-day strike siege of the Minneapolis metal workers centering around the Flour City Ornamental Iron Works has come to a victorious conclusion. During this memorable battle the bosses and the Farmer-Labor city administration tried every single trick known to labor haters, everything from "conciliation" to the outright murder of union men. The union has stood firm through a barrage of paid advertisements in the yellow press, injunctions from the lackey courts, strikebreaker thugs and gunmen, police in armored cars, "impartial boards," red scares, etc.

Several weeks ago two workers were killed and many wounded when the Farmer-Labor mayor ordered his lawless police to attack the pickets, after many unsuccessful attempts to open the factory with scabs had been defeated by their vigilance. But this provocation, like all others, only reinforced the strikers' determination to win and enlisted the sympathy of the whole working class of Minneapolis.

Then Mayor Latimer tried another attack, setting up what became his Employer-Employee board, a pale attempt to mask reactionaries and labor fakers as impartial arbitrators.

Terms of Agreement

Cutting through all red tape the strikers negotiated with the real forces, the Citizens Alliance in the person Mac Aloon. The agreement concluded provides for the return of all strikers to their former positions; for wages close to the unions original demand varying from 45 to 67 cents per hour; for the forty hour week; time and a half for overtime, etc. The agreement may be reopened anytime during the next thirty days—men discharged before the strike for union activity are to bakers' union, Crescencio Freire, be reinstated. soever in the strike was punished by jail terms of years. Any accusation, proved or unproved, made by any police agent anxious to gain rewards and credits, was enough, before the Emergency Tribunal, to condemn the accused. In Santiago de Cuba young Jaime Greinstein (tried under the name of Angelo Terry) was condemned, with no concrete proofs against him, and ordered shot. This was done in order to terrorize and silence the protests of a people not satisfied to be the eternal sacrificial lamb. The simplest, most rudimentary civil rights—free speech, free assembly, and so on—were destroyed with machine guns, machetes, and inquisitorial trial-and-sentence methods.

Savage Persecutions
These methods are functioning still. The Reaction follows an ascending curve of refinement in the savagery of its persecution. Recently our comrade Georgina Gutierrez, member of a workers' party, died in prison after weeks of agony. She died a victim of the sentence imposed on her by an Emergency Tribunal, with no concrete proofs against her. Our brave militant Francisco Mateo Escalona was virtually murdered, dying from the beatings and tortures inflicted by the police. Comrade Naftali Pernas, of the Directory of the University, was savagely tortured after his arrest. Comrades Ramirez Cossio and Pablo Cano are ill in their cells, victims too of mistreatment and torture. A devoted leader of the

A CASE FOR A LABOR JURY

Against All Types of Gangsterism in the Working Class Movement; On the Murder of the Italian Stalinist Montanari

By L. TROTSKY

On August 9, according to a news item in L'Humanite, the Italian communist Montanari was murdered in the Metro Belleville. On August 12, L'Humanite printed an altogether monstrous, but, of course, in no way unusual explanation for the murder. The anonymous article appeared under the title, "Laval and the Fascists Swell the Provocations." This headline which is part of the official campaign against the Laval ministry and the Fascists was accompanied by a sub-head, "Montanari Murdered by a Trotskyist Provocateur." Fundamentally, the juxtaposition of these two headlines is quite characteristic of the article, the author, and the newspaper itself. But the text contains not only but innumerable assertions which are downright contradictory. "The murderer is Guido Beiso, the well-known Italian Trotskyist who has been carrying on provocative activities for a long time among the Italian emigres." What is implied by "provocative activities" in this connection? Has he been making speeches against social-patriotism or is he in the employ of Mussolini? We are kept uninformed on this score. Further on we are told that Montanari "had become the target for the hatred of the Trotskyist elements who had been expelled from the party, and who subsequently (that is, after their expulsion—L.T.) resorted to open and criminal provocative activities."

Jig-Sawing the Facts

The case becomes more and more involved. It seems that not only Guido Beiso, but an entire group of expelled Italian "Trotskyists" was engaged in "open (!) provocations." In the service of the Fascist police? Again no direct statement. But in order not to leave the reader in doubt as to the meaning of the word "provocation," the article adds that Beiso has been living "like a lord." Finally we discover that in Nice Beiso had been "exposed as a provocateur (by whom?) who was bound up (?) with the entire Fascist work of penetrating the anti-Fascist masses." This confused statement contains already a direct charge of a connection with the Fascists. Let us bear this in mind. From Nice, Beiso arrived in Paris and murdered Montanari. It is well known that the Fascists murder communists and particularly revolutionists. It is quite in the nature of things for a Fascist provocateur to pose as a "Trotskyist" or a "communist" or a "socialist." But we have been told beforehand that the murderer was a "well known Italian Trotskyist." Does this mean to say that he turned from a Trotskyist to a Fascist, i.e. changed his revolutionary position? Such cases are not unknown. But L'Humanite does not raise this question. In harmony with the two headlines, it proceeds to develop the dual version: simultaneously both a "Trotskyist" and a Fascist. This amalgam is the pivot point for the entire indictment.

Further down we read not without surprise, "His explanation that he wanted to avenge himself for unjust charges is only a screen intended to hide the truth." We are not clearly and expressly informed as to what this "truth" is. Instead we shortly and incidentally discover that the murderer felt himself to be maliciously slandered, had provoked, and in revenge used the revolver. At any rate that is the murderer's own version. Let us keep this in mind as well.

The anonymous article proceeds to state further that the Italian C. P. had long since issued a warning to be on guard against the "dubious actions of this individual." Why dubious? Only dubious? Hadn't we been just told that Beiso was "exposed" as a Fascist provocateur in Nice? Exposed! The work of a provocateur has never yet been assumed to be dubious. A provocateur is a mercenary scoundrel, nothing more. If one maintains that another's activities are dubious, then it means that one has only suspicions but no proof. In such cases, genuine revolutionary organizations gather the necessary evidence before proceeding with open indictments. That has been the revolutionary tradition from time immemorial. And yet from the words of L'Humanite itself we have to draw the conclusion that Beiso was not exposed as a provocateur, but only suspected of being one (by whom? for what? when?), and that besides he himself angrily objected to these charges. And on top of this we are also told that "Beiso decided to come to Paris where he did not conceal his murderous intentions." At this point we become entirely perplexed. Had Beiso really been in the employ of the Fascists, had he "lived like a lord," had he really been exposed as a provocateur and arrived in Paris in order to perpetrate a Fascist murder how could he have failed to hide his murderous intentions? Here the version provided by L'Humanite contains a fresh and a patent absurdity. The author is unable to present his own version consistently.

As Clear As the Kirov Case

As the anonymous article proceeds it becomes more and more entangled. We read that the "provocateur" was never a member of the C. P. (yet we had just been told that he belonged to a group of expelled Trotskyists—L.T.), this agent of Fascism among the Italian emigres naturally found sympathy and shelter among the Trotskyist groups. . . . And in this manner we get a new version: he was not a "well known Italian Trotskyist," as was originally stated, but he became a Fascist provocateur after his expulsion from the party; so he was a Fascist provocateur, never a member of the party, who "naturally" (of course! of course!) found sympathy among the Trotskyists. And to leave no further doubt as to the source of the information nor as to its purpose the anonymous author appends to this the following "it was almost (!) in the same way that our comrade Kirov was murdered." Almost! But Kirov was indeed murdered by a party member as was established by the official documents, no one had placed the blame on Fascist provocation.

After several more new zigzags, the article concludes with an utterly amazing political moral: "The French workers made more cautious and wiser by the lessons of Austria and Spain, will not be led into this criminal trap." A remarkable revelation! The defensive uprising of Austria and Spain which even the social-patriotic and pro-coalition Congress of the Communist International was compelled to recognize as heroic actions on the part of the proletariat—these in the judgment of L'Humanite were in reality the products of the activities of Fascist provocateurs, the very same ones who had killed Kirov in Leningrad and Montanari in Paris. This abysmally profound moral of the Marxists from L'Humanite is obviously especially intended for the workers of Toulon and Brest.

The Diary of a Lunatic

The reader will agree with us if we say that this article resembles a page from the diary of a lunatic. Only, there is method in this madness, and it has not yet said its last word. So let us pursue the further developments of this case. The Italian Bolshevik-Leninists against whom the anonymous author had leveled his anonymous charges, declared on August 14, through comrade Jean Rous, a leading member of the French Socialist party, that "Beiso was never a member of our organization, nor did we have any sort of relations with him, and we never even heard his name before." Isn't that clear enough? On August 15, L'Humanite which had sung a political denunciation full of lies, finds itself compelled to state that "We are taking under consideration the declaration of the Italian Trotskyist group." But L'Humanite would have remained true neither to itself nor to its lord and master had it simply bit its tongue and kept quiet. No. This rag immediately adds that it has in its possession certain letters of the murderer which clearly indicate that Beiso "was imbued with the counter-revolutionary Trotskyist ideology." On the heels of all they had said previously, this rings a trifle over-strained. "Ideology"! We are well aware what can be done with this subtle substance in the chemical laboratory of Messrs Duclos and Co.

After several new and this time entirely amorphous and elusive insinuations, in which impulsive mixed with malice, L'Humanite concludes, "Naturally, the tie up between the murderer and the Trotskyists (who have just categorically denied it—L.T.) does not exclude an understanding between Beiso and the Fascist provocation. It all lies together." "Naturally"! But why do these bold cowards now say that "it does not exclude" being excluded? On August 12 they did indeed proclaim that Beiso, this "well known Trotskyist," had been exposed as a Fascist provocateur, who "lived like a lord," obviously on Mussolini's gold. Now it appears only that the large and nice ears of L'Humanite are able to distinguish notes of a Trotskyist ideology (ideology!) in the letters of the murderer, which circumstance "does not exclude" (that is all: does not exclude) the tie up between Beiso and the Fascists. "It all lies together" . . . with stitches of white thread.

New Criminals Found

Finally, on August 18, L'Humanite published a proclamation of the Central Committee of the Italian C. P.: Montanari was the victim of a "murder which the agents of the Fascist reaction had prepared for their counter-revolutionary mission in the circles of the Trotskyist and Bordighist emigre groups." No more, no less! This information is all the more interesting because in the Bordighists appear on the scene for the first time, a group which is neither ideologically nor organizationally connected with the so-called "Trotskyists," but whom we have not the slightest doubt about it,—had as little to do with the murder as the Bolshevik-Leninists. The Bordighists are dragged in so as only to widen the radius of the calumny: the Italian Stalinists have to reap a little additional profit on their own account. But what is most remarkable about the communication of the Italian C. P. is that it does not at all mention in any way Beiso's connection with the Fascists. No, the matter is much more involved, or, if you will, much simpler: the Trotskyists and the Bordighists are "in general" the agents of Fascist reaction and Beiso prepared himself for his mission in these "circles," i.e. within both these circles which are fighting one another. Now, at last, we can grasp the meaning of the words, "It was almost in the same way that our comrade Kirov was murdered." That is to say: it was almost in the same way that scores of people were indicted in the Kirov assassination who were in no way implicated in the murder.

Out of this entire snarl of interlinking calumnies and insinuations that crumble into dust, one thing stands out each time, namely that Guido Beiso came into some sort of a sharp conflict with the organization of the Italian C. P., or some of its members. If one were to leave aside the all-embracing and therefore in no way illuminating "ideology," then any normal thinking individual would ask the question: What was it that really drove Beiso to commit murder? If we do not proceed from the assumption that he was mentally unbalanced (there is no evidence for this as yet), we can only arrive at the conclusion that he must have been subjected to an extraordinary painful personal experience which he found insufferable, which finally threw him off balance and drove him to a senseless and criminal act. But who drove him through this insufferable experience? Was it the "Trotskyist" organization with whom Beiso had had no relation whatsoever, or the organization in whose name L'Humanite speaks? Thus, and only thus does the question stand. Doesn't there follow from this the supposition that the Italian Stalinists accuse Beiso whom they despise, of provocation without any real evidence, perhaps without any evidence at all, i.e. utilize those poisonous weapons which serve these people as logical arguments for the most part? As is evident from L'Humanite most violently against the accusations, and threatened the authors with death. No provocateur who had undertaken the murder of a revolutionist would act that way: but an unknown and a headstrong emigre could act in this manner, finding no other means of defense against the slander campaign. By these hypothetical considerations (and it is only a question of hypothesis) we do not mean to cast the slightest shadow on the murdered Montanari. It is entirely possible that he fell an accidental victim, or—if he did participate in bounding the alleged "provocateur"—he did so in good faith because he trusted his party and its thoroughly demoralized leadership. But Montanari's personality does not solve the question of Beiso's motives.

Let the Workers Judge!

Scoundrels will say that we advocate or justify murder as a method for solving conflicts within revolutionary circles. But we are not writing for scoundrels. The Montanari-Beiso case is important precisely because a conflict on the political plane has led to a supremely senseless act of murder to an emigre by another. In this there lies an ominously serious warning, and it is necessary to grasp its significance in time!

The matter is now in the hands of the bourgeois law courts. The official investigation is obviously not intended to cast light on the bloody tragedy from the standpoint of revolutionary morals of the proletariat. The prosecution will probably try only to compromise the proletarian emigres and the revolutionary organizations in particular. But the agents of the Comintern will also try to exploit the trial for every vile purpose, as they are obliged to do. The duty of workers' organizations, without any regard for political banners lies in one thing: in shedding the greatest light possible on this case, and thereby, insofar as it is possible, to prevent the repetition of gunplay in revolutionary circles.

In our opinion the labor organizations must establish, without any further delay, an authoritative and non-partisan Committee which would go over the entire material, including Beiso's letters mentioned in L'Humanite, to examine all the witnesses and representatives of the parties and groups who are concerned or interested in the case, so that the political, moral and personal circumstances in the case be clearly established. This is necessary not only in memory of Montanari, not only to reveal Beiso's real motives but also to purge the atmosphere of all working class organizations of treachery, calumny, hoodlums and gun play. Naturally the interests of the case would be best served if the representatives of L'Humanite and of the Central Committee of the Italian C. P. were to take part in this Committee. But we may safely predict that they will most certainly refuse: these politicians stand only to lose from an impartial investigation, and much more than would appear on the surface. But the investigation ought not to be wrecked by their refusal to participate. Every honest participant in the labor movement is deeply interested in seeing to it that this abcess is opened which can otherwise develop into gangrene. The tragic case of Montanari-Beiso must be brought before a labor jury.

nine factories in Minneapolis. While the settlement leaves a good deal to be desired it provides a firm basis for further consolidation of the union, and for future gains on the basis of a strong and militant organization. The present strike committee continues in office until a solid shop committee organization be set up in every factory. Considering the overwhelming forces mobilized against them the strikers have won a notable victory.

was arrested during the March strike and murdered by the police. His body was discovered with thirty bullets in it and the reactionary press called it a suicide. In the Guanabacoa jail there are more than twenty women imprisoned for social and political "crimes."

"Torture goes on systematically in all the jails of Cuba. Among the methods there is, for example, the favorite of Caravco, the Supervisor of the city of Camaguey. This petty official is very proud of his invention, which he calls 'tortoise-fishing.' The prisoner is thrown into a tank containing two tortoises, and ordered to bring up one of them, specially the male, or female. As soon as his head shows above the water he is beaten down again, and is not pulled out until he is dead or near it."

"In Oriente, Lieutenant Pino likes to start off by shaving the prisoners' heads, and then tarring their backs. After this 'preparation' a large quantity of palm-crist oil is poured down their throats. The Machadistas parties, and the bourgeois press, support the official policy of brutal repression with silence."

Mistreatment of Prisoners

"In the Isle of Pines the prisoners, both in the jails and in the Presidio Nacional, are living under the most frightful conditions. They are jammed into narrow galleries, lacking the simplest hygienic conveniences. Their rations are messes made most frequently of decayed food. Any protest about it is punished by hard labor on the rock-pile. This happened at the Castillo del Principe a short time ago to a large number of political prisoners, among them several widely known intellectuals. In the Presidio at the Isle of Pines the political prisoners, intellectuals included, are obliged to work in the marble quarries and in the stinking mosquito-ridden La Yana swamp."

"Aware of the intolerable situation, a number of trades unions and labor organizations joined in July to struggle actively for the freedom of the social and political victims of the Terror. The National Committee Pro-Amnesty for Social and Political Prisoners was built for that purpose. Its object is, therefore, concrete enough. It does not fight under the banner of any one party or organization; but is guided by the united effort of the thirty-one workers' groups that came together to form it."

Aims of Pro-Amnesty Committee
"This Committee struggles furthermore, to insure the safe return to Cuba, of political exiles—again we do not extend our protection to Machado butchers—and against the expulsion of foreigners for political or social reasons. This is part of our daily task, for we believe that each of our three objectives: For the freedom of social and political prisoners; for the return of the exiles; against the expulsion of foreigners, are closely connected parts of the same urgent question of workers' defense."

"This is, broadly, the present situation. Nevertheless on the margin of it an apparent change of methods has occurred. The Government, preparing for the elections, has changed its tone. The attempt to create an apparent 'legal' basis to guarantee its electoral aims, it has proclaimed a Constitution and 're-established' civil rights, which of course, has been no obstacle to the arbitrary arrest of three of our comrades, members of this Committee, carried out during a lecture-given with a permit of the Secretariat of the Interior—in the Barrio de Luyano. The government has furthermore talked of forthcoming amnesty for the political prisoners. These maneuvers always arouse certain democratic illusions among some of our people. It is not our object to analyze here the perspectives and the true position of the government, nor can we in one word describe its aims with regard to the coming elections. We have answered its talk with the organization of the Committee Pro-Amnesty. We have stated that the problem can be solved only through the immediate and COMPLETE amnesty of all social and political prisoners, excepting the Machadistas. But nevertheless there are some things we want to emphasize."

Demand Complete Amnesty

"The Mendieta government is preparing to extend a certain kind of amnesty to some of the prisoners, but it will leave out those who fall under the so-called 'Gangsterism Law.' This is so defined as to keep under arrest, hundreds of revolutionary militants and labor leaders. The governmental formula we shall oppose with all our might, for our object is decisively: Not an inch less than complete amnesty."

"Engaged in this tremendous task, we can only repeat the words that began this letter-report. We hope from you your best efforts to wards popularizing these matters among all the political and trades union organizations of your country, as well as a campaign to bring out responsibilities and realities by crusading with letters, telegrams, and all other possible methods. Our agitational work in this sense is being carried out on a larger and larger scale. We assume you will take part in this movement, with all your powers."

Our best greetings,
The National Committee

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

THE VOTING IN MEMEL . . .

Hitler is taking full advantage of the Italian imperialist threat against Ethiopia as well as the "moral" weapon made to order for rabid nationalism by the actions of the Lithuanian government. It is not hard to understand that the Lithuanian bourgeoisie, seizing Memel by force in a desperate effort to break through the stranglehold of the Soviet Union on its national economy, would hardly scruple to maintain that conquest by supplanting the Germans opposed to the seizure. Since the balloting for the Memel Diet to take place on Sept. 20th will be interpreted, particularly by Hitler, as a form of plebiscite, the Lithuanian ruling class tried to prevent a "German" victory, or at least to minimize it, by means of a new electoral law passed August 27th. The purpose of the law was to disenfranchise the pro-German majority which prevented "cooperation" between the Memel Diet and the government officials appointed by Lithuania. The Nazis have encouraged Germans to become Lithuanian citizens in order to vote Nazi, with the express promise that they would recover their German nationality without difficulty once Memel had been recaptured by Hitler. Hence the new law denies the right to vote to those naturalized Lithuanian citizens who hold a promise from a foreign nation that their original citizenship may be reassumed at a later time. The vote is also denied to members of organizations which have been condemned for working against Lithuanian independence or which call for the alienation of a part of the Lithuanian state. All of which is quite obviously aimed at the "treasonable" Nazi elements

THREAT OF WAR . . .

Hitler, with that twisted sense of justice typical of reactionary capitalist defenders, at the same time that he disenfranchises the Jews violates the conditions laid down by the League of Nations for the Saarland, raises a great outcry against the Lithuanian oppressors. The Nazis have massed troops at the Lithuanian border to take advantage of any eventuality. Should a world war break out immediately, the German army will have an initial objective in the taking of Memel. Even without the outbreak of war elsewhere, the threat of war exists in this struggle over national boundaries. For the workers the struggle over national boundaries, even where a small state like Lithuania is involved, can be viewed only as part of the general clash of different imperialisms. Each ruling class is trying to extend its sphere of exploitation of the worked class. The solution for the proletariat lies not in defending the national boundaries of the capitalist state, which can only mean support of the national bourgeoisie, but the revolutionary overthrow of the Lithuanian, by the workers and the setting up of a proletarian state. Extension of the rule of the work-nation would mean the wiping out of national boundaries, themselves one of the symbols of class rule. The problem of the Memel workers will not be solved by aiding Hitler to regain Memel for Germany but can only be solved by the proletarian revolution striving to bring about the Soviet United States of Europe.

By A. WEAVER

M. Z., NEW YORK—

Question: Does not the recent statement by the Soviet government that the Roosevelt-Litvinov pact did not refer to the Comintern refute the contentions of the "Trotskyists" that Litvinov had signed away the rights of the C. I. in the Soviet Union in return for recognition of that country by the United States?

Answer: The fact of the matter is that the Soviet government did not break the pledge given by Litvinov to Roosevelt. It is true that a "congress" was held in Moscow which was attended by leaders of the American C. P., but there was no meeting in that city of individuals, or groups of individuals, who had as their aim the overthrow of, or the preparation for the overthrow of, American capitalism.

The Seventh Congress of the C.I. came out for defending the "democratic remnants" of capitalism and for harnessing the workers to the imperialist aims of the capitalists of those countries which are the temporary ally of the Soviet Union. Stripped of its protective coloring, therefore, the Seventh Congress, in the final analysis, came out, not to overthrow capitalism, but for perpetuating capitalist slavery outside the Soviet Union.

The Stalinists, however, require a formula for their deeds; and because the Soviet Union is a Workers' State, it is necessary that the formula for a class betrayal of the workers be a C.I. congress which has the form, if not the substance, of the Comintern of Lenin. When Litvinov signed the Roosevelt pact, he was quite ready, as the wording of the agreement shows, to give up this formula. At that time, however, he expected economic concessions, particularly credits, in return. The credits did not materialize. For reasons of imperialist and personal policy, however, Roosevelt-Hull still wanted the Stalinists to surrender the formula. Having received nothing in return, the Stalinists refused.

L. N., NEW BEDFORD—
Question: What is meant by the "antagonism between city and country?"

Answer: In general this term implies the antagonisms arising out of the technical, and flowing from this, the cultural backwardness of the rural as compared to the urban regions.

The basis for any well developed social division of labor is the division between the city and the country; the latter producing and exchanging raw materials, food, etc. In return for the manufactured products of the city. Economically, therefore, the antagonism is that between buyers and sellers and is reflected in the prices of commodities.

The technical development of agriculture is subject to natural obstacles which are not present in the factory. If the economic incentive had existed for the ruling classes, however, there would have been a tendency to overcome this handicap. Under capitalism, the tendency on the part of industry to outstrip agriculture in its development is accentuated by the necessity of paying ground rent to the landowner. A capitalist farmer, who rents land, will refrain from putting any sort of permanent improvements into it because eventually the extra profits thus made will go to the landlord who raises the rent as soon as the "earning power" of his land has been increased. Where agriculture is carried on under modes of production which are less advanced historically than capitalism, e.g., forms of chattel slavery or serfdom, it is self-evident why its technical development is outstripped by capitalist industry, even in the latter's infancy. In the final analysis, therefore, the relative technical backwardness of agriculture is due to social and not to natural causes.

In class society the more advanced exploits the backward. Under capitalism the advanced city exploits the country. This is accomplished through the disparity of prices resulting from the tendency towards an average rate of profit for all capitals; the products of the technically advanced industries selling above those of the backward industries selling below their values. Monopoly further increases this price disparity.

The antagonism could be removed only by raising the technical and correspondingly the cultural level of the countryside. Under capitalism this could have been partly accomplished through the nationalization of the land (theoretically possible under capitalism) so that ground rent, and with it the obstacle to the technical advancement of agriculture, would have been removed. Such nationalization would thus have been a progressive step. Capitalism, however, has proceeded too far into its decay stage to be capable of such a step, and it remains the task of the proletarian revolution to complete this unfinished work of the bourgeois revolution.

Statement of the W.P. on War

national state, but in ever sharper attack against the bourgeoisie and the national state.

The struggle against war is not and cannot be conceived as an "independent" struggle, having a special status above class conflicts. It is an integral part of the revolutionary struggle for workers' power. The struggle against imperialist war means the day by day building of working-class strength, means—no suspension of the class conflict until the war crisis passes—but the intensification of class conflict and the preparation to turn the imperialist war into a civil war for the overthrow of the bourgeois state and the victory of the workers.

More clearly than any other phase of revolutionary activity does the struggle against war attest the international character of the revolutionary movement. It is an international struggle and must be conducted in terms of an international strategy, through an integrated international organization. Thus the struggle against war poses, in the most intense form, the central task of the present period: the building of the Fourth International, the dynamic generator to drive forward the revolutionary advance of the working class. Threatening as is the oncoming of the new war, relatively weak numerically as are the forces now ranged against it, there is no reason to despair. Out of the last world war came the first great step of the world revolution. Yet, in 1914, the internationalists were an organized force in only one nation, and the betrayal of social-democracy came to the great mass of the workers as a shock that was unexpected and not prepared for. Today, organized groups of revolutionary internationalists exist in nearly every nation, and are actively forging the parties of the Fourth International; today the Second and Third Internationals have announced their betrayal before our eyes, and we will thus not be trapped by surprise; and today we have the rich experience and lessons of the past generation to draw from.

The struggle against imperialist war is the struggle for socialism; the struggle for socialism is the struggle for the Fourth International, for the world revolution.

Support French Bolshevik-Leninists

FRANCE today is the most important battle ground of the classes, the key to the fate of Europe and perhaps of the world. Should Fascism add this country to its list of conquests it will hurl the proletarian cause back for decades and mortally injure the existence of the Soviet Union. On the other hand, the signal of the French working class revolution would arouse the oppressed of Germany, Austria, Spain and Italy and forever destroy the fabric of Versailles and Hitler's vision of Mittel-Europa. At the same time it would ensure the existence of the Soviet Union by extending its base.

The Bolshevik-Leninists constitute the spearhead of the revolutionary forces in France today (of active resistance to Fascism and the revolutionary assault on capitalism). They have raised in the French labor movement the demands for workers' militia, the general strike, workers' and peasants' government, socialization and workers' control. They have challenged and are challenging the social patriotism of the People's Front and its agents, the reformist bureaucracies of the Communist and Socialist parties. These bureaucracies are making the sharpest attack upon the Bolshevik-Leninists who advocate a complete break with the bourgeoisie, a slogan of revolutionary defeatism as against truce with the bourgeoisie in the imperialist war, the need for the struggle for power as the only means to defeat Fascism as against the betraying policy of unity with the bourgeoisie to uphold bourgeois democracy and capitalism. The Workers Party is pledged to give its fullest support to the French Bolshevik-Leninists in this struggle.

Consequently the Workers Party is responding immediately to the appeal of our French comrades for financial support for La Verite, organ of the Bolshevik-Leninists and their most important single weapon in the struggle in which they are now engaged. Additional funds to maintain La Verite and to enable it to greatly increase its circulation are particularly necessary according to an appeal just received from our French comrades "because the formation of the new revolutionary party in France has now become an immediate task."

We call upon all our branches and members to make the utmost sacrifices in order that a preliminary installment of our contribution may be sent to France immediately. Collection lists are being sent to the branches and should be widely circulated among the workers and all our sympathizers. We do not hesitate also to call upon those who are not members of the party but who realize that in the present tense international situation nothing is more important than the defeat of social patriotism in France, to forward their contributions in response to the appeal from La Verite. For convenience in transmission remittances should be made out in the name of A. J. Muste and sent to 55 E. 11th St., New York. Please designate clearly the purpose for which the contribution is sent.

For prompt and enthusiastic support of our French comrades!

For the building of the Fourth International!

What the Miners Did Not Get

LAST week the NEW MILITANT prophesied that the bituminous coal strike called by John L. Lewis would soon be over, that it was a shadow-boxing act to give the operators a chance to get rid of some of their surplus coal, Lewis to bluster and show that he was "not to be trifled with" and Roosevelt-McGrady to put on their act and save the country once more from "bitter industrial strife." Our prophecy and analysis were quickly and completely vindicated for the paper was hardly off the press before the settlement was announced.

Despite the magnificent demonstration of solidarity by 400,000 miners who came out 100 percent in the union fields and nearly as solidly, it would appear, in the partly unionized fields of Tennessee, Virginia and Kentucky, despite the prompt settlement on the basis of a union contract in most of the fields and the concessions won, the strike was not a real victory for the miners. On Lewis's part it represents a fresh betrayal of the workers.

1. THE MINERS FAILED TO GET THE SIX HOUR DAY AND FIVE DAY WEEK, FAILED, IN FACT, TO GET ANY REDUCTION IN HOURS. Almost before the negotiations began Lewis gave up this demand. He kept the miners from striking for the 30-hour week. But a reduction in hours represented the one really important gain which they might have won. Without that, further reductions in the working force are bound to come, an increase in unemployment, and with it wage-slashing and incalculable misery at the first let-down in the industry.

Had the miners led a real fight for the 30-hour week, which the A. F. of L. has put forth as the major plank in its platform against unemployment, other workers would have followed. At once reality and vigor would have been given to the whole 30 hour week movement. But this the employers, once again piling up profits during a temporary and spotty upturn in business, did not want. The Roosevelt administration did not want it, being bent upon giving the employers a "breathing spell." Once again the A. F. of L. bureaucrats yielded to these interests, surrendered before the battle had begun, betrayed the interests of the workers. The miners' strike thus signals the end of the movement to reduce hours for the time being at least. In many industries employers are already increasing them. Soon this will happen in other fields as well.

2. THE MINERS DID NOT WIN ANY REAL INCREASE IN WAGES. It is true that there is a nominal increase of 50 cents a day for day workers providing a $5.50 basic rate in the Appalachian area. A similar nominal increase of about 10 percent was given in other rates. But this will not even cover the increase in the cost of living since the last contract was made. The miners have thus barely held their own. The operators, especially the bigger ones, can go on unmolested, making profits out of the sweat of the miners while the mines are running and throwing them on the scrap-heap whenever it suits them to shut the mines down.

3. THE CHANCE TO FORCE THE OPERATORS IN THE NON-UNIONIZED FIELDS OF TENNESSEE, VIRGINIA AND KENTUCKY TO SIGN A UNION CONTRACT AND THUS TO EFFECT A NATION-WIDE 100 PERCENT ORGANIZATION OF THE BITUMINOUS MINERS, LEWIS SURRENDERED WITHOUT PUTTING UP EVEN THE SEMBLANCE OF A FIGHT. This was done in spite of the fact that the union today is so strong and the operators themselves are so averse to a real battle that the union scale may be paid in these fields even if no contract is signed. Had Lewis delivered an ultimatum: Recognize the right of the miners to bargain collectively, sign a union contract in every field, or we will strike until hell freezes over, it is well nigh inconceivable that the operators would have held out. As it is, the threat to the union and to the miners' standard of living involved in the existence of even a relatively small unorganized sector remains, and the unorganized miners can point to another instance of failure on the part of Lewis to back them up effectively in their struggle against the brutality and terrorism of the Bourbons of the mining industry. No, this is not a victory for the miners but for the labor fakers, the operators and the Roosevelt administration.

Once again we say to the miners: Awake! Build a single united miners' union and a left-wing to make that union clean, militant, progressive. Once again we say to the progressives throughout the trade union movement: Expose the fake progressivism and "industrial unionism" of Lewis and Company! Build the left-wing in every union and every section of the country in order that the native militancy and growing solidarity of the American workers may not be prostituted as it was in the recent miners' strike, but may be organized and directed to victory!

good fellows of socialism cheer the sentiments of pacifism in their ranks and then vote to send their workers off to the slaughter in the defense of British robber imperialism. Incredible hypocrisy, worse than capitalist, socialist hypocrisy. The moldy Second International rises out of its grave to grasp another million mass of workers and carry them down into blood and mire... a vampire international.

And the Third International? Its efforts are just as energetic in the service of the British bourgeoisie—but more ludicrous, if there can be anything ludicrous in this monster betrayal.

We take the line from the Daily Worker question box for October 2: "The aim of the communists in the present situation in Africa is to preserve peace [...] the communists urge the working class parties and organizations to FORCE their capitalist governments to act collectively through the League against Italy, even to the point of applying sanctions, closing the Suez Canal, etc. [Etc!] In that little etc. is contained the word war... no more than an etc. to the degenerate of Stalinism [...] the capitalist governments are not anxious to use sanctions. The British government has repeatedly offered to carve up Ethiopia with Mussolini... but the pressure of the English workers has driven the English government to the point where they may apply sanctions. ... [!!!]"

The Stalinists are not even willing to vouchsafe Lansbury a "jolly good fellow" before they order the workers out to the butcher. "The pressure of the English workers has driven the British government to the point where it may" defend its colonial loot against Italy's infringements by sanctions, etc! The degenerate of Stalinism boast that they are forcing the British government into imperialist war!

Before the last war the Second International at least kept up appearances and spoke against war until the very last moment. But in these times the two Internationals don't wait for war to betray the workers, they urge the capitalists on. They can't wait for the debacle, they can't wait to send their workers out to die, they can't wait to revel in the blood of millions of "women and children of another race" and workers of all races.

STRUGGLERAGES ON WEST COAST

Cal. State Fed Union Militant Murdered Showdown Is Is Dominated In L.A. Vigilante Terror Close on Cal. by Fakerdom Waterfront

By EARL LANE

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 23.—The cause of progressive unionism suffered a number of severe defeats at the thirty-sixth annual convention of the California State Federation of Labor held at San Diego last week.

Despite a bitter fight on the part of militants to oust them, two arch foes of progressive unionism, Edwin D. Vandeleur and Paul Scharrenberg, were re-elected to the offices of president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

Vandeleur was re-elected without opposition, the progressives deciding to concentrate their fire on Scharrenberg. The vote for the office of secretary-treasurer was: Scharrenberg 54,178, A. C. Rodgers 17,605.

In the Ninth (San Francisco) District, where four vice-presidents were elected, three incumbents were re-elected and Harry Bridges was defeated for the seat vacated by B. F. Dodge.

A "red hunt" of major proportions that will have as its goal the ousting of every militant from the labor movement of the state, is forecast by the adoption of a resolution asking local unions to expel Communists and members of allied organizations from their membership. That this move is aimed not only at members of radical parties but at all militants is made clear by the phrase, "members of allied organizations." Thus the way is made clear to brand all militants as allies of Communism.

The reactionary nature of the convention is further evidenced by the rejection of the idea of political action by labor and the adoption of a resolution endorsing collective bargaining as the sole means of obtaining economic security.

Resolutions "commending the efforts of President Roosevelt on behalf of the workers of the nation," demanding the freedom of Tom Mooney, repeal of the Criminal Syndicalism law, and condemning vigilante terror were adopted.

Investigation of the scab herding activities of Capt. William ("Red") Hynes, head of the infamous "red squad" of the Los Angeles police department was demanded in a resolution recently adopted by the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. The resolution, submitted to the mayor, chief of police, board of public commissioners, and the city council, cited the payment of $7,393.60 by the Los Angeles Railway for Hynes' strike-breaking services during the street car strike last fall.

The resolution reads as follows: "It is the expressed opinion of this organization (Pacific Electric Lodge No. 912, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen) that public servants, either elected or appointed, are bound to serve the entire public and the action of a public official in lowering the dignity of his office by resorting to the activity of herding scabs is repugnant to every sense of decency of his employer, the general public."

The resolution further demanded an investigation of the activities of the "red squad" and demanded that the report be made public.

Every union in the Los Angeles area should pass similar resolutions and continue the fight until this scourge of labor is driven from the city.

Five members of Furniture Workers local No. 1561 were so severely beaten that they had to be taken to the hospital when strikebreakers attacked a picket line at the plant of the Morris Furniture Co. last Thursday evening.

The strike at the Morris plant has been in progress since April 20th, and has been characterized by the grim determination of the workers to stay out until better conditions have been won.

Determined to initiate a reign of terror in order to break the spirit of the strikers, a sudden attack was launched on the picket line by a gang of scabs armed with clubs, monkey wrenches, and screw drivers, as the day and night shifts were changing places. In addition to the men taken to the hospital over two dozen others were injured. Police rushed to the scene of the battle in several cars and took the most seriously injured men to the hospital. Of course none of the strikebreaking thugs who perpetrated the vicious attack were arrested.

Having become a power in the labor movement through its great mass trial of mayor Scab Latimer, the Provisional N.P.L.D. Committee of Minneapolis has now been given a charter. Among those on the National Executive of the N.P.L.D. for the charter are Henry Schultz, secretary of the State Employees Assn.; Elmer Huset of the Farmer-Labor Veterans Assn.; Farrell Dobbs, secretary of Local 574; Mrs. Carlson of the F.L. Woman's Auxiliary.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—The continually mounting wave of California vigilante terror claimed another victim on September 4, when Arthur G. Ross, member of the I.W.W. and the International Longshoremen's Association and for fifteen years an outstanding militant fighter in the labor movement of Southern California died as the result of a beating received at the hands of Edgar Rueb, a fellow union member who had fought side by side with him during the maritime strike last summer.

The death of Ross is but one incident in the attack that the boss class has launched upon the progressive forces in the labor movement of California. Upon the conclusion of last summer's memorable marine strike the bosses determined to drive out of the maritime unions every militant worker who showed capacity for leadership, in order to strengthen the hands of their agents within the unions, "Pedro Pete" Peterson, Fredli, and Co. In the bitter warfare which ensued the bosses and their labor lieutenants of course had the co-operation of the "law enforcement" agencies. The police were always busy elsewhere while vigilante bands and Fredli's infamous "beef squad" terrorized and slugging militant workers, raiding meetings, and kidnapping and beating workers' attorneys. Fredli himself became a victim of the wave of terrorism that he had helped to launch, being killed by the police. His death has never been satisfactorily explained, but in all probability was the result of some private feud.

Sometime during the course of this bitter campaign against the militants Rueb deserted his former friends and became a tool of the dark forces that had as their ultimate goal the smashing of the maritime unions of the Pacific Coast. He conceived a bitter hatred for his former friend Ross, who was an outstanding progressive.

On Sunday, September 1, in front of the I.L.A. hall in San Pedro, he assaulted Ross, striking him twice and knocking him to the pavement. Fellow union members picked Ross up in an unconscious condition. After a cursory examination by the police he was turned out to wander the streets all night and half the next day in a semi-conscious condition. Later he was picked up by the police on a DRUNK CHARGE and thrown in the drunk tank. His fellow workers, having become alarmed at his absence, instituted a search which ended with their locating him in the jail. They offered to bail him out but the police would not accept bail and refused to allow them to see Ross. After a night spent lying on the stone floor of the drunk tank he was released to his wife and friends who rushed him to a hospital where he died on September 4, never having regained consciousness.

Rueb, placed under arrest, admitted having struck Ross, claiming that he was drunk and did not know what he was doing. He was held on suspicion of manslaughter. At the subsequent inquest the coroners jury ordered that he be held.

This case is more than the isolated death of a militant worker. It is part of the campaign of the boss class to wipe out the more advanced workers in the ranks of the unions and thus to strike terror into the hearts of the rank and file. It is hoped that by the use of these methods that the workers will be terrorized into submitting to the domination of their unions by the labor lieutenants of the bosses. Every class conscious worker must consider well what these attacks on the vanguard mean to him and his union.

Labor Defense Front

THE SACRAMENTO APPEAL

In response to a call from the International Labor Defense, the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense has been set up by the I.L.D., League for Industrial Democracy, Non-Partisan Labor Defense, General Defense Committee, National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, and League of Struggle for Negro Rights. Mary Fox of the I.L.D. has been elected secretary.

The committee announces several immediate activities to aid the drive for 2,000,000 signatures to petitions calling on the governor of Georgia to release Herndon from the 20-year chain-gang sentence imposed by an Atlanta Jim Crow court. The new committee, in addition to publishing and circulating its own petition forms bearing the names of its constituent bodies, will during the coming week publish a new 16-page pamphlet on this important labor case. Already 20,000 copies have been ordered by various organizations. It will sell at 2 cents per copy. Send orders to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, 22 East 17th St., N. Y. C.

The new committee is calling a New York City Action Conference October 19 at Imperial Hall, Harlem. Angelo Herndon will participate and the new pamphlet will be on sale.

Through the sale of this pamphlet and circulation of petitions, W. P. members will be able to continue their agitation for Herndon's freedom in an organized way. Rush your orders for pamphlets and petitions to the N.P.L.D.

PHILLY WORKERS FREE

Five members of the Philadelphia Retail Fruit Clerks Union of Philadelphia, held on charges rigged against them by the bosses' association during the recent strike, have been freed.

Since the last report in these columns, a defense committee was organized by the union, with Lou Roberts, union secretary, in charge. Attorney Frank Nowwe of the N.P.L.D. of New York aided in organizing the defense. On a visit to New York Roberts, aided by the N.P.L.D., secured financial aid for the defense from brother unions.

HARLAN MINERS

Another drive is being made for the pardon of the six U.M.W.A. members railroaded to prison for life in Harlan, Ky., on charges of murder growing out of the historic "Battle of Everts" between miners and deputies. A committee has been appointed by the N.P.L.D. to aid this defense: Adelaide Walker, who was a leading figure in the caravan of writers which went into Bloody Harlan four years ago and who was indicted for criminal syndicalism, is chairman. Funds to aid the Harlan miners should be sent to Herbert Mahler, General Defense Committee, 94 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

HEISLER IN BISMARCK

Francis Heisler, attorney of the Chicago N.P.L.D., is now in Bismarck, N. D., to argue the appeal of the Fargo strikers to the State Supreme Court.

Form Labor Party in Ohio

The Congress candidates as not committing them specifically to the endorsement of a Labor, or third party.

Local Socialists, emboldened by the favorable glances of the union officials, are running up a temperate in the campaign and are all heated up about their inclusion in "big-time politics." The Communist Party is going through some amusing contortions trying to squirm into the picture.

Although the Congress has put forth a platform containing a preamble full of vaguely radical phrases, no particular fear is being evinced by the reactionary elements in the city. It is pretty generally understood, and the leaders of the Congress are making no efforts to dispel this understanding, that the bark of this movement is out of all proportion to its bite. Commenting in an editorialized news story on the formation of the Congress, the Toledo News-Bee, Scripps-Howard sheet, stated: "While the preamble of the platform on which the candidates are campaigning leads off with a Socialist doctrine, it is likely that most of the candidates signed the platform as a matter of political expediency rather than a pledge of conversion to the doctrine of Socialism."

Clyde Kiker, free-lance politician, perennial office seeker and state secretary of the Ohio Federation of Teachers, is campaign manager for the Congress' slate. Kiker ran in the last congressional primaries for congressman on the Democratic Party ticket.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 30.—

The question of war or peace on the waterfronts of the Pacific coast will in all probability be decided within the next few days.

The battle over the question of whether or not the maritime unions will handle "hot cargo" is being fought out in San Francisco, with the I.L.A. bearing the brunt of the employers' attack. Because of the strength of the militants in this key port the bosses have chosen it as the battleground, feeling that if they are successful there, the fight in the other ports will be comparatively easy.

The dispute over the handling of hot cargo was placed in the hands of the labor relations board that was set up under the 1934 award. When this committee came to a deadlock last week, the matter was put into the hands of Federal arbitrator, M. C. Sloss. After a great show of considering the matter from all angles in order to be able to render an "impartial decision," that office boy of the bosses' government ruled that the longshoremen were breaking their agreement if they refused to handle hot cargo. The I.L.A., the union, immediately asked for a rehearing on the question. Sloss lost no time in denying this request.

On Sunday the bargemen's and warehousemen's unions lifted the ban on goods produced by the Santa Cruz Packing Co., and cargo transported by the River Lines, Inc., pending the outcome of negotiations with the employers and the labor relations board.

There the situation rests today, with the employers announcing through their spokesman, Thomas G. Plant, their determination to hire scab longshoremen to replace the union members refusing to scab. This morning it was announced that 1,440 longshoremen were on the blacklist and that 29 ships were tied up directly or indirectly because of the "hot cargo" dispute.

Ample proof that while they consider "impartial arbitration" an effective opiate with which to dull the fighting spirit of the workers, they do not intend to rely on it as their only weapon, but intend to launch a campaign of vigilante terrorism against the maritime workers if they consider it necessary, is contained in an article in a recent issue of the San Francisco "Shipping Register," organ of the waterfront employers.

Call for Vigilantes

Under a caption "Are All the Vigilantes Dead?" an editorial complained that maritime workers are "asking for abortive increases in wages."

"There are hundreds of thousands of red-blooded Americans here in San Francisco," the editorial declared. "What say we take a day off from our regular business and attend to the matter in a proper manner?"

Preparations were made for a vigorous campaign to secure the freedom of the victims of the Sacramento conspiracy at a conference held in Los Angeles September 25. As a result of this conference the Los Angeles section of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee was formed with the following organizations participating: the I.W.W., the Socialist Party, the Workers Party, Spartacus Youth League and the Young Peoples Socialist League. A steering committee consisting of the following members was elected: Chairman, Gardner Wells, Socialist Party; Secretary, Mark Knight, Workers Party; Treasurer, Claude Erwin, I.W.W.

An effort to draw every labor and liberal organization in the Los Angeles area into this fight for the rights of labor will be made. Each organization participating in the Los Angeles local of the N.S.A.C. has pledged itself to circulate collection lists and to widely circulate the pamphlet "Union Smashing in Sacramento." A mass meeting to bring this case to the attention of the public at large will be held in the near future.

Similar committees already exist in San Francisco and Oakland.

Rank and File Presses Bureaucracy Toward Showdown on Critical Problems of Labor Movement

The opening days of the Atlantic City convention of the American Federation of Labor reveal a tightening of the lines and a sharpening of the struggle between the bureaucrats and the various more or less progressive elements in the trade unions.

On the one hand, the forecast of the NEW MILITANT that a growth of progressive and militant sentiment would be shown is being borne out. The proponents of resolutions for industrial unionism claim support of powerful unions such as the U.M.W. of A. and the garment unions and assert, with a little too much optimism probably, that a clear-cut resolution on industrial unionism lacks only a few votes to carry. Gorman, the actual leader of the United Textile Workers, and other important figures are sponsoring Labor Party resolutions with considerable show of determination.

But it is in the aggressive mood of the conservatives that the clearest indication of the sharpening of the struggle within the Federation under the impact of the crisis is given. Last year the craft unionists were to some extent caught unaware by the crush of the new Federal unions in the basic industries demanding international charters with industry-wide jurisdiction. As a result provision for granting charters for the production workers in automobiles, etc., though not on a complete industrial basis, was made. During the year the new unions constituted under this provision have proved somewhat contemptuous of the A. F. of L. potentes and have voiced vigorous dissatisfaction with their limited charters. The craft unionists are genuinely alarmed and have taken the offensive against the industrialists. Under the lead of John P. Frey and the entire Metal Trades Department, they not only refuse to amalgamate or give up any of their members, but demand that many members in the new unions be turned over to the craft groups.

The "Anti-Red" Resolution In addition to this offensive on an issue of the structure of unionism, an even more vigorous offensive has been launched on the basic issue of the philosophy of the A. F. of L. The most serious and far-reaching proposal for driving "communists" out of the unions that has ever been made is now being advanced. If those who are back of this move triumph there will be a fight upon all insurgent elements which will be far more vicious than that of the war or post-war period.

It is proposed to amend the constitution of the A. F. of L. to provide that "No organization offered or controlled by Communists or any person espousing communism or advocating the violent overthrow of our institutions, and no organization or person that has succeeded from or has been suspended or expelled by the A. F. of L. or by any national or international organization connected with the federation shall, while under such relationship or under such penalty, be allowed representation or recognition in this federation, or in any central body, State Federation of Labor, national or international union connected with the A. F. of L., under the penalty of the suspension of the body violating this section."

Thus the basis is laid not only for founding a progressive out of any given union but barring him also from activity in any other. William Green openly proclaimed that the A. F. of L. was prepared to make an alliance with the American Legion in this campaign against all forms of "un-American" radicalism, the Legion in turn pledging that it would not engage in any "anti-union" activity. Such an alliance, giving a reactionary trade unionism the quasi-military backing of the Legion in the struggle against any progressive and militant unionism, has obviously the most sinister possibilities.

It is too early to predict the specific decisions that will be taken by this convention. The decisive showdown between the contending forces

ISAACS SPEAKS FOR N.F.L.D.
Harold R. Isaacs, newspaper correspondent in China for the last five years, editor of "China Forum," and leader of many struggles for the defense of Chinese political prisoners, will be the speaker at the open membership meeting of the New York branch of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, Wednesday, October 16, 8 P.M., at the headquarters of Local 48, L.L.G.W.U., 231 East 4th Street.
Isaacs will speak on "Political Prisoners in China." All interested workers are invited to attend.

Rubber Co's Prepare For Price War

Cost Will Fall on Workers Unions Face Battle For Life

By JACK WILSON
AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 8.—A titanic struggle by Wall Street interests for monopoly control of the rubber industry began openly this week, thus confronting the newly-formed United Rubber Workers of America with the severest challenge to protect the workers that the unions ever faced.

For the price of this war between the capitalists will be thrown on the workers through wage cuts unless the unions can muster sufficient strength to stop this move. The battle which will take the main form of ruthless tire price slashes to drive other competitors into bankruptcy already began with a huge reduction by Goodyear in various sections of the country.

Rockefeller and General Motors interests have virtual control of Firestone (the Firestone family is no longer boss of its factories) through a huge loan they gave recently to the company and they intend to gain complete control of the industry, it was learned authoritatively.

Goodrich has been in the hands of J. P. Morgan subsidiaries for quite some time while Goodyear, closely connected with Sears and Roebuck, belongs to Dillon and Reed, New York financiers.

No sooner did reports of General Motors entry into Firestone reach Akron than Goodyear, foreseeing the plan behind that move, slashed prices to attempt to drive Firestone from business.

Wage Cuts Threatened
Firestone tried a wage cut in an important department but threat of a spontaneous strike stopped this quickly. The company was laying the foundation for tire price reductions in that move.

So the grim shadow of long hours of work, poorer wages, and lay-offs hangs over the workers as it did in the late '20s when the companies fought their first big battle.

These revelations explain the questions many workers have been asking themselves as they saw wage reductions, the return of the 8-hour day, and lay-offs creep silently into the factories. The companies were simply laying the ground-work for their fight!

How can the unions meet this challenge? What must be done to bring the thousands of exploited back into the unions so that they can successfully defeat these companies? (Continued on Page 2)

VOTE ON SANCTIONS LINES UP LEAGUE NATIONS TO DEFEND BRITISH COLONIAL THIEVERY

TREACHERY CASTS A SHADOW BEFORE

By DAN EASTMAN
Turn the imperialist war into civil war! That was the slogan of Lenin. Turn the Italo-Ethiopian war into a general imperialist war! That is the slogan of Stalin.

Consider the Daily Worker for the seven crucial days of the outbreak of the Ethiopian war:

On October 1, T. Repard writes an article on "Social Democratic Befuddlement on the Sanctions Question," from which we quote:

"Reformist theory never founders about so helplessly as when it is confronted with a genuinely pressing immediate issue. Yesterday it was the Franco-Soviet pact. Today it is the question of sanctions against Mussolini."

South Africa 4th Int'n lists Back Ethiopia

Police Reply with Arrests and Repressions of Workers

Cape Town, August 2, 1935
To Editor of NEW MILITANT:

Dear Comrade,
I am sending you a special report this week because the situation in South Africa is changing rapidly. A wave of reaction is sweeping over the country. The Fusion Government, agents of British imperialism and the Chamber of Mines, is determined to crush the left-wing movement.

A few weeks ago, comrades Rux and Ngedlane of the Communist Party were arrested and sentenced to four months imprisonment in connection with a leaflet they issued on the occasion of the royal jubilee of King George V. The charge was "lese majeste." Last week, two more members of the Communist Party, comrades Gomas and Mina Gool, were arrested on the same charge. Their case will come up on September 3, and there is no doubt that a salutary sentence will be imposed.

Now, the iron heel of the capitalist state is descending on the Fourth Internationalists. On Sunday, August 19, three members of the Communist League of S. A., comrades G. H. Gool, J. Pick, and C. van Gelderen addressed a meeting of over two hundred workers at Langa Native Location on the proposed Native Bills. They were accompanied by comrades J. Gool and L. Solomon, who distributed literature to the audience. At the back of the hall sat six plain clothes detectives, two police sergeants and two native policemen. The forces of reaction were quite evidently prepared for any emergency.

The three speakers dealt at length with the Native Bills. They pointed out that it was a deliberate attempt to deprive the Native of his long cherished franchise, and urged the strongest resistance against the bills. All three speakers stressed that the fight should not only be against the present bills, but that it should go further and press for the extension of the franchise to all sections of the people. Comrade van Gelderen also dealt with the pending Italian attack on Abyssinia, and urged working class action to prevent the despatch of goods from South African ports to Italian troops.

Two resolutions were submitted to the meeting:

1. That this mass meeting of Langa workers unanimously rejects the proposed Native Bills, which aim to deprive the Cape natives of their franchise, almost the only privilege left to them, and further pledges itself by every means in its power to struggle for the extension of the franchise to the Northern Provinces (Continued on Page 4)

Reformist theory, in truth, flounders about helplessly when it is confronted with bourgeois demands. The attitude of the Stalinist press is sufficient proof of the helplessness and treachery inherent in reformism, which has become the theoretical basis of Stalinist policy.

M. Repard quotes Sir Stafford Cripps of the British Labor Party: "How are the imperialist people who seized Transvaal in 1900 by force to reply to Mussolini when he tries to seize Ethiopia by force in 1935?"

A communist would ask Cripps why he goes so far back in history, why he leaves immediate issues out and doesn't ask how Transvaal, why he doesn't ask how the British government that is daily, even now, murdering natives in South Africa, Indians in British India, Chinese in China, is to reply to Mussolini's murder of Ethiopians in Ethiopia. But what is the answer of M. Repard:

"Using" the Imperialists

"The only revolutionary (!) position to adopt... is to use imperialist England against imperialist Italy for all she is worth... and use imperialist Italy for all she is worth against imperialist England. If we ever get the chance—England... finds it necessary... to play the dangerous game of sanctions which the working class can utilize to its own ends now against Italy but very soon perhaps against England herself."

Can it be that M. Repard is not sure? What about this "if we ever get a chance" and this little "perhaps"? M. Repard tries to console the British workers, "Look here," he says in effect, "we are handing you over to your imperialist government now, but maybe later we shall in return be able to hand the Italian workers over to their imperialist government." One good betrayal deserves another. "Perhaps" the British workers, dragged into the British army in a war of "sanctions" against Italy, can console themselves that the same "comrade" Repard will later drag the Italian workers into the Italian army.

October 2: A worker writes to the Daily Worker "Question Box" to ask: "Does this (sanctions) not mean that they (the communists, Stalinists) support British imperialism in its struggle against Mussolini?" Yes it does, comrade, but not for the Daily Worker, now busy building up the British imperialist army. The "Question Box" answers, "The pressure of English workers has driven the English government to the point where they may apply sanctions. . . . The support of sanctions against Italy does not mean supporting British imperialism. No? Why not? The British government, anxious to preserve its spoils, is ready not only to invoke sanctions against Mussolini, but to engage in a war with Mussolini (Or is the British navy in the Mediterranean on a pleasure cruise?). The working class supports the British government in sanctions (economic) against Mussolini. What is the next step? The British working class supports the British government in sanctions (military, war!) against Mussolini. What is this? This is the betrayal of the working class into the hands of their enemy to the death, the imperialist capitalists. Thus," says the Daily Worker smugly, "sets a valuable precedent. . . ." In point

Fate Of Ethiopia To Be Decided in European Arena

There have been no large battles in Ethiopia to date. The Africans are following a policy of watching and waiting, retiring before the Italians, to draw them on from Adowa into the more dangerous mountain country, and to postpone any decisive battles until the outcome of the international maneuvers centering around the war are known. It is in the latter sphere, the international, that the real battles are now being fought.

The League vote last week for sanctions against Mussolini was a great victory for England. Reluctant as some of the fifty odd nations may have been, nevertheless they were all driven into line, including the other great League power, France, which is torn between a desire to please England as an ally against Hitler and a desire not to outrage Mussolini who, more than an ally, is a market, especially for war supplies.

It is significant that the only three nations who did not support the League sanctions were Austria, Hungary and Albania, all more or less under Italian influence, the latter no more than a vassal state of Mussolini.

The New York Times has to say of sanctions: "With 'Proposal No. 1' the League of Nations began this afternoon applying sanctions against the Italian government. This sanction, number one in history, applies to Italy alone, precisely the same arms embargo the U. S. proclaimed against both Italy and Ethiopia. . . ."

The full meaning of the whole "sanctions" game is revealed in the phrase "number one in history." Sanctions are merely war preparations disguised under a fancy name. Why should an embargo be called "number one in history?" Didn't the same British government declare an embargo against the U. S. in 1812? Didn't the Northern government declare an embargo (sanctions) against the South during the Civil War? Didn't the Germans try to "sanction" the British Isles with submarines during the World War?

Sanctions will not necessarily lead directly to war—no more than any preparations necessarily lead directly to war. There are sanctions and sanctions. While the Czechoslovakian Stalinists openly call for military sanctions, the League, under French influence seems at present inclined to go easy on Mussolini, confining itself to less provocative measures.

Meanwhile in all the countries concerned, especially in Britain, politicians are hastening to unify the country for war around the "peaceful" sanctions question. In Britain the parliament has been called early "in compliance with the request of the Labor opposition . . . in view of British participation in sanctions against Italy. . . ."

"Inasmuch as sanctions have already been endorsed by the Labor Party and have the backing of the Conservatives and the public as represented by 11,000,000 voters in a popular referendum (a peace referendum!!!) there is no possibility of any material opposition."

As the last war was fought to make the world safe for democracy, this will be fought to make it safe for sanctions. Sanctions, which are really no more than war preparations. Diplomatic, economic, then military sanctions. And when the first shot is fired and the first soldier killed the war of sanctions becomes a war in fact. Another imperialist holocaust brought on, as was the last, by imperialist powers protesting their interest in peace right up to the last moment.

There is only one way to defend Ethiopia, and that way leads not through imperialist sanctions that lead ever nearer war, but through sanctions of the international working class: demonstrations, boycotts and embargoes.

On S.P. 'Militants' Trade Union Stand

(By the Editorial Board)
Let every serious worker in the "Militant" Socialist ranks read his group's program on trade unionism (which is here printed in full). Then let these workers ask themselves the question: Is there anything in this so-called program which the worst of the "Socialist" bureaucrats—Dubinsky, Zaritsky, Zausner, Schlossberg, Abe Miller, Feinstein, Joe Turvin and the whole caboodle of labor fakers and outright racketeers—would not sign? There is perhaps one point which some of them might not agree to, on discrimination for political beliefs. Otherwise, everyone of these labor fakers would sign with both hands this "Militant" program!

Yet this fact is only surprising in the sense that we might have expected the "Militants" to distinguish themselves from the bureaucrats in a theoretical document. We have seen, with growing disgust, how the "Socialist Call" has gone on month after month without beginning even the semblance of a struggle against the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. One can count on the fingers of one hand the exceptions to the "Call" rule that no bureaucrat must be colluded with. And all the exceptions were cases on which Hillman, John L. Lewis, Dubinsky or Gorman also frowned. For it is precisely to these bureaucrats, the leaders of the anti-green bloc, that the "Socialist Call" looks for A. F. of L. leadership today!

One point must be clarified immediately: we are scarcely unaware of the necessity of compromises in the trade union movement. It is seldom, indeed, that a revolutionist can bring forward his whole program openly within the trade unions. But the "Militants" can make such compromises on one condition only: that their political press, the Socialist Call, should tell the whole truth: teach every worker that (regardless of any temporary differences between Dubinsky and the Old Guard) Dubinsky remains the bureaucrat who smashed the left wing ten years ago and to this day roots out by the most mechanical means all incipient opposition; that John L. Lewis is a racketeer who destroyed the U.M.W.A. once in order to control it and will do so again, and who on the day he introduces the industrial union resolution rules all but two of his union's districts under personal dictatorships; that Hillman, Lewis, Gorman et al cannot possibly be the leaders of a progressive A. F. of L., for it is precisely these false leaders who have cooperated most with the government in tying the unions to the government apparatus.

That is what the Socialist Call would say—if it were a revolutionary paper. Instead, it is silent. Many of the "Militant" leaders are minor functionaries in the trade unions; within them they keep quiet, they do not fight the bureaucrats; outside, their press is as silent as they are inside; wherein, then, do they differ from the labor fakers? The intentions of some of them may be of the very best. But at what point will their intentions become discernible to any beside those to whom they speak when the door is locked and the shades drawn down.

We content ourselves in this article with merely listing the basic questions "omitted" from the "Militant" program:

1. The Role of the Party in the Trade Unions.

When a resolution on trade unionism was introduced at the Detroit convention, Jasper McLevy, in a burst of righteous indignation declared: "What right have you to interfere in the trade unions? Stick to your own business in the political sphere!" This is an exact reflection of the theory of reformism, which considers its party as one of the political parties competing for "control" of government; it differs from the Republican or Democratic parties in relation to trade unions, only in being friendly to the unions, supporting the unions' demands, etc.

A revolutionary party, on the

WITH THE STRIKEBREAKERS

"Employers like him because he is conservative and practical—he gets men back to work," says News-Week of Edward F. McGrady. McGrady is becoming the greatest traveler in labor history. other hand, has a completely different conception of its relation to the unions. For a revolutionist, his party is not merely a "political party," in the usual sense; his party is the vanguard of the whole working class, its consciousness; it is what the working class should be, while the trade unions are what the working class is today. Hence, the party must intervene, as far as it can find the power to, in every problem of the trade unions. For only by so doing can it eventually transform the working class into a revolutionary force.

To which of these fundamentally different conceptions of the party does the "Militant" program adhere? Elsewhere in the program, we find references to the party as the "vanguard," "revolutionary party," etc. But where the program must be concrete, as in its trade union section, its similarity to the reformist conception of the party becomes obvious. From the doctrine that "trade unions without a revolutionary party can achieve only partial and temporary success," a really revolutionary program would draw the conclusion that it is the right and duty of the revolutionists to fight for the supremacy of their ideas and leadership in the trade unions. The "Militant" program, on the contrary, draws from the correct premise, the false (reformist) conclusion that their party "will therefore support the trade unions and work for cordial relations," etc. This is hopelessly Philistine stuff. The line here is in the phrase "cordial relations." With whom? Any party which advances a real class struggle program in the unions will not get "cordial relations" from the present officialdom. Yet, this is what the "Militant" program really means. True, they do not expect cordial relations with everyone. Their programmatic statements cut them off from white chauvinists, from the bitter-ender craft unionists, etc. They want cordial relations merely—with the Hillmans, John L. Lewises, etc.

The "Militants" do not say with the McLevys that they have no business in the trade unions. No, they say they have business in the unions. Not the revolutionists' business: the pitiless struggle against the reactionary officialdom and for the hegemony of the revolutionists, the faithful exposition to the working class, through the party press, of the whole truth. No, the "Militant" program in the unions is an implicit support of a degenerate clique which temporarily raises certain progressive slogans in its fight for power.

Rubber Price War Begins

many plans which mean added misery and starvation to the rubber workers?

The house-to-house canvas for members is not enough for the organizational drive.

Program of Struggle
Around a platform that meets the workers' desires and needs can they be rallied. This must include: (1) No wage reductions; (2) Continuation of the six-hour day and abolition of the eight-hour day where it has been introduced; (3) Seniority rights in lay-offs and no discrimination against union members. Mass meetings with the international officers as speakers should be held explaining what is happening and pointing out that the only bulwark against the capitalist offensive are the unions.

Insufficient stress has been placed on the fact that the rubber worker unions have won complete independence from the A. F. of L. bureaucracy and that now the workers can build an international of their own desire—one with a progressive policy that meets the changing conditions in the rubber industry.

Ample proof that the rubber workers will rally around such a program was given recently at Firestone where a threatened wage cut brought complete solidarity in the department and forced the bosses to retreat!

Test of Leadership

This is the first major test of the new leadership of the U.R.W.A. Although the unfolding events in the rubber industry are filled with dangerous situations and can possibly bring further defeat for the workers, the key to success lies in this very danger.

For if the leaders can confront this situation calmly, armed with the correct policy and platform, they have created for themselves and the union a formula which, placed into action, can only result in bringing the rubber workers back into the union by the thousands.

As always, the Workers Party will do its utmost to achieve this aim—build the unions and strengthen the working class against the ravages of capitalism. This will show which leaders are giving the rubber workers the correct ideas and bringing results. Every officer of both the international itself and of the local unions should welcome this opportunity to display their abilities and their fundamental interest in the workers, as we do. It is in the field of battle that generals and the army itself are tested. This applies perfectly to the rubber workers' union today because of the crisis.

Coal Strike Exposes Keck Leadership in the P.M.A.

By GERMINAL

(Ed. Note: The following article, written before the settlement of the coal strike, throws a clear light on a significant aspect of the coal situation in Illinois.)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 28.—The national strike of the bituminous coal miners might officially be called off any day now, as Lewis continues his shady maneuvers in Washington to help the coal operators rid themselves of a surplus of 55,000,000 tons of coal that threatened to glut the market.

Large coal corporations expressed no alarm over the strike. Demands by the United Mine Workers that the FEBA stand ready to rush relief to the strikers is the only thing that disturbed their conference of "mutual admiration," as Lewis himself called it.

Without question, the present strike, involving approximately 400,000 mine workers in 26 coal producing states, is the most effective walkout since the 1922 struggle when the United Mine Workers of America succeeded to tie up 650,000 coal miners—or 78 percent of the industry.

Only two sections of the country failed to respond to the strike call—Harlan County, Kentucky, and the 14,000 working Progressive Miners of Illinois. In Kentucky the open hatred of the coal corporations for an independent union of any kind had the first stages of the strike stopped the strike movement in this field. Western Kentucky, however, was solidly out.

"Progressive" Officials' Shady Role
Officials of the conservative Progressive Miners of America worked closely with the Coal Producers Assn. of Illinois to keep the miners at work. Taking advantage of the deep rooted prejudices the Progresssive rank and file have against the United Mine Workers in this state, the Keck leadership stated that the policy of the organization was against striking with John L. Lewis' union.

Keck's policy did not succeed to keep all the miners under his jurisdiction at work, however. In Saline county, Pekin, East Peoria and Belleville, Progressive miners voted to join the strike. Confusion was evident in the Progressive ranks and a bitter factional fight over the question of the strike threatened the very existence of the organization.

Constant reports that the strike would be short lived along with the fact that the United Mine Workers are deadlocked over a mere 1 1/2 cent wage increase aided the Progressive leaders in keeping the mass of the rank and file in check. Indications were that the Progressive leaders would not hold the rank and file at work should the strike assume a militant character, carrying forward a fight for the 6-hour day and a basic $8 wage.

For the first time since the inner struggle between the P.M.A. and the U.M.W. in Illinois, rank and file miners of both organizations met at Pekin, Ill., and voted to unite their forces in the strike for higher wages.

Jack Battuello, Joe Burrell, Pat Anshoury and Gerry Allard, left wing leaders, were carrying the fight to the Progressive membership over the heads of the union leaders, calling upon the Progressive miners to join the nation-wide walkout.

"In the strike the economic welfare of the mine workers is the first and foremost consideration," Allard said, speaking for the left wing. "John L. Lewis and his rotten poli-

The revolutionary party fights the trade union bureaucracy not only in order to infuse the unions with the spirit and policy of class struggle. Irreconcilable struggle is also necessary in order to secure democracy in the unions, an end to bureaucracy and racketeering, organization of the unorganized and unskilled, etc. The revolutionist, of course, knows that the fight for these is also the fight for a class struggle policy. Bureaucracy, for example, arises because of the necessity of repressing the combative instincts of the masses (John R. Commons, the theoretical exponent of the A. F. of L.'s "class peace" policy, has developed the tendency of bureaucracy along these lines into a systematic theory.) So, too, racketeering can only arise in the atmosphere of "deals" with the bosses which is typical of conservative unionism. And the failure to organize the unorganized and unskilled is perhaps the most pervasive expression of the class-collaborationism by which a privileged section of skilled workers is used in cooperation with the bosses who are simultaneously permitted to exploit the unskilled (and deliberately unorganized) workers in the same industry. This goes on in so-called industrial unions. For example, the sacred cow of the Socialist Call, Dubinsky, in the last agreement with the bosses, traded off certain points by abandoning the shipping clerks, who finally had to wage a fight by way of a federal local and in spite of Dubinsky. All this means is that the fight for every progressive demand is a fight against the Dubinskys, Hillmans, et al. Needless to say, there is not a hint of this in the "Militant" program.

3. The Fight Against Government Control.

The "Militant" program fails even to mention one of the most significant tendencies of the present regime: its attempt to tie the trade union movement up with the capitalist government, by way of boards, laws, etc., designed in the long run to emasculate the unions, to restrict the right to strike, and thus to undermine the workers' power of resistance. This policy is strongly nourished by the degenerate leadership of the A. F. of L., including the Lewises, Hillmans, Dubinskys, whom the "Militants" support. Lewis and Hillman, in fact, are even closer to the government than are Green and Woll.

4. The Fight Against the A. F. of L. Monopoly.

While we unreservedly favor the organization of workers into unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. wherever possible, we also recognize present realities. Often enough, important groups of workers have been, and will be, repelled from the A. F. of L. by outright betrayal of strikes, by bureaucracy, racketeering and other evils. Often enough, the A. F. of L. has been, and will be, unwilling to organize important sections of unorganized workers. Insistence on craft union jurisdictions in some cases may make it even imperative that the workers first be organized in independent industrial unions. Last but not least, are the cases of unions under militant leadership, which have their charters taken away, as was the case with famous Teamsters Local 574 of Minneapolis. What does all this mean? It means that the revolutionary party must firmly declare itself against the claimed right of the A. F. of L. to a monopoly in the field of labor organization. The revolutionary party must openly state that in these instances it will solidly support independent unions, while working for the unification of the whole labor movement within the A. F. of L.

What does the "Militant" program do? It gives no hint of the conditions under which independent unions come into being; it gives no hint of the necessity of supporting such unions, if necessary against the really dual unions brought in by the A. F. of L. (as in the case of so-called "Local 500" brought into Minneapolis by Tobin). It typically Lovestonite fashion, the "Militant" program pumps down for the A. F. of L. and leaves it at that; thus providing no theoretical justification for the many instances in which any honest trade unionist must support independent unionism. Thus it provides the basis solely for capitulation to the dictates of the Tobins and Wollis. Is this part of the price which the "Militants" are ready to pay for "cordial relations" with the "trade unions"?

5. The Fight for Party Responsibility.

The distinction which the Jasper MacLevys make between politics and trade union work is not really as innocent as it appears. The real function of the distinction is to prevent the spotlight of proletarian policy from being cast on the "So-

THE 'MILITANTS' PROGRAM

(From the "Militant" Program presented at the "Call Institute")

"The Socialist Party recognizes that the trade unions, no matter how conservative, are organs of the class struggle and schools of Socialism. Without trade unions, even the most elementary labor struggles would be impossible. But trade unions without a revolutionary party can achieve only partial and temporary success. The Socialist Party will therefore support the trade unions and work for cordial relations with them. It will support all the actions of the trade unions on behalf of the workers (strikes, boycotts, shortening of the working day, etc.). It will work for the unification of the unions into industrial unions and against union splitting, disruption, or dual unionism; it will fight against bureaucracy and racketeering, and for clean and democratic unionism; it favors the organization of the unorganized and the unskilled; it opposes discrimination against Negroes, women and youth; and will champion them on all occasions. It opposes discrimination against union members or applicants because of their political beliefs. The Socialist Party recognizes and supports the American Federation of Labor as the mainstream of the American labor movement, and will urge all independent trade unions and individual workers to affiliate with it. It is the duty of every Socialist, and of every worker to belong to a trade union, and work there as a good trade unionist and a good Socialist. Through such work the trade unions and their members will eventually support the revolutionary struggle for Socialism." (page 8) cialist" labor fakers. The distinction is a credential of irresponsibility to every Socialist to do as he will in the unions—to do as he will except that it rules out a demand that the Socialist Party accept responsibility for the conduct of its members in the unions.

If, in contrast to this, the "Militants" were to take seriously their phrase that their party must represent the "historic interests" of the working class, one of the first concrete applications of it would be to demand systematic fraction work in the trade unions. But even though their fractions would be already bound to a pusillanimous policy of supporting the Dubinskys and Hillmans, the "Militants" fail to put this demand into their slogans. Are they, perhaps, waiting to get the permission of Dubinsky to put it in the program?

We have touched on only a few points; but sufficient to reveal the bankruptcy of the "Militant" program on trade unionism. Psychologically, practically, this bankruptcy arises from the fear of breaking with the labor fakers. Ideologically, this bankruptcy flows from the failure to understand the meaning of the revolutionary conception that the party is the conscious vanguard of the proletariat. In line with what we have said, we ask Socialist workers to read Lenin's "What Is To Be Done," the classic exposition of the role of the party; read Trotsky's "Communism and Syndicalism," which, though it deals with France, illumines the revolutionists' task in the trade unions everywhere. Read the works of the great teachers, and see how utterly alien to their spirit is the cowardly program of the "Militants" on the trade union question.

(Note: This is the second of a series of articles; next week's will deal with the "Militant" program on the United Front.)

Allentown WPA Workers Win State-wide Victory

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Sept. 28.—

After two weeks of militant strike struggle, the WPA project workers of Allentown last night voted to return to work on the basis of the victory conceded by the state WPA administration on Thursday. The Pennsylvania Works Progress Administration in Harrisburg announced a raise of 10 percent in wages for all laborers, the payment of prevailing union scales for all skilled work and a reduction in hours from 140 to 120 per month last Thursday night.

Terms of Settlement

Before taking the vote, the strikers, meeting at the Silk Workers Hall, listened to reports by Anthony Ramaglia, chairman of the strike committee and Sam Gordon, speaking for the negotiations committee. The negotiations committee had met on Friday afternoon with Assistant WPA administrator Folkeston, who gave the strikers the following assurances:

- 1) The new schedule of wages and hours is to go into effect as of October 1;
- 2) There is to be no discrimination against strikers or strike leaders;
- 3) First men to be requisitioned will be the first to be returned on the projects;
- 4) The administration will recognize the collective bargaining agency of the project workers (the Joint Labor Council);
- 5) The administration will order recognition of grievance committees elected by the workers on each project.

The speakers stressed the fact that Pennsylvania is the first state to change the federal WPA wage schedule, a fact which serves to emphasize the force of the militant

AUTO
NOTES

TOLEDO, Ohio.—The "big three" of the automobile industry—Ford, Chrysler and General Motors—employ diverse methods in smashing unionism and keeping their wage slaves divided and unorganized. Ford likes concentration in the manufacture of automobiles. He has centered the greater portion of Ford Motor Car production at the River Rouge plant at Detroit, thus eliminating the necessity of constant shipping of parts to the various assembly plants. Ford relies therefore upon an elaborate and vicious spy system to terrorize his workers and keep them in constant fear of being blacklisted all over Detroit. The Chrysler-Dodge Co. has a particular fondness for the company union. General Motors, in addition to both these methods, has perfected a system of marvelous integration in the manufacture of its cars accompanied by a geographical decentralization of its various plants. In the event of a strike, a few plants can be temporarily shut down, the workers starved out and the particular work diverted to other nearby plants.

The Chevrolet strike has revealed a glaring weakness in the armor of General Motors. The Chevrolet plant at Toledo manufactures all Chevrolet transmissions. The company has found itself powerless to break the automobile union or divide the shop committee at the plant. By striking at this Achilles heel, it becomes possible to shut down General Motors assembly plants all over the country. Thus the whole carefully planned and adjusted mechanism of General Motors is thrown out of gear.

As soon as the recent Chevrolet strike was over, the order went out from General Motors: Break up Toledo! Instead of one plant manufacturing all Chevrolet transmissions, there will be three: Toledo, Munsey, Ind., and Saginaw, Mich. Munsey has already been shipped to both places and the Munsey plant is already working on transmissions. Every worker employed at Munsey is carefully checked and rechecked. He must live in Munsey at least one year prior to date of employment; he must have a recommendation from a reliable Munsey merchant. Saginaw will probably open up early in the winter.

For the workers to attempt to prevent these moves, would, of course be worse than futile. What must be done, and the only thing that can be done, is to organize Munsey and Saginaw! The offensive of General Motors must be answered by a counter-offensive by the Automobile International. Dillon has boasted that by October 1 a campaign will be started to organize "141 automobile plants in the United States." The automobile workers must force him to keep good that promise. The campaign should start with Munsey and Saginaw!

Toledo federal local 18384 of the United Automobile Workers is waiting expectantly for word from the International office at Detroit of the new charter which it will receive. It is believed that separate charters will be granted the various shops comprising the Toledo local and that a district committee will be formed on the model of the districts in the U.M.W.A. The present clique dominating the local executive committee belong mostly to the smaller and weaker shops and so fear that such a move would destroy them. If they attempt to fight it, however, they will probably meet with the resistance of the best union members of Chevrolet, Bingham and other shops who have no representation on the present executive board and who have been dominated by this unprincipled clique of union "politicians."

The committee of seven elected at the constitutional convention of the United Automobile Workers of America to appeal the decisions of the executive council to the 55th convention of the A. F. of L. in appointing all officers of the newly formed automobile international, are preparing to leave for Atlantic City and are counting on the support of the progressives in rubber, steel, and many of the city centrals in their fight at this convention for trade union democracy and industrial unionism.

AFL Convention

will not take place at Atlantic City. It is possible that the progressives will gain some apparent victories. The basic consideration is that by means of the amendment to the constitution or in some other form the foundation will be laid for the campaign against the emergence of class-struggle unionism—above all for seeking to prepare the unions for a role of subservience to capitalism and the capitalist government when war breaks. Progressives and revolutionists in view of this development, will have to learn to fight not only with more vigor but also with more subtlety than hitherto.

RALLY SUPPORT FOR THE

MARCH OF VENTS

By JACK WEBER

BRITAIN PREPARES . . .

The imperialist nation with the greatest colonial empire naturally has the most to lose in the attempt by lesser powers to redistribute the world and reallocate the raw materials and the markets that mean life and death to modern capitalism. By its invasion of Ethiopia Italy has served notice that the time has come for the posing of this question once more in Europe, as well as in the entire world. The preparations that were being made for the inevitable world war have been tremendously accelerated by this event. Not only has there been a dizzying speeding up of the production and stocking of munitions and the raw materials that enter into their making, but the diplomatic preparations in the maneuvering for alliances have been given a staccato tempo. Eden for England, Goering for Germany, Beck for Poland hasten from capital to capital seeking the best bargains in the holocaust each is helping to prepare. Baldwin announces that England's previous preparations have been mere play compared to what is to come, for Britain is about "to return in earnest." This imperialist rearmament is cloaked under the hypocrisy of defending peace. The "sanctions" of the League of Nations is in reality the sanctioning of this rearmament for keeping the exploited colonial peoples under the brutal heel of British imperialism. The robber League of Nations now becomes the instrument par excellence for creating the illusions of "right and justice," for justifying social patriotism, for binding the working class hand and foot and delivering them helpless into the bloody hands of the bourgeois ruling class. The propaganda for justifying imperialism war is made to center around the League of Nations and its "sanctions."

STALINISM AIDS THE BOURGEOISIE . . .

Why shouldn't Baldwin use the arguments of justification presented to him by Stalin? What better method could he adopt than this for fooling the proletariat? Baldwin tells the British workers that England is preparing for war "not only because of Italy's present defiance, but because of the challenge which all dictatorships have thrown down to the free peoples of Europe." This is the poisonous propaganda of the Comintern taken up, as was only to be expected, by those whom it will benefit. This is the attitude that motivates the "People's Front," the vicious distortion of the united front that makes of it an instrument not of the revolutionary proletariat, but of class collaboration and truce with one's own bourgeoisie. Stalinism helps the capitalists in the so-called democratic countries to send their workers willingly to the slaughter. Meantime the British ruling class propose, purely in the interests of democracy, no doubt, to take all precautions against the workers at home. Their first proposal is to concentrate government power in the hands of their most direct and most reactionary representatives, rather than to permit any less reliable indirect representative, even one like MacDonald who has proved his faithfulness to the national bourgeoisie, to remain in control. Hence the rulers are now choosing their own time for parliamentary elections so as to crushingly defeat the Labor Party on the issue of war and patriotism. In this vital struggle the Labor Party has capitulated in advance by its anti-revolutionary stand on sanctions, the League of Nations and war. This stand may please the Stalinists but it can only arouse the bitterest indignation in the heart of every revolutionary worker who cannot but see in it the course of betrayal that was followed similarly by the Second International in 1914.

THE ENEMY AT HOME . . .

The Labor Party, just as the Second International, points to the enemy abroad and helps to divert the attention of the proletariat from its main enemy, the English capitalists. In imperialist war the capitalist class is driven by necessity to extend the sphere of its exploitation for the very purpose of preserving the system of capitalist exploitation at home. Success of the bourgeoisie in such a war means its success in fastening ever stronger chains on the working class at home. The effort of the English workers to free themselves from capitalist exploitation means also the effort to free their colonial brothers under the heel of the same enemy. The effort of colonial peoples to secure or to maintain national independence is at the same time a blow struck at the enemy of the workers at home, a strengthening of the workers and a weakening of the capitalist exploiters. Thus the best way to help free the colonial peoples under the domination of imperialism, is to strike at the imperialist masters in one's own country. The Ethiopian people must be defended not only against Italian imperialism, but against English imperialism as well, which intends soon to send in its own troops to seize the Lake Tana region. In short, the fight against imperialism is an international struggle in which each section of the proletariat must fight against its own bourgeoisie.

CITY WIDE CONFERENCE TO AID ANGELO HERNDON

A city-wide conference to map out a program of work for the defense of Angelo Herndon, young Negro Communist sentenced to 18 to 20 years on the Georgia chain gang on a charge of "inciting to insurrection," has been called for October 19, at 1 P.M., in the Imperial Auditorium, 160 West 129th Street, New York City. It was announced today.

The conference is called by the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense, constituted by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the General Defense Committee (I.W. W.), International Labor Defense, League for Industrial Democracy, League of Struggle for Negro Rights, and National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners. Calls for representatives to be sent to the conference have been sent to hundreds of local organizations this week.

Besides reports from the various organizations, there will be a number of prominent speakers, including Congressman Vito Marcantonio of New York. It was announced.

How History Is Written

By ALFA

Dished Up to Order by Stalin's Savants on Frederick Engels Anniversary.

A considerable portion of the Pravda for August 5 is devoted to the fortieth anniversary of the death of Engels. Poor Engels! Assuredly he is undeserving of this mockery. Engels was not only a man of genius but also the soul of scrupulousness. In literary work as well as in practical affairs he could not bear sloppiness, inaccuracy, and inexactitude. He checked every comma (in the literal sense of the term) of Marx's posthumous work, and carried on a correspondence on the subject of secondary orthographic errors. Then why does the central organ of the Moscow bureaucracy come down upon the great thinker and writer with this flood of articles in which side by side with the tendentious and, so to say, standard lies one meets at every step with the lie that is unpremeditated, born out of ignorance, heedlessness and irresponsibility?

The leading article reads: "The reverberations of the shots on the barricades of the bourgeois revolutions had hardly subsided . . . when Marx and Engels were already pointing to the majestic figure of the proletariat, this gravedigger. . . and so forth and so on. What sort of 'bourgeois revolutions' are made mention of here? During the barricades in the year, 1830, Marx and Engels were still kids and incapable of pointing out the 'majestic figure of the proletariat.' Consequently the statement must relate only to the revolutions of 1848. But the 'Condition of the Working Class in England,' the genial work of young Engels, appeared as early as 1845. Finally, Marx and Engels did not at all await the reverberation of 1848 to proclaim to the world the doctrine of scientific socialism. 'The Communist Manifesto'—and may the editors of the Pravda be apprised of this—appeared not after the 'last shots had sounded' but prior to the time the first bullets hummed of the revolutions of 1848. But what does a functionary fulfilling the duties of a publicist care about the chronology of revolutions, or the ideological development of Marx and Engels to boot? Not for nothing did Bismarck say, 'Give me a journalist out of him; but there is no making a good journalist even out of a dozen functionaries.'

Stalinist Sharpshooters

Quoting, from the obituary in the Neue Zeit (1896), the sentence to the effect that with the death of Engels "Marx finally died too," the leading article unexpectedly appends the following: "the leaders of the social democracy who had slid down into the swamp of reformism and opportunism made haste to intern together with the remains of Engels the revolutionary teachings of Marxism." This is indeed sharp shooting: aim a finger at the sky and hit the bull's eye! Revisionism appeared only in 1897, the name itself came still later, the weekly Neue Zeit was not the organ of revisionism but of the struggle against revisionism. The above quoted sentence did not at all imply that revolutionary Marxism was being buried together with Engels. To ascribe to the Neue Zeit of 1895 such a notion is tantamount to being an utter ignoramus in the history of Marxism. In reality, the thought expressed in the Neue Zeit was to the effect that with Engels' death there also died that part of Marx's living personality which had continued to exist in Engels. In these words there is beautifully expressed the well high individualistic creative collaboration of Marx and Engels. But the functionary fulfilling the duties of a publicist opines that he best expresses his belated hostility to revisionism when he provides a stupid and pettifogging interpretation of a clever and correct thought. And this, at the moment when the entire policy of the Communist International is being directed into channels of reformism!

The Institute of Confusion

The Marx, Engels and Lenin Institute publishes in the self-same issue a letter from Engels to Kautsky which subjects to criticism the Lassallean formula of "the single reactionary mass of the ruling classes." The aim of this publication is quite clear: the Institute for the falsification of Marxism and Leninism seeks by means of this quotation to provide a prop for the policy of coalition with the "democratic" bourgeoisie. It is unnecessary to dwell here on the political fraud: toil and moli as the Meers functionaries may, they will not succeed in transforming Engels into the theoretician of conciliationism with the bourgeoisie. But at any rate, these gentlemen have forgotten to explain to us how the negation of the "single reactionary mass of the ruling classes" is reconcilable with the immortal aphorism of Stalin on the subject of: Fascism and social democracy. But here is the remarkable part: publishing the letter in its own solemn name, the Institute in a brief introduction commits, in the course of eight lines, two, if not three gross mistakes.

Says the learned Institute, "In this letter Engels subjects to criticism the draft of the Erfurt program in which Kautsky, despite the instructions of Marx and Engels, was smuggling in the Lassallean thesis of the single reactionary mass."

Learned Nonsense

There could have been no instructions from Marx to Kautsky for the reason that Marx had died some eight years prior to the drafting of the Erfurt program; the only letter that Marx did write to Kautsky (in 1881) says absolutely nothing concerning the question that interests us. As regards Engels, in his letter to Kautsky he actually did subject to merciless criticism the phrase on the "single reactionary mass." But he did not at all ascribe it to Kautsky; he knew that this phrase was inserted by someone (obviously Wilhelm Liebknecht) into Kautsky's original draft, which had been approved in essence by Engels. Engels' critical letter was intended to supply Kautsky with support against Liebknecht, and especially against the old Lassalleans. "Ordinary" mortals have the privilege of not knowing this. But the learned Institute of Marx, Engels and Lenin!

Further on we read: "The instructions of Engels to the leaders of the German social-democracy were not executed when the final text of the program was accepted" (our emphasis). The style itself is noteworthy: the "instructions" of the head of the department were not "executed" by an underling. But Engels was not the one and indivisible "leader." He issued "instructions" to nobody. He was merely a genial thinker and he gave theoretical and political advice to different parties. Nobody was duty bound to "execute" this. This sentence, so remarkable stylistically, is all the worse for being false in essence. The formula of the "single mass" was deleted from the text of the Erfurt program, and Engels in his correspondence expressed his complete satisfaction on this score. What a deal of lying in eight lines for a learned institution!

Defaming Plekhanov

In the third article devoted to Engels' attitude to the Russian revolution we are informed that in a letter to the Emancipation of Labor Group, Engels warned against a mechanistic and doctrinaire understanding of Marxism. And the sage-Pravda remarks in this connection: "Alas! The outstanding members of the Group gleaned little boon (!) from this warning of Engels; two decades later they turned out in the camp of the Mensheviks. . . . But what happened in the course of these two decades? Plekhanov's splendid and victorious struggle against philosophical idealism, against historic subjectivism and the economic superstition of the Narodniki; the entire work of the Emancipation of Labor Group unprecedented in courage and staunchness—the work upon which was directly nurtured the oldest generation of the Russian Marxists, including Lenin himself—all this is a "trifle" to the ignorant and bombastic Pravda. But Lenin, indeed, was enthralled by Plekhanov, he was, to use his own expression, "in love" with Plekhanov, nor did he forget the latter's great Marxist services even during the periods of irreconcilable struggle with him. Why, even Engels himself after the letter to Zasulich in 1883 had the opportunity over a period of some 12 years to observe directly the activity of the Emancipation of Labor Group, and he referred with extreme praise to the work of Plekhanov. Generally speaking, the old man was quite chary of praise. But the functionary who has been able to understand neither Engels nor Lenin nor Plekhanov sets upon the activity of the Emancipation of Labor Group the seal of his severe verdict: "little boon." One is impelled to say that only harm can come from such bureaucratic insects in literature.

Flame Belching Bureaucrats

One could call another dozen of similar pearls for each author contributed his bit to the public treasure chest of ignorance. But the reader must be fed up to his neck already. We shall only add a few words on the score of the bureaucratic pathos. The leading article speaks of "the chapters of 'Das Kapital' and the 'Anti-Duehring' flaming with revolutionary passion and hatred to the exploiters, and to joy in their wondrous philosophic profundity. . . . It is impossible to write more choicely. A philosophic profundity which turns into an ice flame at the same time that the flames of hatred flare. It is clear that at the mere sight of 'Das Kapital' the editors of the Pravda get fever and chills. Further on, mention is made of the "immortal and destructive (?) lines on the 'Gotha Program' and of the 'flame belching pamphlet' on the Paris Commune. In short, the flame belching functionaries—in waiting write in a wondrous manner: the reader breaks out in a rash of burns and blisters.

Zaslavsky; Bootlicker in Chief

But the palm of primacy indubitably goes to D. Zaslavsky. In the literary sense he is immeasurably more literate than the rest, and in regards to flame belching pathos he can give anybody cards and spades. Zaslavsky concludes his article with the following words: "It was not by accident that the remarkable and well worth studying friendship between Marx and Engels found its counterpart in the remarkable kinship, the great friendship between Lenin and Stalin." An immortal Russian satirist has made a remark bearing upon such a case. Said he: "After this, the son of a gun squats on his haunches and waits to be petted."

Marx and Engels were bound together by forty years of titanic mental labor. The most informed and penetrating students of Marxism, like Ryazanov, have been unable—for it is unthinkable in general—to conclusively establish the line of demarcation between their creative work. As regards Lenin and . . . Stalin we want to be shown not a line of demarcation, but a line of continuity. In the titanic mental labor of Lenin, Stalin occupied the post of an ordinary "activist" side by side with a score of others. As regards "friendship," enough to recall Lenin's Testament and his letter written on his death bed in which he broke off all personal and comradesly relations with Stalin. But why pick on . . . D. Zaslavsky? He is the same scribbler who in 1917 hounded Lenin in the bourgeois chauvinist press as the paid agent of the German Kaiser. In a whole series of articles Lenin never made reference to Zaslavsky otherwise than as a "scoundrel." Only after the NEP and after the first pogrom of the Left Opposition was this individual able to enter the employ of the Soviet bureaucracy. At any rate, he remains true to himself in one thing: he calumniated Lenin while the latter was alive and he continues to calumniate him after he is dead. Such gentlemen are capable of proposing, say, for the 18th Anniversary of October to rename a dozen volumes of Lenin as the "Collected Works of Stalin," in accordance with the same method by which a city like Tzaritsyn is renamed Stalingrad: a single decree—and the matter is in the bag.

But let the lackeys sweat as they will, they will not attain their goal: we will stand in defense of Marx and Engels and Lenin against all the Institutes and all the Zaslavskys.

A Skeleton from Olgin's Social Patriotic Closet

By HENRY THURMAN

According to Moissaye J. Olgin, in his recent vicious pamphlet against "Trotskyism," Leon Trotsky was nothing but a petit-bourgeois compromiser up until 1917, when he managed to fool the Bolsheviks for a few years, returning to his old sins after Lenin died. But Olgin's evaluation of the Russian revolutionist's career was quite different in 1918, when he wrote in the preface to "Our Revolution," a collection of Trotsky's writings:

"The reader will see that Trotsky's views as applied in Bolshevik-ruled Russia are not of recent origin. They were formed in the course of the First Russian Revolution of 1905, in which Trotsky was one of the leaders. They were developed and strengthened in the following years of reaction, when many a progressive group went to seek compromises with the absolutist forces. They became particularly firm through the world war and the circumstances that led to the establishment of a republican order in Russia. Perhaps many a grievous misunderstanding and misinterpretation would have been avoided had thinking America known that those conceptions of Trotsky were not created on the spur of the moment, but were the result of a life-long work in the service of the Revolution."

Just such misinterpretations—claims that Trotsky hedged during the war (Olgin did worse than that!), that Trotsky did not believe in the socialist revolution in Russia—Olgin himself is spreading now!

In the biographical notes of this same work, Olgin, who claimed he was personally acquainted with Trotsky, makes numerous statements that blast the lying claims made in his slanderous pamphlet:

"Trotsky is not imposing. He is almost modest . . . an uncompromising Marxist. . . . Trotsky could not conceive of half-way measures, of 'diplomatic' silence over vital topics, of cunning moves and concealed designs in political struggles. . . . To secure permanent power, the working class would have to win over the millions of peasants. This would be possible by recognizing all the agrarian changes completed by the peasants in time of the revolution and by radical agrarian legislation . . . collectivism becomes the order of the day. . . . It was precisely the same program which Trotsky is at present attempting to put into operation. . . . Whatever may be our opinion of the merits of his policies, the man has remained true to himself. His line has been straight."

Most significant of all, Olgin gives the definition of a Soviet. Now that he is crawling and licking the boots of his masters, and meekly concocting lies at their command, he might do well to remember the words of Trotsky on the nature of a Soviet:

"The Soviet was the organized authority of the masses themselves over their separate members. This was a true, unadulterated democracy, without a two-chamber system, without a professional bureaucracy, with the right of the voters to recall their representative at will and to substitute another."

At this point Olgin commented, "In short, it was the same type of democracy Trotsky and Lenin are trying to make permanent in present-day Russia."

crease promised to them by the Farmer-Labor organization.

The tactics of Mayor Latimer in using this police for the wholesale gassing, shooting and clubbing of workers were called to the attention of the Farmer-Labor party with a request that they expel Latimer from their ranks. Latimer's Employer-Employee Board was thoroughly analyzed and shown to be an artificial agency created for the purpose of usurping the rights of the unions and thereby stripping the movement of its growing progressiveness.

Delegates pointed to the growing need for the industrial form of union organization and told of the successes of several unions in working out a program of closer co-operation between trades. The conference adopted a proposal that this be made the policy of all local unions, and it was decided to hold the next conference on Wednesday, Oct. 30, at 1310 Marquette. An invitation was issued to all locals to participate in future conferences.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

H. R. N. V.—

Question: Certain Stalinists are today claiming that the designation of the social democracy as "social fascist" is merely a continuation, into modern times, of Lenin's characterization of the social democracy as "social chauvinist." What is there to this?

Answer: The Stalinists, who argue thus, are either new to the movement or short in memory. Otherwise, they are depending upon these shortcomings being present in their listeners.

First, as to the evolution of the theory of "social fascism." Its theoretical formulation was first propounded by Stalin: "Fascism is a fighting organization of the bourgeoisie, an organization that rests on the active support of the social democracy. Social democracy is objectively the moderate wing of fascism. . . . These organizations do not contradict each other, but complete each other. They are not antipodes but twins. . . . This 'definition' was made the basis of the program of the Comintern and the policy of the G.P.C. (See, for example, 'What Is Happening in Germany,' pp. 20-21, by Fritz Heckert, published June, 1933, by Workers Library Publishers). Essentially, therefore, the Stalinists claimed the social democracy to be fascist and, based on this formulation, the C.P.G. refused to make united fronts with the social democracy against Hitler. (How could united fronts be made with fascists against fascists?)

As life itself began to hammer this "theory" to bits, however, it became necessary to offer a more "reasonable" argument, which was woven through the main fabric like an excess thread. The social democracy is "social fascist" because it "paves" the way for fascism. (You will find that intellectuals like Strachey, who confuse Stalinism with Leninism, use, or have used, this rather than Stalin's original formulation.)

Now that the C. I. is "united fronting" with the social democracy at all costs, it is necessary that the term "social fascist" be forgotten as soon as possible. When reminded of it, the Stalinists dodge the issue by stating that the term is the same as Lenin's "social chauvinist," merely brought up to date; the inference being, of course, that the Stalinists never meant any more or less than did Lenin by the term.

Factually, there never was, and, theoretically, there never could be an evolution or equality between the terms "social chauvinism" and "social fascism" insofar as these express actual, and not imaginary, social phenomena. Lenin's characterization of the social democracy as "social chauvinist" is scientifically correct: The leaders of the social democratic parties claimed to stand for socialism and yet acted as chauvinists. Stalin's designation of the social democracy as "social fascist" is a fantastic distortion of Marxism. The social democratic leaders, who can be chauvinistic because this does not do away with their sinuities, cannot at the same time be fascists because this would imply that they stand for the abolition of the very organizations upon whose existence their political career depends. The after-thought that social democracy is "social fascist," because it objectively paves the way for fascism, is meaningless. Objectively, the road to fascism was prepared for by the whole course of capitalism, and, let us not forget, by the course of the Stalinist democracy, as well as the social democracy. It would obviously be ridiculous and merely play confusion upon confusion if we were, for this reason, to call capitalism "capital-fascism" and the Stalinists, "communist-fascists."

Between the formulations of Lenin and the stupidities of Stalin lies, not a continuation but an abyss.

L. Z. BRONX—

Question: Is it true that the C.I. under Lenin refused membership to anyone who subscribed to the idea that the League of Nations was an instrument which helped to maintain peace?

Answer: Point 6 of the 21 conditions for admission to the Third International, adopted at the second congress of the C.I. in 1920, stated: "Every party that wishes to belong to the Third International is obligated to unmask not only open social patriotism, but also the social honesty, and hypocrisy of social pacifism, and systematically bring to the attention of the workers the fact that, without the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, no kind of international court of arbitration, no kind of an agreement regarding the limitation of armaments, no kind of a 'democratic' renovation of the League of Nations will be able to prevent fresh imperialistic wars."

Point 21 stated: "Those party members who, on principle, reject the conditions and those laid down by the Communist International are to be excluded from the party. . . ."

PARTY AT WORK

CLEVELAND

The message of the new revolutionary party is spreading in Cleveland, as the following events will indicate.

Joe Pierce, who was looked upon by many Y.C.L.ers as a leading element, came over to the Spartacus Youth League after two years in the C.P. and Y.C.L.

A number of the youth are now wavering between the Y.C.L. and S.Y.L. The NEW MILITANT is passed around openly at Y.C.L. meetings.

The Socialist Unemployed Alliance invited the Stalinists into a united front against relief slashes, and the Stalinists suggested that the Unemployed League also participate. However, they struggled against allowing Foley, the organizer, to speak! Imagine one organization in a united front dictating the choice of speakers to another—and trying to bar its main leader at that. The face of the Unemployment Council secretary twitched convulsively when Foley insisted that if he were barred, Thurman, the first "renegade" of the Cleveland youth, must speak!

At the demonstration, the young "Trotskyite" speech was received warmly, and the NEW MILITANT sold like hotcakes.

The Workers Party headquarters will open soon, and the comrades are planning forums, lectures, classes, organizational meetings, etc. One Spartacus is organizing a discussion group among his schoolmates, others are planning union work.

Recently a lecture, "The Need for a New International," was delivered before thirty-five young people, largely Stalinist members and followers, at the Lakewood Youth League. Other mass organizations are planning to have W.P. lecturers in the future.

Mooney Trial Brings Out New Proofs of Innocence

SAN FRANCISCO—With their second week, the Mooney hearing sessions have really got under way. The most exciting moment of the week was the first meeting of Tom Mooney and Warren Billings since their trials in 1917. All minor differences of policy forgotten, the two famous frame-up victims threw their arms around each other and greeted each other in tears. Since he was permitted to come from Folsom and be present at the hearing, Billings' objections to testifying were relinquished, and he is doing his utmost to help Mooney in the court procedure that may in the end mean freedom for them both.

At the beginning of the week, Mooney was put on the stand again. The only remaining evidence offered directly by him, however, was the production of a long-lost letter from President Mahon of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, authorizing him officially to organize the United Railroads employees, and enclosing funds for his expenses. This disposes of the state's contention that Mooney did not have the support and co-operation of the union in his activities in the carmen's strike.

Weinberg on Stand

Weinberg was the next witness, having come all the way from Cleveland to testify. He told again the story of how Martin Swanson tried twice, in vain, to get him to help frame Mooney in connection with the San Bruno electric tower dynamiting, and how when he refused, Swanson threatened to "get him for that."

After Weinberg's arrest, Swanson sneered, "I said I'd get you, and I got you." Weinberg also threw considerable light on the methods of "identification" used by the police, telling—as have all the other witnesses—how the defendants were pointed out individually, by name, to persons brought in to identify them, and how the only time there was a real line-up, Goff made him put on a cap (all the other prisoners being bareheaded), and then whispered to the would-be identifier, "The man with the cap!" He stated that while he was in the county jail, a fellow-townsmen of his from his native place in Poland came to him with an offer from Ficket of $20,000 and his freedom if he would testify against Mooney. Clearly hastily moved that this be stricken from the records as hearsay, but the effect remained, and attempts are being made to locate this man, David Farber, and take his testimony if he is still alive.

Weinberg was followed by Ed Nolan, who came from his present home in Los Angeles. For a day Nolan gave rather routine testimony telling the off-repeated story of his arrest, the search of his home without a warrant, and the fake "identifications" to which he too was subjected. Then suddenly, on cross-examination by Cleary, he suggested that the hearing "get down to facts without so much mystery."

Testimony of Nolan

For the first time, he revealed that the various substances—clay, iron junk, etc.—found in his basement were his, that they consisted of welding compound used for him in experiments in a hardening process or soft steel, and that he accepted full responsibility for them. Mooney's key to his basement (where he kept his motorcycle) was not even in his possession while Nolan was in Baltimore at a convention during most of July, as it had been seized by the police when he was arrested in connection with the street car strike. Questioned by Cleary about the anarchist paper, The Blast, of which so much has been made by the prosecution, he cried, "I've been engaged all my man who, when told "Here's the man you saw," still refused to be stampeded—and was never called as a witness.

Cross-Examination of Billings

Under cross-examination, as the week's sessions closed, he was being grilled on his account of his doings on July 22, 1916, with special reference to his concealment of his sabotage activities. He insisted that this concealment was voluntary and individual, based on his belief that he could easily prove an alibi any way, and did not want to be involved in any trouble on account of sabotage. When Cleary accused him of "concealing evidence," because he destroyed the paper containing his notations of numbers of scab-painted cars on which he had squirted paint-remover, Billings retorted, "I didn't destroy nearly as much evidence as the district attorney did in my case!"

During the week testimony was read from 17 police officers stationed near Stuart and Market Streets that no car had passed down Market St. during the parade except the official car and an ambulance. Many of the long-lost documents and transcripts which never have been seen by the defense have now come to light and been handed over to them; but some are still missing, including Rena Mooney's first statement and Billings' note.

Wage Cuts Heaped on Phila. Dress and Blouse Workers

Wage cuts and lengthening of hours have been put over on the workers of the cotton dress and blouse industry of Philadelphia by the bosses without any real struggle on the part of the union leadership.

Before the Fall season began, a new manager came into the union and soon after a meeting of chairmen and chairladies of cotton dress shops was called for the purpose of taking up the matter of the increase in hours as demanded by the bosses' association.

This demand aroused the workers who were present and all spoke in favor of a struggle against it. The manager, however, thought that a fight at this time would be disastrous since the industry wasn't fully organized and tried to discourage any fighting spirit on the part of the workers, by stating that if you go too strong on the bosses they may move out of town. One big shop did move out, but the union persuaded it to return by granting them all sorts of concessions.

"Impartial" Chairman
The matter was finally taken before the "impartial" chairman. When some of the shop representatives questioned him about the possibility of a wage cut as well as increases in the hours, he vehemently declared against granting any wage cuts. But his decision was a typical "impartial" chairman's decision—that is, a boss' decision. The hours were increased from thirty-six to forty and a technical term was used for wage cuts which the workers did not find out until prices on new garments were made.

Meanwhile the blouse shops started to work and the bosses refused to settle prices on the old basis. They also wanted some concessions. All this time no membership meetings were called to acquaint the workers with the situation and all sorts of rumors arose. Weeks passed, nothing was done. Unsettled garments piled up and finally the workers forced the officialdom to call shop meetings. At these meetings, we were told that the joint board recommended a five per cent reduction.

A few stoppages were made but they were declared illegal since the two year agreement has a clause in it against stoppages and strikes. Finally the workers in some of the shops weakened and voted for a five per cent flat reduction. Of course, the other bosses took advantage of this and the reduction became official in a majority of the shops. Besides unofficial wage cuts are taking place in all the shops, amounting to twenty and thirty per cent.

Cliques in Union
In the midst of all this a factional struggle has been raging between two cliques in the union whose main object is control of the office; one of them, the former Reisberg faction, is supported by Dubinsky, and the other poses as a progressive group. In the elections that were held in spring, the so-called progressive action, supported by the Stalinist rank and file group, won the majority on the joint board.

The joint board is composed of the silk dress local, cutters and pressers as well as the cotton dress and blouse local; each are allowed five delegates.

Out of a membership of seven thousand, the cotton local numbering over four thousand, have only five mandates. The Reisberg faction controlling the Cotton Executive, used this disproportion for its own benefit and stirred up quite a number of workers to the point where there was talk of a split.

This struggle continued all Spring and finally culminated in the board requesting the resignation of Reisberg. Reisberg, manager of the Philadelphia local for fifteen years, has a record of class collaboration. The union membership dwindled down to a couple of hundred and it was almost put out of existence, until the strike of May 1933, when the workers responded in great masses to the call, much to the surprise of Reisberg and President Dubinsky as well.

Class Collaboration

While the workers were glad to be rid of this individual, Reisberg, nevertheless the members are now confronted with a leadership worse and more open in its policy of collaboration.

Collective bargaining, no struggle, the bosses might close up if we don't give in, is their song and dance at meetings. Two shops have a check-off system of collecting dues and there is talk of having it in every shop.

No effective militant opposition movement exists as yet in the union. The Stalinist controlled rank and file group helped this new leadership to get into power. They even swung the membership into voting for three business agents, when two are more than sufficient. There is great discontent with the present leadership and its policies, especially among the new elements in the union, and particularly in the cotton local, where a more militant attitude is being developed.

The Fall season will be over soon. A campaign must be started as soon as possible to organize the unorganized and to rally the union for a militant struggle in the Spring to regain our losses and obtain better conditions for the worker in the industry as this is the only guarantee for a strong union.

of truth, the precedent was set on August 4, 1914.

Litvinov's Role

October 3: An article on page 3 entitled "The Soviet Union Alone Fought Against Imperialist War at Geneva." How? "On April 17, the Council of the League adopted a resolution condemning Germany, then as now, openly rearming at a break-neck speed. . . . The Soviet delegate (Litvinov) at that time foresaw that the League was setting a very important precedent which could be later applied to Mussolini. . . . On April 18 the New York Times described Litvinov's action at Geneva as follows:

" . . . He raised the point that the proposed measures against the unilateral denunciation of treaties were applied only to European countries. . . . He wanted the Committee left free to propose measures for other than European countries."

"That is why it was no surprise that on September 5 at the Council of the League Maxim Litvinov rose to defend Ethiopia."

What can be said for this filthy hypocrisy? Ethiopia applied to the League in December, 1934. For more than eight months the delegate of the Soviet Union to the League "fought against imperialist war" and defended Ethiopia by . . . making a slight change in a resolution calculated to enable him to protest against the Ethiopian outrage months "later" whenever his French ally, Laval, thought it necessary. Not once during those

That this meeting of Langa workers unanimously pledges itself to support Abyssinia, the only remaining independent African state, against the proposed assault by Italian imperialism, and further pledges itself to do everything in its power to prevent the despatch of goods from Union ports to Italian troops in East Africa.

Both these resolutions were adopted with great enthusiasm by the meeting.

Questions followed, in which the workers expressed keen interest in the program of the Communist League.

When the five comrades were about to leave the location, they were charged with entering the location without a permit, and were warned that a summons would be issued against them.

Notwithstanding the close attention now being paid to them by the police and the Criminal Investigation Department, the comrades intend continuing their propaganda in the location. A mass meeting on the Abyssinian question has been called for the following Sunday.

The reactionary persecutions of the Fusion Government will not prevent the growth of the revolutionary movement in South Africa. The forces of the state cannot prevent the irresistible growth of the movement for the Fourth International.

To Lecture On AFL Conclave

The present convention of the American Federation of Labor will be analyzed in the first two lectures of a series to be conducted by A. J. Muste at the International Workers School. The series "Current Trends in America, Trade Union and Political" will open Wednesday evening, October 23 and continue the succeeding Wednesdays for 8 weeks.

A. J. Muste will be the speaker at the first three lectures which will include an examination of the past year of the A. F. of L., the deliberations and decisions of the Atlantic City convention, the prospects for the coming year and a detailed examination of unionization in the steel, automobile and rubber industries.

The lecturers for the remainder of the series will be announced later. The additional lectures are:

4. THE NEEDLE TRADES UNIONS AND THEIR ROLE IN THE AMERICAN TRADE UNION MOVEMENT. Wednesday, Nov. 13.
5. THE CAPITALIST POLITICAL PARTIES. Wed., Nov. 20.
6. THE THIRD PARTY MOVEMENTS. Wednesday, Nov. 27.
7. THE SOCIALIST PARTY IN THE U. S. Wednesday, Dec. 4.
8. THE COMMUNIST PARTY. Wednesday, Dec. 11.

The fee for the entire series is one dollar, fifty cents payable at time of registration, and fifteen cents per lecture.

Every Edition of Daily Worker Sinks Deeper into Social Patriotic Swamp whole eight months did Litvinov so much as mention Ethiopia by name, to say nothing of fighting imperialist war and defending colonial peoples. And the Stalinist delivers, obliged to find some action to bear out the title of their article can find nothing more than a quotation from the N. Y. Times (How does it happen that comrade Litvinov's intransigent struggle for peace and the defense of Ethiopia did not find its way into the Daily Worker?) to the effect that he amended a resolution so that it might include Ethiopia. . . . and still did not once mention Ethiopia by name, although her protests had been sent to the League four months before.

On September 5 France decided to take measures against Mussolini. . . . and Litvinov, agent of Stalin, who has now become the agent of Laval, rose to protest in the League. This was "no surprise" to the Stalinists who had followed Litvinov's eight month's battle against the invasion of Ethiopia, a battle consisting of a one line amendment to a resolution last April, with such breath-taking interest that they had completely neglected to mention it in the Daily Worker.

Sanctions and British Labor

October 4: Like a criminal returning to the scene of his crime, the Stalinists return to the question of sanctions. Not content with the somewhat clumsy treachery of M. Repard, they employ the services of a certain R. Bishop to explain away the fact that Stalin's International has become the puppet of imperialism. An article on page 6 treats of "The Line-up of British Labor on Mussolini's War Moves."

"Fenner Brockway, the leader of the Independent (Left Socialist) Labor Party says that the only sanctions that matter are 'working class sanctions' that the working class cannot demand that the National government should apply sanctions, as to do so would be to align the working class with the National government."

"The I.L.P. leadership has been stating that the Communist Party line means lining up with the National Government. This misrepresentation of facts (what misrepresentation?) was dealt with very effectively by Harry Pollitt (leader of the British C.P.). He said the National government is seeking to preserve its vital imperialist interests on the one hand, and to cover this up by pretending to be a defender of peace on the other. Unless the fight for the independence of Ethiopia is accompanied by the most convincing exposure of the responsibility of the National government for the present tense international situation, a position can easily result which the National government will turn to its benefit at the coming election. The line of the Labor Party unfortunately helps the National government in this respect."

Covering Up the Tracks

This quotation, and this quotation alone, which is given in full, is said by the Stalinist, Bishop, to deal "very effectively with Brockway's (perfectly correct) misrepresentation of facts." Where? How? What has Pollitt to say on the question of sanctions? Only that the C.P. is prepared to "expose" the National government while supporting it in the application of sanctions, that is, handing the workers over to the service of British imperialism to be slaughtered in war.

Pollitt's "effective" answer boils down to a very effective exposure of the degenerate aims of Stalinism. Sell the workers to the imperialist government, send the workers into a new world war, that's all right, but be sure to cover up the tracks by criticizing the National government.

October 5: Harry Gannes takes up the question of sanctions: "With war raging, the line-up for and against sanctions has become crystal clear."

"All the Fascist nations . . . are lined up solidly against sanctions. In Britain and France the Fascist Mosleys and de la Roques are bitterly against sanctions. Confused elements in the labor movement play into the hands of these forces. On behalf of real collective effective sanctions are: The Soviet Union . . . the growing united forces of the world labor movement."

Playing the Fascists' Game

Harry Gannes makes of his own betrayal an argument for further betrayal. Because the Socialist Internationals have betrayed the workers into supporting the sanction policy of their imperialist governments Gannes is able to say that the labor movement is for sanctions. Perhaps Mr. Gannes has not read the New York Herald-Tribune which only the other day commented upon the situation in France. For the first time in history, said that reactionary paper, the parties of the Left are for war, and the parties of the Right, the Fascists, opposed to war. The latter are capitalizing on the peace sentiments of the people. The Stalinists are not only selling the workers out to imperialism, but they are playing directly into the hands of the Fascists! By their persistently false and fruitless policies the Stalinists drive disillusioned workers to Fascism . . . but this is a startlingly clear example, almost unparalleled in the history of Stalinism. The Fascists are able to put on a "peace" front and win over workers directly from the "sanction" front of the Stalinists. This Harry Gannes considers a victory for Stalinism. Workers who oppose this policy are "confused," they don't understand why Harry Gannes is for imperialist war.

October 6: The Daily Worker goes into a veritable frenzy of League of Nations patriotism. Headlines of page one read: "Sanctions Are Demanded Against Italy; U.S. S.R. Bars Imperialist Deal Says Pravda." "British Communist Leader Presses for Sanctions." And a front page report of a Fascist rally in Paris states:

"Shouting, 'We don't want to be League of Nations Soldiers,' the Fascists marched through the streets in military formation." There is something for the Stalinists to wax indignant over, imagine, the Fascists are opposed to becoming soldiers of the League of Nations! Not the C.P. Their slogan is "Every Stalinist a soldier of the League of Nations!" Or rather, "Every worker," for recruiting sergeants never go to war.

Page 7: The Daily Worker overcomes the hesitations of another worker, who writes to ask: "Does not the support of sanctions by the Communists result in their helping British imperialism at the expense of Italian imperialism?" Answer: "Yes, of course. But that isn't the way the Daily Worker answers:

"This does not mean that Communists support British imperialism. . . . Communists have no illusions about the 'peacefulness' of British imperialism. They continue to press for the imposition of sanctions to save Ethiopia, but at the same time they expose the imperialist aims of the British ruling class," etc., etc. Everything but a direct answer to the question. But how the Stalinists are going to expose the government they are supporting they do not reveal. If they do expose British imperialism they expose themselves; if they don't, they simply grease the ways for the labor movement into the army. Which they are doing.

"Forcing" the Imperialists

On the last page is a streamer editorial of which the headline is sufficient: "League Must Be Forced to Act Against Mussolini's Robber War." Typical. Everywhere the Stalinists speak of forcing; the British government is forced to protect its colonies, the French government is forced to protect the Versailles Treaty, the League of Nations is to be forced to protect the interests of its dominant member imperialists. A pathetic attempt to cover up their treachery. They propagate the absurd lie that the workers are fighting against the imperialists on the question of sanctions! In a few more months they will demand that the workers force their way into the imperialist army! And this is no fantasy. In France they demand the removal of "Fascist" elements from the army staff! What is the next step? Stalinists will force their way into the positions vacated by the "Fascists." October 7: An editorial on sanctions, another one. Can it be that the "monolithic" party is not swallowing the Stalin-Laval communique?

"Ethiopia has put the question of sanctions squarely on the order of the day at the League of Nations. . . . Ethiopia, whose people are being slaughtered by the Fascist invaders, seems to have a different conception of its interests than certain people who persist in condemning sanctions."

A Prophetic Editorial

The "certain people" above are the followers of Lenin who resolutely oppose all imperialist war. There is something prophetic about this editorial; merely change the names a bit and you get an editorial from the Daily Worker a few months from now. Germany has invaded France (or vice versa):

France has put the question of war squarely on the order of the day before the American people.

France whose people are being slaughtered by the Fascist invaders seems to have a different conception of its interests than certain people who persist in condemning war.

The editorial continues: "Does it make sense to say that Ethiopia can fight so valiantly on its own soil and at the same time surrender to the imperialists at Geneva? When the opponents of sanctions claim that sanctions bolster imperialism it just doesn't make sense."

The Communist Party has now reached the stage of bankruptcy in which it takes its line from the Emperor of Abyssinia. If the Emperor supports sanctions why shouldn't we? says the Daily Worker. The last line of the editorial reads: "And Ethiopia, directly involved in the struggle, by her actions supports the policy of the Communist Party." (!)

So the party of the proletariat, in the greatest industrial country of the world, in the last stages of capitalist decay, is happy to announce that its line is endorsed by the feudal Emperor of Ethiopia, in the most backward semi-nomadic state of the world, barely on the threshold of civilization in any form. What an endorsement! That proves the line is right!

Shaking Heads With Green

Coming events cast their shadows before. On October 8, after seven days of preparing the workers for war, preparing them by examples from foreign lands, the Daily Worker comes home. A front page article on the A. F. of L. convention begins with a significant bulletin: "Washington, Oct. 7.—As William Green, President of the A. F. of L. finished his convention speech in which he advocated sanctions against Italy in the name of the convention, Samuel R. Salomonick, trade union organizer of the New York Committee Against War and Fascism, who was seated on the platform with Green, stepped forward and congratulated Green in the name of the League."

Think it over, Stalinist workers. Are you ready to be voluntary cannon fodder of American imperialism in the impending world war? That is the real question put squarely before you by the treacherous policy of Stalinism.

Mass Meeting

Unite Against Imperialist War DEFEND THE ETHIOPIAN PEOPLE

WORKERS!

Imperialist Italy is conducting a robber war against the Ethiopian people.

The Ethiopians are fighting, arms in hand, for the right of national self-determination; for freedom from imperialist control.

Roosevelt, like his predecessor Wilson, speaks about "neutrality" while he goes full speed ahead with the greatest military program the United States government has ever had!

The League of Nations, imperialist instrument of France and England, has decided to invoke "sanctions," penalties against Italy. Imperialist sanctions cannot defend the Ethiopian people or prevent a new world war.

Sanctions is only the preparations for the new international conflagration.

Both the Socialist and Stalinist Internationals defend the policy of imperialist sanctions. Both have pledged themselves to support the capitalist governments in this policy. This means support to the new imperialist war.

The social-patriotic course of social democracy in 1914-1918 is now the policy of the Socialist and Stalinist parties!

Organize against imperialist war! Defend the Ethiopian people! Rally against social patriotism! Help force the instruments for the revolutionary struggle against imperialist war and capitalism, the Workers Party and the Fourth International!

Green - Woll Forces Suffer Heavy Setback At AFL Convention

Rift Among Fakers Gives Industrial Unionism an Opportunity; Red Resolution May Fail to Pass

By A. J. MUSTE

The fortunes of battle ebb and flow at Atlantic City in this most exciting convention of the American Federation of Labor since the war. While the convention is still in progress as we go to press and a definitive evaluation must wait until its close, certain assertions can safely be made as a result of the events of the last couple of days. The rift in the leadership between the Green-Woll and Lewis-Hillman-Dubinsky, etc. forces is out in the open. There will be a more open and intense struggle between various tendencies in the Federation during the coming year than at any time since the early 1920's. Thereby genuine progressive and militant elements are given a magnificent opportunity, if they know how to take advantage of it.

The old guard received a stunning blow when John L. Lewis arose in the dramatic fashion he knows so well how to use and asked (after the regular time for presenting resolutions had expired) for unanimous consent to introduce two resolutions. Amid electric tension two die-hard old guard leaders, Wharton of the Machinists and Coveleski of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers, objected unless the resolutions were first read.

The Slam at Woll

Thus the drama was heightened, which undoubtedly was just what

MUSTE SPEAKS ON A. F. OF L. CONVENTION

A. J. Muste will speak on "Lessons of the Atlantic City Convention of the A. F. of L." on Sunday evening, October 27 at Irving Plaza Hall, Irving Place and 15th Street, N.Y.C.

Lewis wanted. His first and most important resolution, which after his reading of it was referred to the Resolutions Committee, would forbid any officer of the A. F. of L. from holding membership or office in the National Civil Federation, the peace-between-capital-and-labor organization founded by Mark Hanna, which in recent years, with Matthew Woll as acting president and the notorious Ralph Basley as secretary, has specialized in red-baiting and other forms of extreme Toryism. The Lewis resolution was, of course, aimed primarily at Woll himself, leading spokesman and strategist of the old line craft unionists in the convention. To smear Woll as one primarily identified with an organization outside the labor movement and against which a deep resentment existed at least in many of the unions, and thereby to deprive the craft unionists of their right to claim that they are the only sincere pillars of trade unionism, was Lewis' aim.

That his shot took effect in a vital spot was indicated when only a few hours later Woll announced that he had resigned from the National Civil Federation! Never, at least in the past 30 years has a leader of Woll's prominence in the A. F. of L. "lost face" so swiftly and thoroughly.

Not only was this a blow at the craft unionists' position but Lewis' stroke also served to discredit the "red baiting" proposals of Woll and Company and the indications now are that the two-thirds vote necessary to pass the amendment to the A. F. of L. constitution barring all "Communists" from membership will not be obtained, and that at best the old guard will be able to put over some comparatively mild resolution against the "reds."

Industrial Unionism Edged Out

On the other hand, as the NEW MILITANT predicted last week, the advocates of a clear-cut resolution for industrial unionism in the mass production industries proved too optimistic in their expectation that they could get a majority in this

Plan Fight For Herndon

Georgia Negro Is Given "Death" Sentence on Chain Gang

The refusal of the U. S. Supreme Court to rehear the case of Angelo Herndon has given added importance to the work of the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense. It was stated yesterday by Mary Fox, secretary of the newly formed defense body which includes representatives of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the League for Industrial Democracy, the General Defense Committee, the International Labor Defense and several other defense bodies.

In addition to holding a conference in New York on October 19, the Committee is planning a variety of activities to push the signing of petitions and to increase the pressure on Governor Eugene Talmadge of Georgia for the release of Herndon. The Committee has already issued a pamphlet, "Wisdom, Justice and Moderation—Motto of the State of Georgia," which tells the story of the Herndon case. Copies may be obtained from Pioneer Publishers, 100 Fifth Ave., at 2 cents each.

The Herndon case deserves the support of all militant working-class elements. Tried under an old "slave insurrection" law, Herndon was convicted for the crime of organizing white and black unemployed together in Atlanta and fighting for better relief. His conviction was a blow at organized labor and all elements who dare challenge the existing social order of the Jim Crow South.

The U. S. Supreme Court hides behind technicalities in order to evade the real issue. This body, which some people praised so highly for its attitude in the Scottsboro case, lines up in the Herndon case with the Bourbon rulers of Georgia. The latest Supreme Court decision is really a sentence of death against Herndon, since few if any people have ever lived through 20 years on a Georgia chain gang.

Tarov Relates Torture of Real Bolsheviks in Stalin's Prisons

By A. TAROV

Hundreds and thousands of Bolshevik-Leninists are languishing in Stalinist prisons. Only yesterday I was one of them, and together with them I underwent every conceivable brutality at the hands of the Stalinist jail keepers. Today I find myself in a semi-capitalist country, a "free man." Sad to say, it seems to me that there is no free spot for a revolutionist on our planet. But for better or worse, today I have the opportunity to speak out publicly in protest against the Stalinist usurpers. My duty as a revolutionist obliges me to turn to the world proletariat with an appeal for help to free from the Stalinist jails the devoted and true revolutionists, the martyrs—the Bolshevik-Leninists. The world proletariat must learn that the land of Soviets as such is perishing imperceptibly, for Soviet power is unthinkable without a party of active and self-reliant Communists. That is why the struggle for a genuine Communist party, the struggle against the usurpers and the plebeian regime is a struggle for the salvation of the Soviet system from fatal degeneration.

To acquaint the working class with the condition of the Bolshevik-Leninists in the U.S.S.R. under the Stalinist regime, I intend to sketch briefly my own personal experience, in its unvarnished form. On June 30, 1934 I escaped from exile, from the city of Andijan, having in view

Partners in Social-Patriotic Betrayal

The Stalinists find yeoman support in their battle for sanctions in the New Leader, New York organ of the Old Guard Socialists. The New Leader, an old hand at reformism, gives a much clearer theoretical and practical explanation of the sanctions policy than the novice Daily Worker. It is in the New Leader that the real basis, purpose, and effect of the sanctions policy is made all too clear. We quote from the issue of October 12:

"With the exception of small extremist groups who take the Trotskyist position that the Socialist parties and labor must reject any cooperation with democratic governments and the League of Nations in its efforts to curb Fascist Italy, organized labor throughout the world through its political and economic organizations has taken a determined stand in favor of sanctions and armed resistance, if need be, to the war policies of Mussolini and Hitler, placing itself squarely behind the League. . . .

"Only small groups of utopian isolationists, embracing the Trotskyist position . . . fail to see the issue in this light."

Here is a clear and unashamed exposition of the social democratic position on war, manifested at present in support of government sanctions. Before we deal with it in detail it is important to note: The social democratic betrayers who have moved not one inch from the traitors' role of 1914, now at the approach of a new 1914, distinguish themselves in this fundamental question only from "the small extremist Trotskyists."

A military writer once remarked that "war is merely the continuation of politics by other means." Add to that the dictum that "Politics is merely the extension of economics on another plane," and you have the basis for a Marxian analysis of the war question.

In the period of imperialism, the present period, the economies of the various capitalist nations are in constant conflict in their efforts to expand. No matter what political form they may take these economic conflicts never cease for a moment. Now they take the form of a "peaceful" struggle for markets, now a diplomatic struggle, now a warlike struggle. Politics is merely the outward form of this struggle which, change as it may, cannot do away with the struggle.

War is one of the political forms of this struggle. War is not some exceptional phenomena, it is simply the logical outcome ("the extension") of the struggle. In the imperialist epoch war is almost incessant; sometimes in the form of mere diplomatic threats, sometimes in the form of economic boycotts, sometimes as colonial expeditions, sometimes as open large scale war.

The treachery of both the Stalinists and the social democrats begins when they regard war as some extraordinary event, some political phenomena apart from and exceptional to the ordinary run of politics. (Continued on Page 4)

Britain - Italy Threaten War For Control of The Mediterranean

N. Y. Mass Meet On War Crisis

In response to the grave danger of a new imperialist war flowing from the League of Nations policy of sanctions and the need for solidarity with the Ethiopian people against Italy's rubber war, the New York District of the Workers Party has called a mass rally for Sunday evening, October 20, at Irving Plaza Hall, Irving Place and 15th Street.

Maurice Spector, former member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International and one of the pioneers of the present movement for the Fourth International, will be the main speaker.

France Caught Between Two Fires; Germany Waits Opening

The flare-up in Ethiopia is rapidly taking on the proportions of a world conflagration. Inside of less than a month the smokescreen behind the colonial "incident" has cleared up and the real contenders in the struggle have become fully revealed. It is now evident that we are confronted not merely with a case of national rape but with a major inter-imperialist struggle.

Great Britain and Italy are at each other's throats in a fight for control of the Mediterranean.

Fascist Italy at least embarked upon the conquest of the much heralded new Roman Empire. For more than one reason, it Duce's decision is irrevocable. The Mediterranean is the indispensable gateway to empire. British imperialism, in control of the Mediterranean for generations, must maintain control of the route to her plundered possessions in India, Australia and Far East as a matter of self-preservation.

Faced with a national economy declining to ever new lows and the first symptoms of internal rebellion, the Fascist dictatorship has grasped at the Ethiopian adventure with the frenzy of a drowning man grabbing for a straw. That the blackshirts were not unaware of the impending clash with the British colossus is evidenced by the fact that from the first day of the invasion the entire Italian press has been conducting a systematic agitation against England, largely as a protective measure to stiffen the backbone of their own hosts in preparation for the worst eventually.

England Acts Rapidly

The cagy statesmen at Downing Street have likewise worked overtime to check the desperate offensive of the Fascist upstarts. Without any serious opposition they have cloaked their campaign for imperial self-preservation with the moral authority of the League of Nations. They have even involved France—for whom, as the major beneficiary of the Versailles system, Italy is just as important an ally as England—in a policy of sanctions against Mussolini carried through with such speed and sweep as to leave the diplomats of the Quai d'Orsay in an extremely embarrassing position. They have countered Mussolini's invasion and the troop movements of the Fascist General Staff with the complete militarization of Egypt and their other colonial possessions in Africa and with the greatest naval concentration in the Mediterranean since the last world war. The battle lines between the two imperialist powers have been drawn. Both sides are prepared to plunge wildly into the new holocaust.

The French imperialists, whose whole system of security hinges today upon the task of bringing about an Italo-British rapprochement, have been left floundering in the midst of an internal crisis. Rome has rejected any and all suggestions of retreat. The British have refused Laval's mediation in the naval conflict. The French bourgeoisie is thrown into a terrific turmoil by the diplomatic dilemma. The cabinet of M. Laval is due for a fall in the midst of the strife between the pro-British and the pro-Fascist factions.

The rest of the European nations are drawn into the same vortex of conflicting currents. Nazi Germany maintains a "neutrality" that has its eye peeled for the prospects of entering the fray with an attack in the direction of its formidable Eastern neighbor. Japan is threatening. Japs Plotting China Grab

Threat of U.S. War Over Market Snatch During African Trouble

By LO SEN

Echoes from Ethiopia, bringing nearer to Europe the thunder of a new imperialist world war, have already resounded ominously against the troubled sounding board of Asia. Japanese imperialism, in the full stride of its own expansion on the Asiatic continent, has displayed its readiness to squeeze the last drop of advantage out of Europe's preoccupation with the crisis precipitated by Mussolini's African adventure.

The "utilization" of imperialist contradictions is by no means, unfortunately, the exclusive monopoly of "realistic" Stalinist bureaucrats. Events of the past week along the China coast and at the Soviet-Manchukuo frontier already offer sufficient assurance that the crisis cannot develop much further in Europe without leading to new explosions in Asia.

Japan Moves In

Great Britain, as part of her hurried preparations to counter Italy's African advance, has transferred practically her entire Asiatic fleet from its China station to the Mediterranean and Red Sea ports. The response of Japanese imperialism was so prompt as to be almost automatic. A strong Japanese flotilla dropped anchor in the harbor of Swatow, a Kwangtung port in the

By A. WEAVER

A.V.D., NEW YORK—Question: The Lovestones (see the "Workers Age" of Oct. 12) claim that the accusation that the C.I. can be guilty of an "August 4th" in its war position is unjustifiable because of the "distinctions between the limited false war position of the C.I. and the unlimited false war position of the Labor and Socialist International" and because of "the very existence of the U.S.S.R. as the base of the world revolution, as a class state constructing socialism. . . ." What is there to this?

Answer: Lovestone is in the position of the marriage broker who was attempting to interest a young man in marrying a certain young girl. The youth, beauty, and financial resources of the young lady were so promising that the young man became suspicious and insisted that there was a catch to the proposition. After at first denying that there was the least matter with the girl, the broker, under the pressure of further questioning, finally admitted that the girl did have a slight failing, the slightest of failings; she was a wee bit, only the least bit . . . pregnant. So with the Communist Party (Opposition), the C.I.'s war position is false, but only "slightly" false.

An examination of Lovestone's ideas as to what constitutes a "limitedly false" position is interesting. We quote from the above mentioned issue of Workers Age where he makes the following four points:

Point 1: "The C.I.'s errors are limited only to the field of a mixed war; the U.S.I.'s errors pervade all types of wars today. . . ." This is tantamount to saying that the C.I. will betray the workers only in those countries which may be the temporary ally of the Soviet Union, whereas the Second International betrays the workers in all countries. The contention is false, however. It is impossible to betray the workers in certain countries and maintain a revolutionary position in others at the same time.

Point 2: "With the C.I. beginnings (???) of dangers towards national defense practices are strictly limited, may be resorted to for a time as a means of helping the U.S.S.R. False and harmful as the recourse to such tactics of helping the U.S.S.R. are, their motive is totally different from that of the motive animating International Social Democracy. . . ." In order to replace Marxism with psychology, Lovestone distorts the truth miserably. When the Socialist Party of Germany voted to support the war credits in 1914, they also claimed that it was necessary to do so to prevent the proletarian organizations from being destroyed; i.e., the betrayal of the proletariat by the Stalinists in the "interests" of the proletarian state stands on precisely the same level as the betrayal of the proletariat by the social democracy in the "interests" of the proletarian organizations. None of the socialist parties have ever openly advocated that the workers support imperialism. They were "motivated" by the need of defending "democracy" against Prussian militarism, or against Czarist autocracy, etc., etc. Today the Stalinists are "motivated" by the need of defending the "remnants of bourgeois democracy" against fascism, etc. Hell, for the proletariat, is paved with such "motives," which are identical in the Stalinist and social democratic bureaucracies: Each proceeds from the point of view of its own special interests.

Point 3: "Even in this deviation, the C.I.'s approach, the Comintern's viewpoint is international, while the attitude of the L.S.I. is thoroughly nationalist, dyed-in-the-wool social chauvinist." This is truly a remarkable statement, which, if it has meaning at all, can only mean that the Stalinists are betraying the proletariat on an international, i.e., on a wholesale scale, whereas the social democracy is doing it piece meal.

Point 4: "The C.I. is guilty of attempting a distortion, for a brief period (???) of sound principle; the L.S.I. is definitely committed to a completely false principle in the entire question of war." What, in politics, is the distinction between a betrayal over a "brief" or over a long period of time? Only a Jesuit could answer this. What Lovestone is attempting to claim, as indicated by the word "beginnings" in his Point 2, is that the C.I.'s "distortion," in principle, began with its present war position, a conclusion which naturally flows from his contention that the errors of the C.I. to date were limited to some incorrect tactics.

Insomuch, however, as the betrayal of the workers by the C.I. can be compared to the "August 4th" of the Second International, this occurred over two years ago with the capitulation before Hitler in Germany. The C.I.'s war position is thus not the first but one of a series of betrayals.

Nor does Lovestone's reference to the Soviet Union as quoted in your question make his position any

Buffalo WPA Workers Out On Restrike

Pauper Wage Levels Drive Men to More Militant Struggle

By CYRUS RIGBY
BUFFALO, N. Y.—The expressed policy of relief officials to "wait watchfully" and "starve out" the Buffalo WPA strikers last week came to grief through a new and inexorable solidarity of the unemployed. Women and children not only attended the meetings but also came out on the picket lines to march beside their husbands and fathers. A strike meeting held on October 7 was attended by well over 1,000 workers.

Sargeon G. Johnson acted as chairman and among the many speakers were William F. Sidman, chairman of the strike committee, and Thomas Dixon of Chicago. A pledge was made by those present to carry on the fight until they should win a living wage for themselves and families.

Police Brutality
During the week police tactics became more and more brutal, although the almost too passive actions of the pickets gave them excuse for only bullying instead of the murderous skullduggery for which Buffalo police are notorious. Mounted police would ride along the picket lines and reach over to snatch off the strike slogans pinned on the workers' chests and sleeves. Then the officer would slap the hapless picket square across the face several times before urging his horse toward him until the worker retreated. Women who remained on the picket line were subjected to the same intimidating treatment. But in spite of threats and official violence the strikers stood firm in their determination not to starve.

A local organization, the Citizens Unemployed Relief League, had previously been formed and this body sent a wire to President Roosevelt protesting against the use of stoopingtons against them as well as against the conditions which made the strike inevitable. The Administration's reply was a warning that all workers who did not show up on their respective jobs on Oct. 11 would be deprived of all relief. The ultimatum was issued by Daniel W. Streeter of ERB who further attached a number of conditions impossible for the workers to accept. Some jobs had been operated all week by scabs under police protection, but on these jobs there were always about as many cops as ERB or WPA workers.

Streeter's insulting public threat frightened a few strikers into returning to their jobs on the date of the deadline. Most of them, however, remained only long enough to persuade others to join the walk-out. A few hundred actually resumed work. That evening relief officials and police announced to the press that the strike had been broken.

No Settlement At All
But none of the conditions which forced the strike had been settled. It was still necessary for workers to accept the starvation wages of $55 a month, so their temporary return to work was without meaning and shortlived as soon as they realized that it meant continuation of utterly impossible living conditions. Within a few hours the walkout began again, this time taking hundreds more than on previous days. On Monday 500 workers from the Lackawanna slag pit, which was the first job where women as well as men picketed the week before, dropped their tools and marched in a body to the nearest relief job in Buffalo proper. Here they began mass picketing and were able to persuade most of the workers on that project to join them before police intervened with the use of clubs. The effectiveness of mass picketing and flying squadrons, however, had been proved during the days before, so now the strike had reached the point where the workers were ready to employ modern methods of strike warfare. The second WPA strike in New York State continues!

The existence of the Soviet Union as a workers' state has not prevented the Stalinist betrayals. The existence of the Hitler regime is sufficient proof of this. On the contrary, the bureaucracy, by usurping the prestige of the October revolution, and cloaking itself with it, has had a comparatively easy time of deceiving the workers. It is only by his identification of the workers' state with the Stalinist bureaucracy that Lovestone can conclude as he does.

The actors and the staging are different but otherwise there is difference between the betrayals of the Second and of the Third Internationals, and Lovestone merely makes the feeble attempt at finding a distinction in favor of the latter in order to justify his attempt to crawl back into it.

RALLY SUPPORT FOR THE EIGHT PAGE NEW MILITANT!

INT'L YOUTH BUREAU COLLAPSES

German S.A.P. Centrists Expel I.C.L. Youth Representative

Following is an account by the representative of the International Communist League of the ill-fated attempt to set up a new youth international, through the medium of the International Youth Bureau and in common with various centrist organizations. Its disruption and final extinction, in actual fact, can be laid directly at the door of the S.A.P. whose life work has become the struggle against the Fourth International even if the most opportunist and even treacherous alliances are necessary for this purpose. It can confidently be asserted that the death of the Youth Bureau is merely a setback—its experience was rich in lessons—for the forces of the Fourth International are everywhere gathering in size and importance. —Ed.

By W. HELD

The International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth was founded in February 1934 at the International Youth Conference at Laren, Holland, then at Lille (in reality, Brussels). There were represented at the conference: the I.C.L. youth, the Spartacus Youth League of the United States, the two Dutch youth organizations of the O.S.P. and the R.S.P., not yet united at this time, the German S.J.V. (affiliated to the Socialist Workers Party, S.A.P.), the Young Workers of Norway (N.A.P.), and the Norwegian Mot Dag group. Immediately after its opening, the conference was dissolved by the Dutch police and the foreign participants were expelled to Germany, the others deported to Belgium. Two of the comrades, Bobzien and Lieberman, delivered to Germany, were in the meantime condemned to long prison terms. (It goes without saying that our solidarity with these comrades and the struggle for their liberation will be carried on as before with all our energy despite the liquidation of the youth bureau.) After the expulsion, the remaining delegates convened in Brussels. The discussion, in the main, took place between the representatives of the S.A.P. and the I.C.L., the latter struggling primarily for a clear and precise expression in favor of a new international of the youth in the framework of the Fourth International. After some ardent debates on this question, two passages along this line were added to the resolution proposed by the German S.J.V. But we, on our side, committed a serious error. The arrests and the joint expulsion from Holland had produced a conciliatory spirit and we talked to implement the declarations of the S.J.V. for the new international with the necessary organizational guarantees. We accepted the creation of the International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth Organizations with Stockholm as headquarters. The Secretariat was composed of a representative of the German S.J.V., the Swedish S.J.V. and the I.C.L. (It is true the Swedes were not themselves present at the conference, although their acceptance was confirmed by the representatives of the German S.J.V. and by the Mot Dag group). The Young Workers of Norway had left the conference before the resolutions were adopted and later displayed hostility to the creation of the Youth Bureau.

Sabotage from the Start
After the arrival of the I.C.L. representative in Scandinavia he discovered that the Swedes had no intention at all of taking any responsibility for the Secretariat and that they opposed with all their might the residence of the I.C.L. representative in Stockholm. The German S.J.V. had also forgotten the conciliatory spirit of the Brussels conference and supported the Swedes in their negative attitude. They suggested the absurd proposition of scattering the Secretariat over three distant cities, separated from each other by several days of travelling and concentrating the practical work in the hands of the representative of the German S.J.V. This was categorically refused. Finally a compromise was found. The work of the Secretariat was concentrated in another Scandinavian locality and the Mot Dag group of Norway, an organization friendly to the Swedish Youth, was instructed to represent the latter. The work of the Secretariat went on—always hampered by internal conflict. In the autumn of 1934, for example, at a session of the Bureau at Copenhagen, the representative of the S.J.V. with the assistance of the Mot Dag group and the Swedish S.J.V., tried again to remove the I.C.L. from the Secretariat.

However, these internal conflicts did not reach their peak until after the pitiful conference of the International Community of Labor of the S.A.P. in February, 1935 in Paris, where the S.A.P. for the first time openly expressed its hostility to the Fourth International. It is true that Brandt as the representative of the Youth Bureau endeavored to fill up the breach by voting for the resolution presented by the Dutch delegates in favor of the New International as well as for the opposite resolution of the S.A.P. However, in the discussion he did not fail to join in the trades of the S.A.P. against the Fourth International. This attitude brought forth protests from the organizations affiliated to the I.C.L. A motion was presented to reorganize and enlarge the secretariat by a representative of the R.S.J.V. (the organization emerging from the unity of the two Dutch organizations), and the Bolshevik-Leninist youth fraction of the French Socialist Youth. Following this the Secretariat of the Youth Bureau decided to convene a session of the Bureau to deal with these questions, with the participation of all the organizations affiliated to the Bureau.

Betrayal Intervenes
In the meantime, however, it was impossible to continue the work of the old Secretariat for another reason. The coming to power of the Norwegian Labor Party had completely unmasked the opportunist character of the Mot Dag group. The Norwegian Labor Party in power carried on a completely bourgeois policy similar to that of the Swedish and Danish social democrats. Instead of fighting the monstrous treachery of the N.A.P., which previously had taken on a radical coloration, and instead of organizing the opposition, the Mot Dag group sought a "theoretical" justification of the betrayal. Besides they declared their agreement with the Stalin-Laval declaration and with the preparation of the union sacree by the French Stalinists. It was therefore no longer possible to collaborate with this group. Horrified by this degeneration, the representative of the German S.J.V. swung to the left by signing, together with the I.C.L. representative, a letter to the Swedish S.J.V., calling upon the latter to disavow its Mot Dagist representative in the Youth Secretariat. The Swedes did not reply to this letter and consequently the work of the Secretariat was suspended. Once again they called for a session under the chairmanship of the Swedish Youth and once again, as before, it was postponed. In the meantime the Swedes did not show any inclination to terminate their friendship with Mot Dag and proved this fact on every occasion (collaboration of the Mot Dag people in the Swedish press, etc.) But the representative of the German S.J.V. also changed his mind by placing in the background the struggle against Mot Dag and once again turning on the I.C.L. In an interview which helped to prepare the session of the Secretariat with the Swedish Youth he declared that the differences between the I.C.L. and the S.J.V. were of a more deep-going character than those between the S.J.V. and Mot Dag.

On August 18 the session of the Secretariat was finally held. The representative of the German S.J.V. again opposed placing the question of the Mot Dag group as the first point on the agenda and insisted that they deal with the differences between the I.C.L. and the Youth Bureau. He stated that the version of his statement as quoted above to be inexact in this form. He had wanted to say that the differences on the one hand with the I.C.L. and on the other with Mot Dag existed on two entirely different planes. But the entire proceedings of this session of the Secretariat gave confirmation to our version.

Touching Solidarity
The representative of the I.C.L., speaking on the first point of the agenda, believed necessary a reorganization of the youth movement in the framework of the Fourth International and demanded that the Youth Bureau sign the Open Letter to the Fourth International. He demanded the immediate expulsion of Mot Dag and the reorganization of the Secretariat, since the situation had become absolutely impossible through the refusal of the Swedish organization to take responsibility for the Secretariat in Stockholm. The delegate of the German S.J.V. replied by a furious and subjective attack against the I.C.L., surpassing even the fantastic lies of the S.A.P. pamphlet, "Trotskyism or Realistic Revolutionary Policy." Finally he posed the following conditions to the representative of the I.C.L.: To disassociate itself from the attacks of the I.C.L. press against the Youth Bureau and to sever its connections with the work of the International Youth Secretariat of the I.C.L. The Mot Dagist present (to repeat again: this organization is in agreement with the reformist policy of the Norwegian Labor Party as well as with Stalin's French policy) declared its accord with the speech of the representative of the German S.J.V. against the I.C.L. And besides it had to be the representative of this notorious organization to pretend that the I.C.L. is ruining the workers' movement! Similarly the chairman of the Swedish S.J.V. limited his few remarks to approving the speech of the delegate of the S.A.P. Then the representative of the I.C.L. once more took the floor to say among other things:

The Bolshevik Position
"I especially enjoyed the remarks of the representative of Mot Dag because he demonstrated in a convincing fashion that every opportunist and treacherous group can hide behind the struggle of the S.A.P. against the I.C.L. I completely solidarize myself with the attacks of the I.C.L. against the present policy of the majority of the Secretariat. By the same token I am responsible for the policy of the Secretariat of the I.C.L. youth. I am ready to admit an error in the fact which occurred the section dealing with the Youth Bureau in the article 'Centrist Alchemy or Marxism?' appearing in No. 5 of Unser Wort and the July issue of the NEW INTERNATIONAL. The Youth Bureau was not founded with the N.A.P. but with Mot Dag, which organization has the disadvantage of meaning nothing with regard to the N.A.P., while the N.A.P. represents almost the entire Norwegian working class. As for the political side the articles were 100 percent correct. If the Youth Bureau continues to work in its present manner it will only be another edition of the Amsterdam Bureau, whose work has only now been so strikingly characterized by P. J. Schmidt, up till now its secretary. The most obvious example proving the correctness of our attacks is given by this session itself. The German S.J.V. delegate could find not a word against Mot Dag and calmly accepted the Mot Dag repetition of the S.A.P. arguments. It has completely solidarized itself with the Swedes although they maintain a close friendship with Mot Dag; it defends the Swedes against the attempts of 'disloyal' factional work on the part of the I.C.L. But the S.A.P. itself uses its connections in the Dutch R.S.A.P. and the Workers Party of the United States to develop a poisoned propaganda and to carry on factional work against the champions of the Fourth International. 'Loyalty' to the Right and struggle against the Left, that is the real character of the S.A.P. I found in re-reading the manifesto against the war danger, proposed by the German S. J. V. among other things that the centrist of Fenner Brockway, Kilboom, etc., is not criticized. To this, the representative of the S. J.V. replied: But Fenner Brockway is with us. Finally we have a clear answer. 'The Fourth International' is not a 'scheme' for us as the S.A.P. so assiduously spreads, but the touchstone which distinguishes the revolutionary Marxists from the Centrists in all other questions as well. To pronounce oneself today for the Fourth International means also to take a position for the arming of the proletariat, for the insurrection and for the dictatorship of the proletariat. Fenner Brockway, etc., are opponents of the insurrection as well as of dictatorship. It is clear that against such opinions we know only unremitting struggle."

On the conclusion of this speech the representatives of the Swedish S.J.V. and the German S.J.V. declared jointly that the continuation of collaboration with the representative of the I.C.L. to be impossible. The latter left the session. Mot Dag, the Swedish S.J.V. and the German S.J.V. continued in full agreement.

Significance and Prospects
If one takes into consideration the recent expulsion of our French comrades from the French Socialist Youth, our expulsion from the Youth Bureau assumes special significance. Our comrades were expelled because of their struggle against national defense. And today the S.A.P., in collusion with the Mot Dag organization, which approves the treachery of Stalin in France, expels us from the Youth Bureau.

Practically speaking, with the expulsion of the I.C.L. the Youth Bureau has been buried. What remains is the Swedish S.J.V., which in fact is not interested in the international work and whose only "activity" in the Youth Bureau consisted in hindering international work; the small Mot Dag group; perhaps a small group in Rumania; and the illegal German S.J.V. The whole thing is less than nothing. While the work to reorganize the proletarian youth movement on the basis of the Open Letter for the Fourth International, which up to now bears the signatures of the Dutch R.S.A.P., the W.P.U.S., the W.P. of Canada, the Bolshevik-Leninist group of the S.F.I.O. and the I.C.L., and in which new groups from all parts of the world are continually joining, the International Bureau of Revolutionary Youth Organizations, born in a transitional period, has passed from the scene. Long live the youth section of the Fourth International, the world party of the revolutionary proletariat!

LOVESTONE'S SPEECH AT THE 7th WORLD CONGRESS . . .

Under the streamer "Lovestone's Speech at Madison Square Garden" the Workers Age prints a speech which they claim Lovestone would have delivered at the C.P. membership meeting if Browder had given him permission. Again the Workers Age scored a scoop. Spurred to action by the enterprise of the Lovestone paper we have secured an equally imaginary speech which Lovestone would have delivered at the 7th World Congress if Stalin had not crooked his little finger in his direction.

In the report of the Madison Sq. Garden "speech" the following statements by Lovestone appeared: "At the outset I must underscore with greatest emphasis that the leadership of the Communist Party is to be commended for granting us the right to address you here tonight. . . . I want to assure you that I will not abuse the privilege granted us by speaking long. . . . It is with profoundest regret that we are compelled to say that the Seventh Congress has, either by way of omission or commission failed to check this serious right danger in the Comintern. Believe us, dear comrades, it is not as carping critics, not as chronic kickers that we now sound the alarm," etc., etc. After reading this and more of the same kind it was not too difficult to write the account of Lovestone's appeal to the Seventh World Congress.

LOVESTONE'S APPEAL . . .

"I want to humbly thank the Communist International and our dear comrade Stalin, best disciple of Lenin, at the head (loud laughter from all parts of the hall, shouts: 'You'll have to learn to sing better than that') for the privilege of begging forgiveness for my errors. I now pledge support to our great leader Stalin who has always been correct. (loud laughter and shouts: 'You're a bit late with that, fellow. How can we trust you?') I have always fought against Trotskyism. I expelled the American Trotskyists. I sent gangs to raid their homes." (Browder interjects: "How about your robbery of our National Office?" delegates: "Throw him out!") . . . Chairman Darcy: "Is there any delegate here who wants Lovestone to continue?" All shout: "No!" Lovestone kneels in silent prayer.

WOMEN'S DEB DENOUNCES LOVESTONE . . .

Martha Stone, leader of the working women of America, takes the floor and denounces the right opportunist Lovestone who had opposed the decisions of the great leader Stalin. (Congress cheers for 45 minutes. Japanese delegates shout "Banzai." British delegate: "Hear, hear.") Lovestone jumps on a chair and sings: "One, two, three, four, who are we for—S-T-A-L-I-N, Stalin! Rah! Rah! Rah!" (Ed. Note: The Lovestone group actually did this at the 1929 convention of the Communist Party held in New York.) Lovestone begs for a chance to work in the C.I., with Stalin at the head.

STALIN TAKES THE FLOOR . . .

As Stalin arose to speak the Congress went into its usual two-hour orgy of applause and singing. Stalin: "Many comrades have made mistakes. (Radek interjects: 'Quite right!') Mistakes will be made in the future by other comrades, big mistakes. (loud applause.) We must always correct mistakes. Self criticism is necessary to our party. We tried, dear comrades, to correct the mistakes of Lovestone. You know how crystal pure were my intentions. (Stachel: 'How true, how profound!') Comrades, can we trust Lovestone? No, dear comrades, we cannot trust Lovestone. Does that mean, comrades that he cannot work in our party? I propose that he be given work in the Communist Party of the United States. I propose that he be put in charge of Harbaway's People's Front election campaign on the Eastern Coast of New York City. Now Lovestone posh von, posh von! (Russian for scat.) Lovestone backs out from the hall bowing low repeatedly and crying: 'Thank you, comrade Stalin, thank you dear comrades. Down with Trotskyism. Thank you, comrade Stalin.'"

A FEW MORE SUGGESTIONS . . .

Following the great acclaim with which the reading public received "Lovestone's Speech at Madison Sq. Garden if He Had Been There" we suggest some new titles to the editor of the Workers Age. Lovestone's Radio Speech at Valley Forge; Lovestone's Speech at Caesar's Funeral; Lovestone's Inaugural Address as President. Any ingenious comrade can add to this list, to his heart's content.

Tarov Relates Horror of Prison and Exile Under Stalin Regime

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

RENEWED MENACE TO CHINA

Japan will not miss its opportunity to make further inroads into China while the other imperialists are preoccupied with the Ethiopian situation. There is every indication that Japanese imperialism is preparing more extended operations for plundering China. A series of extraordinary meetings of the Japanese army and navy commanders and the diplomatic corps are in progress. One meeting is to take place in Dairen October 13 to 15. A second in which the various consular officials in China are to receive instructions from the army is scheduled for October 16 in Shanghai. A final gathering of all army commanders to work out details of the next steps in the seizure of China, is also planned in Shanghai for Oct. 20 and 21. The pronouncements of the Japanese Military Attache in China, Maj. Gen. Isogaya, provide several keys to what is intended. A "final" settlement of the North China problem is first on the agenda. The Kuomintang government is told plainly what is expected of it by its imperialist ally. "We do not want to provoke a crisis in North China but we hope that the Chinese will themselves make all the necessary changes to assure the establishment of authority with a responsible person at the head who would have Japan's confidence. . . . However, should a crisis arise which would endanger the lives of foreigners, Japan will be ready to make sacrifices to take the necessary steps for establishing a strong North China regime." What this means is the setting up of an extended puppet state to include the five provinces north of the Yellow River: Hopei, Chahar, Suiyuan, Shensi and Shantung, all now under Japanese control.

WHICH THEATRE OF WAR?

There have been previous indications that Japan wishes to add to its present booty Outer Mongolia. This territory is not nearly so important economically as Manchuria. But its control by Japan would determine the main theatre of war in the coming struggle against the U.S.S.R. Manchuria is too close to Japan to suit the Japanese strategists. Soviet aircraft are a menace not to be neglected. The seizure of Outer Mongolia would permit greater safety to the attack from the northwest corner of Manchuria, from the railroad line running from Hailar to Manchuli, on Chita, the most important railroad junction in Eastern Siberia. Chita is the point at which the main line of the Trans-Siberian Railroad (to Vladivostok) joins the branch line to Manchuli. The seizure of Chita would cut off communication with the Maritime Provinces over this railroad and would make the main seat of war the territory about Lake Baikal. Already special Japanese divisions in full war strength, with large numbers of tanks and armored cars are concentrated about Hailar. The latter is an important air base. The military railroad from Jehol Province to Dolonor was built to aid the penetration into Outer Mongolia. But the attack on Outer Mongolia can only mean the prelude to war against the Soviet Union.

ATTACK ON SOUTH CHINA

The plundering of China is not to be confined to North China alone. The situation at Swatow threatens to become the pretense for the beginning of Japanese invasion into South China. Already all shipping to this port is forced to pass between two lines of Japanese cruisers and destroyers, holding the harbor in a tight grip. The Japanese object to the tax imposed by the Canton militarists on rice imported into Kwantung Province which raises only a two months supply of this necessity for thirty-five million people. The Japanese have been smuggling tremendous quantities of cheap Siamese rice into the province. The seizure of a small quantity of this smuggled rice has precipitated the issue, Japan claiming a violation of the treaty permitting only the national import tax, not involved here. By this pretext Japanese imperialism seeks to gain control of the vast trade of the East River District of Kwantung. At the same time this is a blow at the Canton militarists whose military machine is based on the so-called agricultural tax. The Chinese are entreaching along a fifty mile front in Kwantung expecting momentarily an ultimatum, to be immediately followed by invasion. The reactionary bandit-generals of Canton will hardly organize any real resistance to Japanese encroachments, no more than the "central" Kuomintang leaders, Chiang Kai-Shek and Wang Ching-Wei. On the contrary, these corrupt betrayers of the Chinese enter into competition to become the first to sell out to the imperialists. The other imperialist powers are greatly disturbed at the present situation, seeing in it not only the potentialities of another Shanghai incident, but also a fresh move of Japanese militarism. American warships have been sent to Swatow to take care of "American interests."

Shachtman Phil. Meeting

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 15.—Warming up for his national tour, comrade Max Shachtman opened the season for the Workers Party educational forum here last Sunday evening with a lecture on "The Truth About Trotskyism." The speaker dealt very effectively with O'gin's slanderous pamphlet, "Trotskyism, Counter-Revolution in Disguise," exposing all the falsity and rottenness of the fight against the living leader of world Bolshevism and the ideas of revolutionary Marxism. A mass of evidence was produced, much of it from O'gin's own writings, to expose the Trotsky baiting campaign. The audience was attentive and asked many questions. Comrade Shachtman summed up and spoke of the need for a new revolutionary International of the working class.

ourselves, in protest against the brutal treatment of the prison administration. We were often beaten, the guards fired their guns through our cell windows, with the result that one of our comrades, Yessayan was shot in the chest. We demanded a commission, but, as a rule, we were refused.

The Hunger Strike

Then, 485 imprisoned Communists went on a hunger strike that lasted 18 days. A Commission arrived, transferred the "active prisoners" to other penitentiaries, and exiled the wounded Yessayan to Siberia. Thus, it "improved" our position. And then, another Commission came next year and extended our sentences. For this reason all of us who were imprisoned in the Verkhne-Uralsk penitentiary went on a hunger strike, in protest against this unheard-of lawlessness. We began the strike on December 11, 1933. On December 20 the hunger strikers were dragged from their cells—in order to search the latter. Then they began feeding us by force. Unheard of scenes took place, desperate fights broke out between the jailers and the hunger-striking. The latter were of course ignominiously beaten up. In our exhausted condition we were subjected to forced feeding by means of rubber tubes. The treatment was indescribable: thick rubber hose was shoved down our throats, the strikers were dragged into the "feeding cell" like dead cattle. There was not a single case of surrender.

On the 15th day of the strike our strike committee decided to discontinue it because many of the famished Communists tried to commit suicide. One of the G.P.U. functionaries from the Ural District appeared in the penitentiary and threatened the starving Communists with transfer to the Solovskiy Islands. Our comrades, of course, drove him from their cells. The decision of the committee to call off the hunger strike was accepted by all the strikers unanimously. The G.P.U. representative was compelled to make a verbal promise (for some reason he refused to put it in writing) that all those who had served their sentences would be freed. Since my sentence terminated on January 22, 1934, I was transferred to the cell of those about to be "freed."

On January 22, I was consequently set "free." Under a close guard, I was shipped to Central Asia, under the jurisdiction of the Central Asiatic G.P.U. We arrived in Tashkent, there being two of us—myself and comrade Zhantnev. In Tashkent we were lodged in jail; the next day, after stubborn protests, we were exiled, without being sentenced. Zhantnev to the city of Frunze, myself to Andijan. And, then, in March, I sent a telegram to the Central Committee about my readiness to give up Oppositionist activity. Two months elapsed without an answer. I sent a special letter to the Central Committee. Another two months went by, and again there was no answer. Both in the telegram and in the letter I made no mention whatever as to my views. I did not consider my views and position to be "counter-revolutionary," as is usually stated by the capitalists, but I emphasized that I would cease ideological and organizational struggle against the leadership. In short, from my communications the Central Committee and the G.P.U. could conclude that the leadership under the pressure of the Opposition had not betrayed the revolution as yet, and had even corrected its mistakes on certain points. And what was most important now was to purge the party apparatus of the debris of bureaucracy, and to wage a struggle against advancing Fascism by combined forces of the Communists and revolutionary forces in the U.S.S.R. and the whole world.

The bureaucratic leadership evidently deemed it offensive to reply to such a communication. No answer came from Moscow. But the local department of the G.P.U. sent its own agents who pled me with the following questions:

The "Interview"

"Tell me, please, do you consider your views counter-revolutionary, or don't you? In your opinion, is the Opposition and its activities counter-revolutionary or not? Do you think that Trotsky, for example, is the leader of the counter-revolutionary vanguard of the bourgeoisie, or don't you?" In answer I went into a detailed exposition of my views as to the Opposition, headed by Trotsky, and in turn I asked such questions as, "And what do you say, dear comrade, are these views of mine counter-revolutionary? Do you consider counter-revolutionary our Oppositionist work from 1923 up to 1930 against the Right opportunist tendency in the party? Indeed, in 1930 Centrism also began to fight against the Rights. Is one to consider this struggle counter-revolutionary too? As regards Trotsky, in my opinion, he is the most unswerving revolutionist devoted to the cause of the world proletariat. I consider him my ideological companion and comrade. I have no wish to fool the party, I can not consider as counter-revolutionary the revolutionary views of the Opposition."

My interlocutor would sit mum, with his head on his chest. Incidentally, this chap was a fine fellow with some brains. But apparently he had had little occasion to listen to Oppositionists themselves, but he had heard a great deal about them from the official sources. . . . I had an identical conversation with one of the representatives of the local section of the G.P.U. I remarked, among other things: "What is your opinion of such an act of lawlessness as this? I have passed six months in exile already without any sentence being passed, after serving a three year prison term." The assistant chief of the G.P.U. in answer pulled out from a drawer some kind of a paper and read me a new sentence, three years in exile. But for some unknown reason he refused to allow me to read the sentence myself. This, of course, was a common trick on the part of the apparatus hirelings. They probably wished to scare me with a new sentence so as to make me switch on the Opposition. Here I became completely convinced that these miserable functionaries had long ceased being Communists, that I had to deal with a gang of hard-boiled bureaucrats who were incapable of understanding the integrity of sincere revolutionary words. Nevertheless I decided to go to Moscow, and personally speak with the upper crust of the party apparatus, in order to find out at last precisely what it represents, what sort of people were they who shriek about revolution and socialism and communism and compel me to consider my purely Communist views as counter-revolutionary. In May I sent a telegram to the C.E.C. with a request for permission to go to Moscow to have some personal interviews concerning my case. This time I sent a telegram, with an answer prepaid. But it was useless—there was no answer. My attempts to gain permission to go to Moscow for personal interviews were not crowned with success. Then I decided to go without any permission. En route it became all too clear to me that no one would listen to me in Moscow, and that I would be immediately arrested for having fled from exile. I had no recourse left, except to escape abroad.

Turn From His Family

My renunciation of the Oppositionist struggle was sincere. Even at the present time I still hold to this point of view. From 1933, after the victory of Fascism in Germany, I took the position that all the Communist and revolutionary forces of the entire world had to be united against the Fascist reaction, no matter what the cost, without regard to the internal differences between proletarian organizations, no matter how serious these might be. This is the point of view that I defended among the comrades. But under no condition would I agree to solidarize with the bureaucracy, as I emphasized in my letter of April, 1934 to the Central Committee. I always held and still hold the standpoint of a stubborn and merciless struggle against the brazen bureaucracy which has usurped the rights of our party. My sincere letter and telegram to the C.E.C. and the G.P.U. were assumed, however, by the bureaucracy to be the first step of an ignominious capitulation. The miserable bureaucracy considered that I had become worn out in prisons and exile during the long years, torn away from my family, my wife and child, that I could bear up no longer and was ready at last to kneel before the G.P.U. pleading for mercy. The miserable bureaucracy overlooked that in my letter I asked no mercy, but demanded the restoration of my party rights. The miserable bureaucracy evidently attached no importance to my words when I said, "I cannot fool the party, I am not a bystander, I am a revolutionist and I am unable to serve passively in order to keep my belly full. I was an active Communist—I still am and will remain one; there isn't anything or anybody in this world that can sever me from my genuinely Communist convictions; I considered and still consider the views of Trotsky and his followers to be genuine Communist views. These views are a direct continuation of the views of Marx and Lenin."

A Bureaucrat and a Communist

Never in my life have I run across so malicious and cynical a functionary as the assistant chief of the local G.P.U. section, Margolin by name, who, after reading my telegram to the C.E.C. and the G.P.U. addressed me as follows: "Now, what can you tell us about your organization? Who was the leader of the Opposition movement in the Caucasus? Where did you function actively? We must make it hot for these Trotskyists." The miserable functionary became confused when I refused categorically. I told him, "Up to now I fought against the C.E.C., and I fought according to all the rules of the Opposition; I assume the responsibility of this struggle against the leadership without proceeding from considerations of my own personal welfare. I have in mind the necessity of a joint struggle on the part of all the revolutionary forces of the proletariat against the advancing counter-revolution. I cease the struggle not because I am in agreement with the opportunist views of the bureaucratic upper-crust of the party, but because I hope our party will still succeed in restoring its rights and drive the brazen usurpers from its ranks."

Destroying the Revolution

At party and workers' meetings the assembled are in complete apathy. They have to be almost driven to meetings. Not only non-party but even party workers are very reluctant to go to meetings. At the meetings, "hold" speeches can be made only by the party and trade union parrots. They can be so bold as to always and everywhere praise the leadership, beginning with Stalin, and then down the line according to rank. Then a resolution is presented, and the assembled are terrorized by labelling as counter-revolutionists anyone who dares to object even to a single point in the resolution. Naturally, such a situation in the country tends to discredit the authority of the Soviet power and of the Revolution. The party leadership has despotically terrorized the entire party. In the party there is a complete lack of the conscious party discipline which was once the pride of our party. Barracks discipline reigns in the party, a mechanical fulfillment of orders. Hence, it is easily understandable why all sorts of grafters, charlatans, and shady characters of every description—thieves of the "gentleman" type—feel very much at ease and are very bold in the party, the Soviet, and trade union apparatuses, and consider it their native duty to look upon Soviet wealth as their own "property." And who is there to supervise them? Who is there to punish them for the plundered national resources? The rank and file Communists? Sad to say, the latter have been frightened by prisons and the Solovskiy Islands, where languish for many long years the boldest Communist and non-party workers, under lock and key, behind bars. Is it really possible that the world proletariat will maintain silence while in the land of the Soviets the imprisoned Communists hang out the red banner from their cell-bars on the anniversaries of the October Revolution, and the turnkeys rip it down with rakes? . . .

Even the Infants Persecuted

Unfortunately I am unable here to dwell on all the abominations perpetrated in the Soviet prisons under the regime of the usurpers. I will depict only a single scene that I witnessed. In the Petropavlovsk prison, in a small cell, some 25 cubic meters in volume, are lodged 35 women, eight with suckling infants. The cell is ventilated by a peep-hole. I shall never forget those tiny emaciated bodies—I saw them through the peep-hole of our cell. The children stood in line, clasping their mothers' bosom in order to obtain their infinitesimal ration of fresh air at the peep-hole. Let the world proletariat look upon this brand of shame on the faces of the jail-keepers of the plebeian regime. Is it conceivable that there were no Communists in this city? Is it possible that they remained uninterested in the jails of their city where thousands were suffering from hunger, cold and filth? Wasn't there a prosecuting attorney? One is ashamed even to mention this title. There were! They were all there! Even a member of the Central Committee was in this city at the time—Mikoyan, by name. His picture was printed on the front page of the local paper. But Mikoyan was a personage in transit, his arrival could serve only as the signal for arresting an additional hundred women with suckling babes. One can refrain from mentioning Mikoyan. But what were the local Communists doing? Nothing! They have no independent voice. They haven't the right to think. For example, if a suckling babe is in the hands of an arrested working or peasant woman, then it means that the baby is guilty, it must sit in its mother's lap in a small cell with 35 women, and stand in line for "fresh" air.

The brazen bureaucracy of the Stalinist regime will label my words counter-revolutionary. Let them label them as they will. My duty is to tell the truth, and only the truth, for truth is the most dependable weapon in the hands of the proletariat against its enemies. Indeed, if all the working class organizations told only the truth and nothing but the truth, then the victory of the world proletariat over its enemies would have been assured long ago.

Plenum Meets; Plans A Campaign Against War

The third plenary meeting of the National Committee of the Workers Party, held at New York October 4-9, adopted resolutions on the main party problems and issued the call for the second convention of the party which is to convene December 26 at New York. The intensive discussion which has been taking place in the party ranks since the June meeting of the N. C. is to be continued at membership meetings and in the party internal bulletin until the convention.

The plenum held open sessions with the New York party members and numerous delegations from other cities in attendance. Party opinion on the main questions, which has crystallized in the course of the three-months' discussion, was reflected also in a strong consolidation of the leadership at the plenum. All the important political resolutions presented by the Political Committee were adopted by a vote of 18 to 2.

The first point on the agenda was devoted to a discussion of the Leninist position on the war situation and the preparation of the party to meet the test of war. Party activity in the next period is to be organized around a campaign on the question of war, public agitation being supplemented by intensive study and discussion in the party ranks. In addition to the public statement issued by the plenum the Political Committee was instructed to prepare material for the branches in the campaign.

Extended discussion took place on the subject of international relations and the struggle for the Fourth International which stood as the second point on the agenda. The resolution of the Political Committee, adopted by a vote of 18 to 2, declared in favor of an international conference to proclaim the establishment of the Fourth International and expressed full solidarity with the International Communist League and the R.S.A.P. of Holland in their common struggle toward this goal. The tactics of the Bolshevik-Leninists in entering the French Socialist Party were specifically endorsed. The proposal of comrades Oehler and Stamm to "condemn" the tactics of the Bolshevik-Leninists in this respect, already rejected by the overwhelming majority of the party in the previous discussion, was likewise rejected by the plenum. The reference to our French comrades as "capitulators" was branded as impermissible slander which has nothing in common with the attitude of the Workers Party.

Comrades Stamm and Oehler were similarly isolated on the general resolution dealing with tactics and methods of building the party and our attitude toward opponent organizations. The resolution on the internal situation drew attention to the repeated violations of party discipline committed by the Oehler-Stamm group and the repeated censures and warnings of the political committee and the protests of party branches against their disruptive course. The resolution specifically provided that the opposition comrades are to be assured full party democratic rights in the pre-convention discussion as hitherto. Their resolutions and articles are to be published in the internal bulletin for the information of all party members and they are to be given adequate time to present their point of view in the branch and general membership discussion meetings. As a further safeguard of the rights of the minority, elections to the party convention are to take place on the basis of proportional representation. At the same time the plenum resolution gave the Oehler-Stamm group a final warning that further violations of discipline and acts of disruption and disloyalty to the party will not be tolerated.

Following the plenum the party is swinging into action through its campaign on the war question and in other fields, while also carrying forward intensive discussion in preparation for the December convention.

Trade Unions Merge In France

By H. F. ROBERTS

The recent fusion of the two big French trade union federations, the C.G.T. (reformist) and the C.G.T.U. (Stalinist), which took place in line with the Comintern's efforts to disembarass itself of its Third Period baggage, has given a new impulsion to the negotiations underway for the organic unity of the French Socialist and Stalinist parties, as a first step toward the merging of the two Internationals. The final plunge of the Stalinists into the swamps of reformism and the social patriotism following the Seventh Congress has cleared the path toward organic unity of all political obstacles, such as, for example, revolutionary principles.

The fusion of the two trade union organizations took place on the basis of the complete abdication by the Stalinists of all revolutionary political activity in the union ranks. A disavowal of factional activity was demanded in advance by the labor fakers Jouhaux and was readily made by the Stalinist bureaucrats who announced that the Stalinist workers' political activity would be strictly outside the unions! Speculation concerning the possibility of struggles between opposing political tendencies within the unified trade union confederation is answered by Marcel Gilton, secretary of the French Stalinist Party, with the remark:

C.P. Gives Up Political Activity at Reformists Bidding

the unification of the two parties. From this text he quotes the following passage:

"The unified party of the proletariat, seeking to combat and destroy the capitalist system, generator of misery and wars, cannot admit any policy of collaboration with the bourgeoisie. None of its members can participate in a capitalist government. Its parliamentary representative has the duty to refuse to vote for military credits destined to prepare imperialist wars," etc.

Now, says Lebas, "It is permissible to ask whether the Communist Party doesn't believe it necessary to modify somewhat its first text."

Since that text was issued, he goes on, "two important political facts have intervened. First there was the Congress of the Communist International and the vote on the Dimitroff report whose conclusions sensibly modified, I believe, the position of the Communist parties toward coalition governments. Secondly, there was the formation of the Popular Front into which all the parties and fractions of republican bourgeois parties may enter for common anti-fascist action. From this new action necessarily results a new Communist policy." (Emphasis mine—H.F.R.) And this policy, concludes Lebas with perfect justice, can scarcely be reconciled with the quoted paragraph from the Stalinist draft for a common declaration. He puts the question squarely. I quote the balance of his article:

"Exceptional Tactics" Throw Overboard

"Two things of importance are expressed (in this paragraph): (1) Prohibition for the unified party of tomorrow to pursue any policy of collaboration with the bourgeois parties, and even more especially of collaboration taking the form of participation in a capitalist government." (2) Refusal of military credits, of credits for colonial conquests and the whole of the budget.

"A Socialist can ask me: What objection have you to this?"

"For me, none, or almost none. These two imperative ideas are found in the charter of the Socialist party founded in 1905. But the founders of the party were careful to foresee the possibility of exceptional circumstances, creating for the proletariat and its Party an exceptional situation justifying an exceptional tactic. They also introduced into the charter this simple phrase: 'Even in the case of exceptional circumstances, the elected representatives of the party cannot involve the party without its consent.' Which means that the policy of the party, even in such a case, is fixed only by the party itself."

"Doesn't the Communist Party believe that this phrase or a similar one should have its place in the charter of tomorrow?"

"Doesn't the Communist Party agree that it cannot maintain the text of the unity charter presented to us at a time when it is making the greatest effort to extend to the whole country the policy of rapprochement of the working class parties and the bourgeois republican parties for the fight against Fascism and to conserve democratic liberties?"

"Doesn't the Communist Party consider," asks Lebas finally, "that the common struggle against the decree laws... poses the question of a coalition government to which it would be impossible to reply in the negative?"

convention. The Woll-Frey-Wharton forces rallied by 18,025 to 10,826, the majority report of the Resolutions Committee which reaffirms the San Francisco decision of last year. This decision permits the Executive Council to issue international charters to workers in such industries as rubber and automobiles but specifies that the craft unions of the Federation retain jurisdiction over the skilled craftsmen in these industries. The effect is instead of setting up a genuine industrial union to put the unskilled and semi-skilled into a "restricted industrial union" and to separate the skilled workers from them and from each other in a dozen or more craft groups.

Analysis of the role of Lewis and Company in developing government-sponsored unionism on which, incidentally, reactionaries such as Woll and Frey made acute observations in the convention, must wait for our next issue. Suffice it here to make one important point. Lewis is nothing if not a shrewd politician. He seeks power. He does not cast himself in the role of a martyr making a splendid but futile fight for lost causes. When, therefore, Lewis now delivers a bitter and devastating attack on one of the pillars of the Federation, Matthew Woll himself, when he deliberately and publicly widens the breach between the old guard and other elements, when he shouts from the housetop what hitherto has been whispered only behind closed doors by any prominent Federation leader, namely, that the A. F. of L. is "a total failure" under its present leadership, when he who was an unwavering supporter of Tory Republicanism under Coolidge and Hoover, flirts with the idea of a labor party, when he who in the past has hounded progressives, not to speak of radicals in his own union more bitterly than any other international president, now protests against one of Matthew Woll's proposals to protect the Federation from "reds" as simply part of a general movement throughout the country against all "progressive and liberal thought," it can mean only one thing: Lewis knows that the sentiment of the rank and file in his own union and among the workers generally is such that anyone who now seeks power and influence among the workers must cast himself in the role of a progressive and fighter, even a "radical!"

The vote on the craft union resolution already referred to indicates that the old guard is far from locked. It would be dangerous for genuine progressives to cherish any illusions about a smooth road ahead. It would be downright suicidal to get a false conception of the role Lewis himself will play—for them to regard him as basically a friend rather than as a much more subtle and powerful enemy than the mere bas-beans, Woll and Green. But the indications which this convention has given of how astute and hard-balled labor politicians gauge the spirit of insurgency among the workers, plus the fact of a rift in the A. F. of L. leadership such as have never before occurred in all the 55 years of its history, opens wide the door for a mighty advance in building the left wing in the various unions and in the A. F. of L. as a whole.

Take the offensive! Press the fight. Be bold, be bold, be bold. That is what the Atlantic City convention says to the militants.

8 PAGES ON NOV. 7

For the eighteenth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution the NEW MILITANT will appear in a special eight-page edition. It will be a fore-runner to the regular eight page weekly to appear soon.

Several feature articles tracing the important lessons of this great revolutionary act of eighteen years ago and dealing with the world shaking events of today, especially the all-over-shadowing issue of new imperialist wars and the duties and tasks of the revolutionary movement, are in preparation for this issue. It should furnish an inspiration for new strides toward the building up of a stronger revolutionary press.

This is the particular duty now before us. Our ideas become a power when translated into action in the living movement of the proletariat. Our message must therefore reach wider fields. Only the Fourth Internationalists are maintaining a consistent revolutionary position in the face of the developing wars of imperialist aggression and the horrors of Fascism. The NEW MILITANT is our main instrument in making this position clear to wider masses and extend the revolutionary influence amongst them.

We propose that this announcement be the signal for a large-scale subscription drive. Start out right now with the zeal of true fighters for an invincible idea. We have set for ourselves an immediate goal of 1,000 new subscribers by the time of the second Workers Party convention, to be held December 26, and a corresponding increase in bundle sales. No more effective greeting could be given to the convention of a revolutionary party than to attain this immediate goal. The funds coming in for the new subscriptions and for the enlarged bundle sales will put the campaign for the eight-page weekly over the top. The extended circulation will form a solid basis ensuring its future existence.

We ask the party branches to go to work without delay. We ask our sympathizers and the readers of the NEW MILITANT to pitch in and help. When all shoulders are put to the wheel we can reach this immediate goal.

The party branches and the bundle agents should order an extra supply of this special eight-page anniversary edition as a first step toward increased bundle sales. It will be off the press the week before Nov. 7 and reach all cities in time for the anniversary. The special distribution of this issue should be used as a means for new contacts to gain new readers and obtain regular subscriptions.

Above all, we want all forces to concentrate during this period mentioned on the job of building up a far wider circulation for the NEW MILITANT. It is the way to bring the campaign for the regular eight-page weekly to a real climax. Let the subs come rolling in and the rest will be easy. Let all go to work in this great job in the manner that only revolutionary fighters can do.

ing a new offensive in the Far East. It is only a matter of time before all of Europe will be sucked up by the struggle.

Where Are the Facts.

The irony of the whole situation is best reflected by the fate of the various "Pacts." There is the "Pact of the Four," to which both England and Italy are signatories. Now null and void. There is the Anglo-French Entente. And there is the French-Italian Pact. Either one or the other is due for the scrapheap shortly. Then there is the Franco-Soviet Pact. In the light of the other experiences what value can any realist attach to it?

The fate of Europe is at stake. The Soviet Union is in danger. It is only a matter of time before the waves of war will reach our shores.

The most recent experiences confirm more than ever the realism and the correctness of the Marxist policy for the working class. The whole course of events dictates to the workers:

An immutable distrust of the imperialist governments, their "peace pacts," their League of Nations, their "sanctions."

A determined struggle against imperialism war by the only means possible—the revolutionary defeat of the imperialist governments.

A consistent fight against the agents of the imperialists in the ranks of labor—the social-patriots of all stripes.

very heart of the British "sphere of influence" and a virtual ultimatum to the Chinese authorities over a local tax matter may prove the starting point for Japan's long dreamed-of and long heralded extension of her continental drive into South China, for decades the bait-wick of British imperialism.

At the same time "incidents" are once again taking place along the Soviet-Manchukuo frontier. Troops have clashed and casualties have been recorded. According to a Soviet protest delivered in Tokyo, Japanese and Manchukuo forces crossed the Soviet frontier no less than three times since October 6, provoking sharp skirmishes with Red Army border guards. Neither "side," according to press reports, expects "serious consequences" in the immediate future. But the recrudescence of these "incidents" at this particular time indicate that Japan stands poised to strike as soon as events in Europe draw the U.S.S.R. into a holy war for the defense of the Versailles system and of democracy.

U. S. Imperialism Trains Its Guns

It is because of this situation in the Far East that the "neutrality" of the United States consists primarily in the maintenance of its entire battle fleet in Pacific waters. It was in 1915 that Japan, taking advantage of the World War situation, forced her famous "Twenty-one Demands" on China. American pressure after the war forced a Japanese retreat from the positions gained. But since 1931 Japanese imperialism has extracted from China far more than her Twenty-one Demands of 1915 ever asked for. For this American imperialism will sooner or later have to have an accounting and a settlement with Japan.

If the further development of events in Africa and the Mediterranean bring a forcible settlement of all outstanding international disputes once more onto the order of the day, the Wall St. head office of U. S. Imperialism Inc. will keep the European situation in hand but the strong-arm squad, Marines and all, will go to work in the Pacific. And any reader of the Daily Worker in these weeks may be sure that when that time comes, the American lackeys of the Stalinist bureaucracy will be calling upon the boys to unlimber their guns and to give it to that reactionary-Fascist-feudal Mikado and his generals for the defense of peace, of democracy and of the Soviet Union!

The New Leader article continues under the head "Sanctions Do Not Mean War." This is precisely the thesis of the Stalinists who, like the Socialists, are obliged to cover up their first concrete step toward the support of imperialism war behind a denial of its existence.

The Socialists are as hard pressed to prove that sanctions do not mean war as the Stalinists. To quote:

"Sir Norman Angell, winner of the Nobel Peace prize, replied to the objection that sanctions mean war with the words: 'Sanctions do not mean war—they insure peace.'"

Further on: "The Joint Anti-war Committee of the Socialist International and the International Federation of Trade Unions... declared it was even more obvious today that only the energetic policy of collective security demanded by the two Internationals in their resolution of September 6 can still preserve peace."

The article continues with a list. The American Federation of Labor, the New Zealand Federation, the Japanese Federation, all approve the sanctions policy of the League. But nowhere is there one single argument to show why sanctions do not mean war!

There are no arguments. All the Socialist ghoulies of the dead Second International can do is to point with pride to the extent of their betrayal and gloat. But gloating does not make treachery any the less treachery.

The article concludes:

"Those who oppose the policy of the Labor and Socialist International in this crucial matter and who seek to interfere with the application of this policy by urging opposition to the stand of the League of Nations and advocating revolution in democratic countries when they may be confronted with the necessity of taking up arms against the fascist dictatorships are, whether they know it or not, doing the work of Mussolini and Hitler."

This is in complete agreement with the Stalinists, who have stated that the French workers would be traitors if they made their revolution in the midst of a Franco-German war.

The basis of this line in both cases is the same. It lies in this case in the failure of the social democrats to combat fascism... their policy of compromise with the bourgeoisie having crippled the workers and handed them over to the fascists, the social democrats, instead of purging their movement of compromise, pass even further over into the camp of the bourgeoisie and appeal to the democratic bourgeois governments to overthrow the fascist bourgeois governments. The fact that the very democratic governments they are appealing to are already themselves tottering on the edge of fascism seems to make no impression on the social democratic dunderheads. That they appeal to the enemy of the working class, the bourgeoisie, to perform the tasks that the working class alone can perform, is an index of their bankruptcy.

The Stalinists have to be a little more cautious about their approach to social-patriotism, to the support of the bourgeois government in its imperialist war moves. They conceal their social patriotism behind an even greater fog of phrases, mis-statements and equivocations. But the direction of the movement is the same. It is safe to say that unless some earlier catastrophe overtakes them the Stalinists will line up 100 percent with the social democrats and the bourgeois governments, of the democratic countries at least (and of the fascist countries which are allied with the governments which the Stalinists consider most democratic) in the next war.

moment break out into open warfare, which is only an "extension" of "peacetime" politics.

Now what sense is there in this appeal to "all peace loving people?" None. As a matter of fact, almost every man in the country, with the exception of a few adventurers, is a peace lover. Ask an army general, a president, a senator, a bank head—they are all peace lovers by their own admission. But they are supporters of the capitalist regime, hence they are forced to support the wars which are its living manifestation. The Daily Worker by appealing to all peace loving people is simply confusing the issue, which is not between peace lovers and war lovers (show me an avowed war lover) but between capitalists and proletarians; between supporters of the capitalist regime and its incessant open and concealed warfare and enemies of the capitalist regime and its warfare. When the Daily Worker appeals to peace lovers to stop war it is appealing to capitalists, to army generals, government figures, fascists (for they profess to love peace too!) to overthrow the capitalist regime! For that is the only way peace lovers or anybody else will ever stop war.

Like the social democrats the Stalinists appeal to the capitalist government to stop war. The British Labor Party is ready to support "our government" in its efforts to "maintain peace." The Stalinists are ready, indeed they call upon Roosevelt and congress, to support capitalist measures to "stop" war.

Now it is possible that a capitalist government may stop open war for a short period... but only because that government does not consider the time ripe for war. For instance: it is conceivable that Roosevelt, like Wilson, might keep us out of the war for a year or two... but only in order better to prepare for the war when it comes.

The treachery of the social democrats and the Stalinists lies not in the fact that Roosevelt can't stop war for a year or so, but in the fact that they teach the workers not to rely upon themselves who, as enemies of the capitalist system can alone really put a stop to war, but upon Roosevelt, Congress, and a host of peace lovers who only love peace as long as peace lasts. The majority of so-called peace lovers, love capitalism infinitely more than they love peace, hence they can never be relied upon to put a stop to the wars that are the natural manifestation of capitalism in action. When war comes the whole mob of peace lovers become just as ardent war lovers... and the workers whom the Daily Worker and the New Leader have taught to look to these peace lovers are easily led into the maelstrom.

October 9—From an article by Marguerite Young of the Daily Worker Washington bureau: "Secretary of State Hull's announcement today that the United States has warned Rome not to bomb or injure American lives or property in case of military operations at Addis Ababa was received today as another indication that mass anti-war sentiment is finding its mark in the Roosevelt administration."

Here we have the same misdirection of the workers' attention away from their own struggle against war to the maneuvers of the capitalists in preparation for war. This is an especially brazen example; brazen or stupid, it is hard to say. So anxious are the Stalinist lackeys to register a victory for their treacherous war policy that they seize upon the slightest incident and magnify it all out of proportion. Secretary of State Hull, it seems almost superfluous to remark, is only following the ordinary diplomatic procedure in warning Rome not to damage American imperialism lives and property in Ethiopia. Last week we remarked on the "forcing" policy of the Daily Worker, whereby they will soon be forcing themselves into an imperialist army. This week we have another example... the Daily Worker has forced the Secretary of State of an Imperialist government to protect its imperialist property!

war, but to actively campaign for it! Up to the last minute before the last war the future centrist socialists took a revolutionary position on war. But the Stalinists, already before the war, are forcing the question. If any value can be placed on the pre-war comparison of the Kautskys with the pre-war position of the Stalinists we must conclude that the latter are preparing for a recruiting campaign unrivaled in the history of socialism, even surpassing the efforts of capitalist recruiting agents! What else is to be concluded from the vain boast of having forced the Secretary of State, the very leader of all the forces of reactionary imperialism, to protect American imperialist property?

October 11—An editorial on sanctions: "Now the A. F. of L. can add its might and weight for such action (sanctions)—by endorsing the resolution before it, urging the Roosevelt government to act with the League of Nations on collective economic sanctions."

The Stalinists encourage the A. F. of L. to follow the same treacherous path—support the Roosevelt government, they advise. It is just possible that this advice will ultimately filter down to the ranks and have some influence on the membership. If the "red" Stalinists support the "peace" moves of the government there must be something to the government peace policy. Indeed if there were any opposition to support of the Roosevelt government in the ranks, the rotten bureaucracy could use the Stalinists as an example to force support of the government.

It is in just this situation that

Where does all this lead? It leads the Daily Worker to an eventual campaign of forcing the United States into a war with Italy (or Germany, or Japan, or any other power that threatens the Soviet Union). The Stalinists have stated that they are ready to support wars of democratic states against fascist states (Stalin-Laval pact, "defense the remnants of bourgeois democracy," etc.). It is possible merely to support war. During the last war the centrist Socialists of the brand of Kautsky and MacDonald may be said merely to have supported the war. They did not campaign actively for war, at times they even criticized it, but they did not campaign against the war.

The Stalinists indicate their intention not merely to support the stupidity of the argument of some Stalinists, who still have a grain of class consciousness left, becomes evident. We will support the government now, they say, but when it turns in another direction, toward war with the Soviet Union, we will oppose it.

This the Stalinists consider to be another smart trick, like their policy of supporting the British imperialist government and at the same time calling for insurrection in the Italian army. It is just as treacherous. For by advising the workers to support their bureaucracy and their government the Stalinists bring those workers under the leadership of that bureaucracy and that government—they teach the workers to look up to and rely on that bureaucracy and government.

And when in the future these extra smart Stalinists decide to change their line again they will find that the workers no longer are under their influence... the workers will be under the influence of the bureaucracy and the government, under the "influence" of the officers in the army.

Not only do the Stalinists advise the workers to support the Roosevelt government, but they advise them to support the League of Nations. The League of Nations is no more than the sum of its parts. It is an association of international robber imperialists. If one imperialist government is a reactionary force, how reactionary is a league of fifty-two capitalist governments? The League is the International Burglars' Union, no more, no less. It has not changed one whit since the day Lenin called it "the Thieves Kitchen of Geneva."

It is in just this situation that

Oust 13 French Bolsheviks From S.P. for Stand on War

Central Comm. Splits on Issue Of Expulsions

By H. F. ROBERTS

Thirteen leaders of the Bolshevik-Leninist group of France have been expelled from the French Socialist Party. Preparing a sacred union of their own as a prelude to the sacred union government of the morrow, the Socialist and Stalinist bureaucracies are seeking to dismember themselves of a revolutionary left wing which does not and will not permit their gross betrayal of the French proletariat to go unchallenged.

In response to this reactionary offensive an organized bloc under the name Revolutionary Left is taking form in the Socialist Party of France. At a meeting of 1,500 militants in Paris Marceau Pivert, one of the outstanding leaders of the Socialist left, proclaimed the formation of the left bloc.

The expulsion of the Bolshevik-Leninists, long expected and forecast in these columns, was openly stated by the National Disputes Committee of the S.P. to be based upon the fact that the "program of the Bolshevik-Leninist Group cannot for a single instant be admitted since it would lead the party into an impossible situation." Impossible, because it would lead the party to the conquest of power by the proletariat!

Expelled for Bolshevism

Specifically, five articles in La Verite were given as grounds for the expulsions.

"The first article with which we are reproached," states a leaflet issued by the Bolshevik-Leninist Central Committee after the expulsions, "is the Letter of Trotsky to the French Workers. Trotsky advises the French workers that it is necessary to prepare a New International in view of the failure of the two old ones from the revolutionary standpoint, principally on the burning question of war (1914, Stalin-Laval declaration). Instead of replying politically to this question, instead of opening a discussion on the war question, the left is expelled."

"The second fact has to do with our issue on the expulsions of the Socialist Youth at Lille. We explained that these expulsions of the representatives of more than a third of the Socialist Youth were a joint maneuver of the Stalinists and reformists for the exclusion of all revolutionists hostile to the sacred union!"

The third crime laid against the Bolshevik-Leninists is their agitation for the slogan of revolutionary defeatism. "They call agitation for revolutionary defeatism and against the sacred union—violations of discipline! . . . The slogans regarded

1500 in Paris Meet Cheer New Revolutionary Bloc

Faced with the crisis of war and the acute tightening of internal contradictions, the threat of Fascism and civil war, the Socialist and Stalinist bureaucracies in France are trying to cover with the fetish of "unity" their policies of betrayal, of social patriotism, of class collaboration. In so doing they are finding it necessary to cope with a growing movement of opposition from the left which they hope to silence by the simple expedient of bureaucratically expelling them from their organizations.

Akron Bosses Union Revolts

Lay Off Resentment Rips Company Organization Wide Open

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 21.—Pressed by a powerful demand from 6,000 workers in plant 2, the Goodyear company union revolted against company orders to approve a shift from the six to an eight-hour day and created consternation among the rubber barons as the feeling against the brutal company policy spread from plant to plant and brought tenseness throughout this rubber center.

The lower body of the dual-house company union, which was formed 20 years ago after the 1913 strike, took this sensational action two hours after the company placed the 6,000 plant II workers on an eight-hour schedule, thus laying off hundreds of them!

Over 150 workers stormed the company union meeting and thundered their protest which caused the thirty-two "representatives" to bolt from the purse-strings of the company. The meeting had been called to hear that cruel exploiter, Paul Litchfield, company president, attempt to explain his order which would send thousands of workers into the streets facing a hard winter without food or shelter. Litchfield, a fat and slick capitalist, refused to appear, although he said he would, when he heard that the workers had stormed the hall.

Bitter protests were voiced at open meetings of the Goodrich and Firestone local meetings Sunday against similar policies in these two companies' various plants. Speaker after speaker aroused the workers against the wage-slashing, hour-lengthening drive of the companies which had been predicted in a report.

Shachtman Tour Off to Flying Start

Rousing Meets in Toledo Youngstown, Pittsburg Cleveland

First reports on the meetings of comrade Shachtman on his coast-to-coast tour indicate the growing influence of the Workers Party and lively interest in its revolutionary position on the war question. Branches where meetings are scheduled are urged to emulate the fine work done in cities which have already held theirs. Brief reports follow:

PITTSBURGH: Shachtman spoke before Local 21 of the Pennsylvania Unemployed League. Over 200 present. Subject: WPA and Prospects for the Future of the American Workers. He pointed out the need of a revolutionary party to lead in the struggle against unemployment, misery, exploitation, war and Fascism. Most workers present had been Democratic supporters up to a short time ago, but the speech was very warmly received. Questions asked indicate possibilities for speedy growth of the party in this city. Discussion showed growing disillusionment of workers with Roosevelt regime and readiness for action. Local 21 is one of the most militant locals in the organization, with many members of the W.P. active in it.

NEWCASTLE: On short notice, a handful of comrades organized a splendid meeting of more than 50 workers, where Shachtman spoke on Ethiopia and the war danger, attacking the patriotic position of the Second and Third Internationals. More than an hour of questions gathered around the speaker after the meeting to express their agreement with the revolutionary anti-war position of the W.P. Both the C.P. and the S.P. here are virtually non-existent and prospects for a strong branch here are excellent. Comrades are to be complimented on the work they did to organize so fine a meeting.

YOUNGSTOWN: Although many comrades have left town for other parts, those left in the city concentrated on a meeting of the party which was attended by half a hundred workers. Interest here too in the menacing war situation was very high. Significant was the presence of a whole group from the recently organized teamsters' union which has already fought a number of dramatic, sensational and victorious battles. The sympathy for the W.P. is on the rise here and local comrades are clamoring for organizers in order to speed up the work of establishing the W.P. as a force in this district.

3,500 Out For N. Y. Herndon Farewell Meet

NEW YORK.—A crowd of 3,500 filled Manhattan Opera House late Wednesday afternoon on the call of the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon defense, to pledge their solidarity with Angelo Herndon. Atlanta Negro ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court to begin in a few days his sentence of 18 to 20 years on the chain-gang.

The meeting applauded enthusiastically when it was announced that Herndon had gained a few days respite at the last moment, and that a Southern attorney had just been retained to apply for a habeas corpus writ on the ground that there has never been a test of the constitutionality of the slave insurrection law under which Herndon was convicted.

Scheduled March Called Off

By unanimous decision, the Joint Committee decided that Herndon should remain out of Georgia until the last possible legal moment without forfeiting bail. The Committee also decided that he should remain in New York as long as possible, and consequently a scheduled march to Pennsylvania Station was called off. The Committee unanimously decided that when Herndon departs in a few days, his friends should see him off at the station.

The time of departure will be announced as soon as it is known. In the meantime all efforts are to be directed toward getting more signatures on the Herndon petitions, as the result of the habeas corpus move is very uncertain at best.

Julius Hochman, vice-president of the I.L.G.W.U., who unsuccessfully advocated a resolution on the Herndon case in the recent A. F. of L. convention, presided over the Opera House rally. Herndon was the main speaker. Among the speakers were Ernest Rice McKinney of the National Committee of the Workers Party, who brought the greetings of the National Unemployed League, Herbert Solow of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense spoke on behalf of that organization and as a member of the Joint Committee.

Neither McKinney nor Solow received at the outset the ovation given by the audience to other speakers, and for a simple reason. As could readily be seen by the frantic delight of the crowd when a French C. P. member was smuggled onto the speaker's rostrum behind the back of the arrangements committee, the meeting was almost solely Stalinist in character. The rank and file Stalinists, however, are not yet sufficiently adjusted to the new party line to know that they must boo militant sentiments, and consequently the speeches of the N.U.L. and N.P.L.D. speakers finally wrung spontaneous applause. Special Features For Nov. 7 Issue

The contents of this issue will be a treat for every revolutionary worker. Among the articles will be a section from Victor Serge's "The Year One of the Russian Revolution," appearing for the first time in the English language; comrade Trotsky contributes a penetrating analysis of the Soviet bureaucracy on the basis of Tarov's experiences, and his brilliant treatise on "The Art of Insurrection"; an essay by Lenin; articles by Cannon, Muste, Specter, Swaback, Roberts, etc. The special edition of the NEW MILITANT should serve not only to commemorate the Russian Revolution but should act as a spur in the subscription drive and in the campaign to make the eight-pager a permanent phenomena.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 22.—While Attorney-General U. S. Webb, who spent thousands of dollars of state funds to finance the prosecution of Norman Mini and the other Sacramento workers for criminal syndicalism, refuses to prosecute the anti-labor vigilantes of Santa Rosa on the grounds that his office has no funds a new crop of reactionary prosecutions is arising out of the soil fertilized by the slush fund of the State Chamber of Commerce.

This fund, the revelation of whose existence by the National Sacramento Appeal Committee several weeks ago was a national sensation, is being used to send reactionary agitators around the state to finance labor spying activities. Prosecutors McAllister and Johnson, who managed the Sacramento frame-up, are now addressing Chamber meetings in various counties, and urging more criminal syndicalism prosecutions. Simultaneously, the American Legion has opened a drive to make life impossible for the ten Sacramento criminal syndicalism defendants who were acquitted.

Put No Trust in Lewis and Co. Is the Slogan

By A. J. MUSTE

A fist fight between the heads of the two biggest unions in the A. F. of L., Hutchison of the Carpenters and John L. Lewis of the Miners, featured the closing day of the Atlantic City convention. In more ways than one this affair was symbolic. The boys were actually excited about something and that has not been true of the top leadership of the A. F. of L. for years. These comfortable bureaucrats were not the kind to take life seriously, and they did not need to excite themselves about anything except their golf scores and the stock market. That day is over. The rift in the leadership is the most serious that has occurred in the entire fifty-five years history of the Federation. The historic one-round bout of Hutchison and Lewis took place over Hutchison's opposition to letting a Federal Union delegate speak for an industrial union in his industry. Lewis said it was "small potatoes" of Hutchison not to let the "little fellows" have their say. Hutchison rose to the full height of his six feet two and said he had been brought up on small potatoes and that's what made him so little—just like a boy out of a Mark Twain story. He also, it is said, called Lewis a naughty name. With that Lewis sent one to the jaw. Soon the two men were rolling about on the floor. When they had been separated, Lewis brushed back his raven locks and like a nineteenth century Shakespearean actor strode to his seat. Hutchison, the craft unionist, had to take time out to dress his wounds. That also was symbolic. Meanwhile William Green, face as red as a tomato, looking on at the struggle of personalities and forces too big for him, strove in vain to get order. And that also was symbolic.

"Progressives" in a Minority

It must not be inferred that the so-called "progressives" under the leadership of John Lewis constituted a majority in this convention. On the roll call on key questions they were regularly defeated by the Old Guard by a vote of about 18,000 to 10,000. The convention reaffirmed the San Francisco decision for "restricted," i. e. trade, industrial unions in basic industries, thus favoring the craft unions. The convention is on record for the Roosevelt "social security" program and against the Lunden bill. Labor Party resolutions were defeated and the A. F. of L.'s stand for "non-partisan" political action reaffirmed, though the Executive Council was instructed to draft an amendment to the U. S. constitution to empower Congress to enact social legislation. The A. F. of L. forces generally can be counted on to support Roosevelt in 1936, unless entirely unforeseen shifts in the economic or political situation occur. After the smashing blow at Matthew Woll for his connection with the red-baiting National Civic Federation, the Executive Council has to withdraw its proposed amendment to the A. F. of L. constitution barring all "reds" from any A. F. of L. union. However, a provision barring them from being delegates to any State Federation of Labor and city central body was adopted, as was a strong resolution against "Communism" in general.

It may be safely predicted that within a year or two the so-called "progressives" of the Lewis-Hillman et al camp will achieve a majority. Their industrial union resolution e. g. got a bigger vote than resolutions for unemployment insurance at the A. F. of L. convention just preceding the one where it was finally adopted.

The Real Program of Lewis

It must again be emphasized that it now becomes a crucial importance for the workers, and especially the active and advanced ones, to understand precisely what forces suffered set-backs at Atlantic City and what is the real character and role of the elements now gaining (Continued on Page 3)

'Hot Cargo' Fight Rages Up and Down West Coast

By EARL LANE

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 20.—The bitter struggle over the hot cargo issue, which had been somewhat eased by the lifting of the embargo on the British Columbia cargo in the holds of S. S. "Point Clear" and the termination of the waterfront employers' efforts to blacklist 1,600 San Francisco longshoremen, flared into open warfare again last week.

On October 8 longshoremen began unloading the Swayne & Hoyt freighter, "Point Clear," which had been tied up in San Francisco harbor since June 22, following a release voted by the Waterfront and Transport Workers Association of Vancouver. As the striking bargemen had returned to work pending arbitration of their demands, the only vital question left unsettled was that of registering additional longshoremen. The union demanded that any additional workers to be registered must come from the ranks of the extras holding I.L.A. permit cards. The bosses insisted upon the registration of 1,000 additional men, no doubt hoping to be able to train an army of strikebreakers to do the difficult stevedoring work, thus having a reserve army of workmen for use in future struggles with the longshoremen.

Victory in Honolulu

The matter was placed in the hands of the Joint Longshore Labor Relations Board. After the union had stated that they would resist any effort to put additional men to work, until all men with I.L.A. permits had been registered, the board handed down a decision that only these men be registered—a clear-cut victory for the union. Another longshoremen's victory was reported from far off Honolulu last week, 900 men at that port winning wage increases of ten cents per hour. The seamen are playing the role of the vanguard in the latest development. (Continued on Page 4) rank of the Social Party, he said, "in order to fight side by side with militants who are developing toward correct revolutionary positions." The Revolutionary Left, he said, would have to work and fight in common on precise issues, "for it is in action and in the struggle itself that workers develop and perfect themselves." He called for the formation of a solid bloc to become "the embryo of the great truly revolutionary party of tomorrow!"

Ferment Starts in Stalinist Ranks

But it is not only in the ranks of the Social Party that this ferment and turmoil is apparent. Cracks and widening fissures are beginning to appear in the solidified bureaucratic front of the Stalinist party as well. The workers in the Stalinist ranks are resisting the rush to social patriotism, class collaboration and parliamentarism which has swept the party bureaucracy and which determine now all its policies.

Recently three of the most militant members of the 11th district in Paris, R. Clair, Fyot and Julien, were expelled from the Stalinist ranks. In their letter to the leadership they criticize the Front (Continued on Page 3)

"People's Peace Parades" Today, Preparedness Parades Tomorrow

The leaflet issued under the auspices of the American League Against War and Fascism to advertise the People's Parade for Peace, the latest Stalinist sideshow, for some reason bears the motto: "Remember Woodrow Wilson."

"Remember 1917!" It would be more in the interests of peace to have the slogan read "Remember Wilson . . . Remember 1916!" For the Wilson who in 1917 was marching in Preparedness and mobilization parades, was in 1916 marching in "People's Parades for Peace!"

When the Second International in 1914 made its last minute declaration of support for the bourgeois governments that were embarking on war, Lenin immediately proclaimed the death of the Second International and started to build the Third although the forces at his disposal were infinitesimal, a few hundred in Russia, and a few scores at the most in the other capitalist nations. From those few hundreds a revolution sprang in less than three years, and in five the whole of Europe tottered on the brink of proletarian revolution.

Lenin, as a revolutionary realist, knew that there was only one way to put a stop to war; he knew that no mere masses, no matter how great, no mere demonstrations, no peace parades, no petitions and pledges, no matter how long and impressive, could stop war. He knew that only the proletarian revolution could stop the war—and he said so, even if he could find only a few hundred to agree with him at first.

Everybody "Opposes" War Now

Now the self-advertized leaders of the wreckage of Lenin's International, the Stalinists, may still believe that only proletarian revolution can put a stop to war—but if they believe it they are careful to conceal their belief. They take everything but a serious and realistic attitude toward war; they call on capitalist governments to stop war (sanctions), on combinations of capitalist governments to stop war (the League of Nations), on social democrats who have already once proved their inability to stop war (the British Labor Party, the French S. P., etc.), on Christian and church organizations, on reactionary trade unionists, they call upon everyone but the revolutionary proletariat—they call upon all those who turned against and persecuted Lenin in 1914 for his stand against war and for the struggle or revolution.

The Daily Worker of October 19 informs us that a great "People's March for Peace" is scheduled for the 26th under, among others, the auspices of the American League Against War and Fascism. This People's March for Peace has the "backing of A. F. of L. leaders" the Daily Worker is happy to announce. (Continued on Page 2)

THE A. F. of L. CONVENTION

Sunday, October 27th - 5 P. M.

IRVING PLAZA HALL

Irving Place & 15th St.

THE MANAGER'S CORNER

A fore-runner of the coming 8-page weekly will appear on the anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution. It should be a spur to step up the present campaign by a serious concentration on the job of securing many more new readers. The funds coming in for new subscriptions, plus the enlarged circulation, will then serve to make the eight-page weekly a reality.

We have set a goal of 1,000 new subscribers by the time of the 2nd National Convention of the Workers Party, to be held December 26, and a corresponding increase in bundle sales. This would be a total of 2,000 new readers and the funds they bring will surely put the campaign over the top. Each party branch has been asked to accept a definite quota of new subscribers already submitted for its approval, and the full quota list is to be published in our next issue.

We are starting this phase of the campaign in a big way. All wheels are to be put into motion. A large-scale circulation of numerous contacts is the beginning; special advertisements will follow, with special efforts to obtain subscriptions at all party meetings. All party branches are asked to get into action and follow up the contributions they have already made by a steady flow of new subscriptions. The combination offer of $2.00 for a year's subscription to the NEW MILITANT and NEW INTERNATIONAL has proved very popular and should be made use of. Also, the club card system is to be utilized.

The prices offered for individual subscribers are still in effect. The best sub-getter, so far, has been Leon Goodman of Philadelphia, whose additional $2.00 sent in for new subscriptions recorded in this issue brings him to a total of $19.00 turned in for new subscriptions during the campaign. He is only $1.00 short of winning the first prize, "The History of the Russian Revolution." As soon as that additional sub arrives, the books will be forwarded to him. On the whole, the NEW MILITANT is making headway. The branches responded well to the Special Press Fund Tax which brought in a couple of hundred dollars extra during the recent weeks. Our financial statements show an increasingly better attention to sub renewals and bundle payments. Our economic base is much better than when the campaign for the eight-page weekly began and the present special sub drive should easily top the campaign off.

Among the direct contributions made, the Flatbush branch of New York is the first branch to exceed its quota. The Center Branch of New York has moved ahead to third place in the campaign with a total contribution of $69.06, and it is now following closely on the heels of the Boston branch with a total of $76.95 and Harlem with a total of $73.10. Fourth place goes to the West Side branch, New York City, with a total of $62.05; then follows the Kensington, (Philadelphia,) branch with $39.78; the Los Angeles branch with $37.50; the Minneapolis branch with $33.50; the Chicago branches with $33.05, etc.

Since our last report we have received the following contributions:

People's Peace Parades Today Preparedness Parades Next

And it proudly prints a picture of Francis Gorman, the man who sold out the textile strike, as one of the backers.

Onward Christian Soldiers

Lenin stopped war with a revolution; the Daily Worker is going to stop it with a parade up Fifth Avenue. And where is the parade going to march to? What is the objective of the People? How is this demonstration to stop war? Not a word. It seems that all good Christians, pacifists, legionnaires, Odd Fellows, etc., are going to march up to Columbus Circle where they will hear speakers, and then go home satisfied that the cause of peace is secure—until the day war breaks out. What a travesty of revolutionary Marxism!

The article continues with a quotation from the appeal of the Peace Parade Committee:

"The League of Nations did not prevent Japan from devastating Manchuria and North China. The League of Nations did not prevent Mussolini from unleashing the mad dogs of war. The neutrality resolution passed by Congress is not a guarantee of our security. . . . We solemnly declare to you that no League of Nations, no neutrality proclamations will secure peace and prevent world war."

All this is true enough. But we can as solemnly declare that People's Parades for Peace will never prevent another world war.

On the last page of the same issue of the Daily Worker we find an editorial:

"To support League of Nations sanctions against Italy and to fail to take concrete measures to carry out sanctions in this country by stopping all trade with Italy is to indulge in little more than a noble gesture." (!!!)

What kind of light-mindedness is this? On page two the Daily Worker justly remarks that the League can never prevent war; on page eight it editorializes for support of the very League which can never prevent war! Draw you own conclusions.

The "Church Militant"

October 20: Another advance notice of the People's Parade for Peace. "Walter Higgins, commander of the Marsh McLaughlin Post 5 of the United American War Veterans, said: 'I will be glad to participate in the march.'"

"The Rev. William Lloyd Imes, Negro pastor, said: 'The St. James Presbyterian Church approves the march.'"

"The Porto Rican National Organization, the Mella Club, the Chile Club and other local organizations endorsed the March."

On the last page an editorial exhortes: "On Friday the voice of Dr. Samuel Trexler at the Third Lutheran World Convention was raised in defense of peace. All friends of peace will hail Dr. Trexler's courageous statement."

The only peace lovers missing from this list are the Pope and Hitler. As for all the reverends, who appear in increasing numbers at every new Stalinist demonstration: The Church has been opposed to war in peacetime for two thousand years and has never succeeded in stopping one. It remained for the Stalinists to discover after two thousand years that the Church is a force for peace to be "hailed by all friends of peace."

October 21: The People's Parade of Peace is being worked up into a regular parade of the people's betrayers. The Daily Worker headlines the fact that "35 A. F. of L. Leaders Sign Proclamation Against War" issued by the People's Peace Parade Committee. The 35 leaders whom the Daily Worker celebrates include such eminent labor fakery as Dillon, Gorman, Hochman, Murray, Kennedy (Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania), etc., etc. These are the sterling friends of peace to whom the Daily Worker delegates the struggle for peace. As if to paint up their treachery, they quote from the proclamation signed by the fakery: "This war has begun. We, organized labor of America, are opposed to war. As far back as 1914 our former President Samuel Gompers said that 'Labor has nothing to gain and everything to lose by war.'"

The Real Gompers

"As far back as" is the catch. For, like every other big shot peace time friend of peace, Gompers supported the war when it came with all his might and main. He ran up and down the country lining up the rank and file in the A. F. of L. for the war and for the army. And with him went how many of the present signers of the proclamation or peace?

October 22: The Daily Worker prints in full an appeal from Waldo McNutt, chairman of the American Youth Congress, who concludes: "We call upon our parents, our friends, our leaders in government and all sincere opponents of war to rally now to march for peace," etc. What has happened to the class struggle? Where is the struggle for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie? What has happened to Lenin's thesis that the only way to stop war is to intensify the class struggle for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie? All have disappeared in a common class melange of Stalinist workers, ministers, parents, governmental leaders, trade union fakery, war veterans, and so on.

The People's Parade for Peace is a great illusion. Its members are not friends of peace but political demagogues who capitalize now on the peace sentiment and soon on the war sentiment. The parade up Fifth Avenue is but an echo of the parades before the last war, and a forecast of the next war, when many of the stalwarts of peace will march under peace banners today will march under the banners of war, and lead behind them the very workers whom the Stalinists are turning over to them today.

There is only one way to stop

Striker Tells of WPA Victory in Allentown

Independent Class Tactic Smashed Through Gov't Officials' Threats and Trickery to Union Victory

By LESTER HECKMAN

The WPA program in Allentown, Pa., as far as the unemployed workers are concerned, was and still is a program of forced labor at coolie wages, and an attempt by the capitalist state to smash the trade union movement and lower the American standard of living. But the Pennsylvania Unemployed League, together with other working class organizations, were prepared when the local WPA officials attempted to put the program into effect.

The first project to start was at Jordan Park, where approximately 430 men were called to work to beautify a park instead of doing some useful work such as slum clearance and the tearing down of hovels unfit for habitation. Of course these social-minded hypocrites never think in these terms. The project started on a Monday morning and worked long enough for the leaders of the various organizations to agitate and organize an effective strike by noon. A meeting was first proposed for the following Thursday evening, for the purpose of taking a strike vote. But the workers were so dissatisfied that they could not stand to work under these miserable conditions—even "for our Government," as some smooth-tongued politicians frequently try to make backward workers believe is the case. The reason the unemployed organizations wanted their members to work for a few days was so that we could contact those who did not belong to any of the unemployed groups, in order to have a perfect strike.

The arrested picketers were charged with disorderly conduct, and the reactionary justice, one of the political leaders of Allentown, said he would be lenient and suspend sentences. But to this the workers answered that they would appeal the decision of the Justice of the Peace Court and demand a jury trial, with the express purpose of making a test case not only of the Police Commissioner's ban of all picketing but of even the Mayor's year-old proclaimed limit of ten pickets. And the court, thrown into confusion for a time, saw the strategy and dismissed the case. Before leaving, the strikers were warned not to attempt to form a picket line again, but they replied that they did not recognize the Mayor's proclamation and so did not intend to live up to it.

The next steps were to meet the project workers before the latter went to work and to persuade them not to. This educational process had its effect on the scabs, and quite a few of them were unable to work due to "physical strain," through PEACEFUL persuasion. The strikers appealed to the labor unions of Allentown and received the support of 19 locals of the C.L.U. over the head of Mr. Bader, reactionary A. F. of L. faker.

About this time Mr. Donovan, labor advisor for six states in the East, came into the territory—whether on a visit, as he stated, or by orders, as we believed was the case and which later proved to be.

The strike committee had the opportunity of meeting Mr. Donovan one fine day, while calling on Mr. Mack to get his answer to our demands. Of course, Mr. Mack's answer was that he could do nothing about it since it was a Federal program and would have to be dealt with by Federal officials. After putting questions before Mr. Mack and asking him whether or not the rubber workers' union! Despite the astounding proportions of the protest which has swept through the shops of Akron like a prairie fire fanned by a gale, the rubber barons have flung another challenge to the workers. They have announced that by January the eight-hour day will be here to stay! An indication of the restlessness of the rubber workers under this continual exploitation is the rejoining of over 100 men in the Goodyear local union. The bona-fide unionists are agitating through the factories, taking full advantage of the break in the company union and the company officials' consternation. We previously pointed out how the lash of competition and the battle of Wall Street interests for control of the rubber industry was the reason the rubber barons were cutting wages and lengthening hours.

War Situation Involved Another factor has arisen which the rubber barons are not overlooking as an excuse to lower the poor standard of living of the workers. The precarious world situation with its dangers to world commerce is causing a rise in the price of crude rubber; ninety percent of the rubber comes from the East Indies and India and there is possibility that the Suez Canal might be closed any day to shipping. This means higher freight rates for rubber across the American continent and increased difficulties in shipping.

These events in the rubber industry again show how the basic contradictions of the capitalist system cause the bosses to try to beat down wages and exploit labor more than ever before—a fall in the rate of profit drives them into a frenzy to preserve themselves.

They also indicate that the workers are becoming more resentful under the lash of these cruel masters and that this antagonism is gradually culminating into an explosive force whose power it is difficult to predict. It must be borne in mind however, that Akron has been the scene of more than one large spontaneous strike.

Even if the company should suddenly decide to accede temporarily to the company union demands, it will mean little for the rubber workers' union has already explained to hundreds of workers the exact meaning of the move—an attempt to fool the workers into staying out of their only real hope, the area administrator, with the assistance of General Beary, police commissioner, and his Allentown cossacks, then prohibited any picketing. If the capitalist state is not overthrown the war cannot be stopped. It is the duty of the proletarian party to maintain a class line under every circumstance, war or peace. And if its ranks are small, if it cannot parade with thousands of "peace lovers" up Fifth Avenue, if it cannot rally the ministers, and government officials, and trade union bureaucrats, it can hold together on a principled line, the only line that will ultimately lead to the overthrow of the whole capitalist system and sweep away all the ministers, fakery, demagogues, politicians and . . . Stalinists who are its main support today.

CONCERNING RUMORS OF TROTSKY'S ILLNESS

(From Le Verite)

It was announced over the radio on Oct. 10 that comrade Trotsky, at present in Norway, was "desperately ill."

We openly brand this statement, made for reasons we cannot yet understand, as a canard. Trotsky's life is in no way in danger.

Numerous comrades have made inquiries on this matter—a sign of the profound regard in which the proletarian vanguard holds the companion of Lenin.

local state administrators had certain authority to change the program, he said they did not, and the only one to change any part of the program was President Roosevelt. The committee then asked him to give us an answer for the change in program in New York City. This of course he evaded by saying that he did not know anything about New York state. Still dissatisfied, the committee pointed out that there must be some flexibility in the program, and cited New York as an example, to which Mr. Mack very conveniently answered, "Yes, always do, that he did not know." During this conference with Mr. Mack, Mr. Donovan came into the office. His method of approach and trickery was to extend his hand and say, "Comrades, I am Mr. Donovan, formerly of the Machinists' Union."

The committee asked Mr. Donovan if he was sent into the strike situation by the Federal authorities. His answer was No, and that he happened to be in Harrisburg and, never having been in Allentown, decided to visit here, and that we should not feel that this little strike was so important as to cause the Federal authorities to send anyone here. After some discussion on the strike he said the strike smelled of a political nature and said the demands were utopian, to which the committee answered that this was a misinterpretation on his part. Charged with this, Mr. Donovan assured the committee that he had not been sent there, but a few minutes later, during the course of our conversation, he pulled out of his pocket our own typewritten demands and exposed the role he was playing.

Shortly after Mr. Donovan's visit the press received word that there was going to be an increase of 10 percent in wages and a reduction from 140 to 120 hours per month. The strike was settled and an organization set up of all project workers from the three participating organizations, to be known as the Joint Labor Council of Project Workers, under the leadership of the Joint Labor Council consisting of the unions that endorsed and supported the strike. Thus ended the duties of the strike committee. The organization of project workers have had membership cards printed, started on a dues paying basis, and are organizing for future strike activities which, of course, are very much needed in these trying times.

Resentment High as Akron Company Union Revolts at New Lay Off Scheme

cent issue of the NEW MILITANT as a warning to the workers. Officials of the United Rubber Workers of America, who arrived home today from their battle for industrial unionism at the A. F. of L. convention, immediately laid plans to organize the angry workers into the unions so effective collective action could be taken against the ruthless companies.

The "upper-house" of the Goodyear "industrial assembly" as the company calls its tool, is expected to meet Tuesday morning with the "lower-house" to act on the resolution of the lower house which demands continuation of the six-hour day.

Spurred by the shouts of the workers, the lower house of Goodyear's pet project, voted to hold a referendum in the factories on the six-hour day but Litchfield coldly told the public in an interview that the company would not countenance any such move.

Probably the company union will be brought into line by threats from the officials. Nevertheless the damage has been done, for the veil of paternalism carefully fostered by Goodyear has been torn from the eyes of muddled workers because the hard-boiled, slave-driving vice-president, Clifford Slusser, contemptuously vetoed the resolution favoring the continuation of a six-hour day. This is what caused the revolt, and the lower house immediately over-ruled him by a unanimous vote!

The impotence of the company union to aid the workers in any real issue stood out nakedly and smashed through all the propaganda for it during the past twenty years.

Revolt Spreads Rapidly Even if the company should suddenly decide to accede temporarily to the company union demands, it will mean little for the rubber workers' union has already explained to hundreds of workers the exact meaning of the move—an attempt to fool the workers into staying out of their only real hope,

Stalinists Rage While Union Organizes Chicken and Candy Workers Through Victorious Strikes

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 21.—The Stalinists have lost no time in bringing to town the American edition of the French "People's Front"—in the form of a Women's League Against the High Cost of Living. This remarkable organization was formed about a month ago. The C. P. has mobilized all its forces to make the thing a success—from the pin-nez of the Theater Unionist to the fashionable glove of the League Against War and Fascism, all the professional Stalinists rallied around. After a sufficient number of Farmer-Labor women and wives of trade unionists were attracted, a mass meeting was drummed up in a local church (after all, it was only fitting that this group have the blessings of the King of Kings as well as the benedictions of Stalin). It was decided to call a meat strike. True, some of the Northside Stalinists objected to striking the Jewish butchers who, they said, were very poor and shouldn't be harassed. Finally the thing boiled down to a strike against Gentile meat.

Local 574 Becomes the Enemy But then came the puzzler—Who were to be the scabs? Should they be the meat packers? or the housewives who walked through the picket lines? The C.P.'ers immersed themselves in the gasses of the 7th Congress and finally came up with the answer. The big scab was to be Local 574! I am not fooling you, comrades, this is the actual truth. The drivers of Local 574 were designated the role of scabs. Because, you see, they transported the meat to the butcher shops, which made the Communist party very indignant, which caused them to form the W.L.A.T.H.C.O.L. Yes, it was finally decided to picket the market and the drivers of 574. A very foolish proposition was becoming slightly serious. On Thursday noon, the day prior to the four-day strike, a strike committee meeting was scheduled. Bill Brown and Miles Dunne of Local 574 attended. took the floor, and asked: 1. Why hadn't they been informed of the strike plans? 2. Why was Local 574—and meat—made the butt of the strike? Why not the electricians, or the pretzel makers or the creators of fancy silk stockings? 3. Why was the movement called a strike instead of a boycott? 4. If such boycotts were effective, what was the use of having such silly things as trade unions, political parties, or a class-struggle philosophy?

The assembly saw the point, and the Stalinists inwardly raged but remained mum. One Farmer-Laborite expressed the feelings of all: "If I had thought of these angles before," she said, "I would have had nothing to do with this movement." Dozens of other women followed her out of the hall.

A Real Organization Needed It is hardly necessary to point out that, by its very nature, such organizations as the W.L.A.T.H.C.O.L. are a complete negation of the class struggle. After all, Mrs. Fatt of Lowry Hill objects just as strenuously as does Mama Workman to being over-charged for pork chops. But the consumer will never alter this state of affairs. Only a victorious struggle of the workers can bring the giant packing plants to their knees. The accent must be placed on higher wages. What is needed is a Women's League of Struggle which will place its members at the disposal of striking workers, to function in the strike kitchen, in the hospital, etc.—to support all struggles of the workers for higher wages.

Needless to say, the Stalinists by their latest actions have brought the vegetarians to their feet with a bang. The most profound social convulsions will doubtless take place in the near future, and I promise to keep the comrades informed of every step of the battle.

CHICKEN AND CANDY WORKERS ORGANIZE AND STRIKE MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 21.—Several weeks go, the girl chicken pickers in three of the largest houses staged a spontaneous walk-out and came up to Local 574's hall for assistance. The strikers were given assistance in organizing, and a set of demands was drawn up and presented to the bosses. The strike was won shortly. The new union continues to meet in 574's hall, is growing rapidly, and has already applied to the American Federation of Labor for a federal charter.

It will be recalled by readers of the NEW MILITANT that it was the question of organizing the chicken pickers that was used by the bosses to provoke the July-August 574 strike of last year. (There is something about the idea of an organization of chicken pickers that outrages the local bosses.) Today in Minneapolis the chicken pickers have a strong union. Roy Weir, organizer of the Central Labor Union, has indicated that Local 574 can retain them as a special section of the union.

Candy Makers Win Wednesday morning, Oct. 16, the workers at the Powell Candy Company staged a spontaneous walkout and also came to Local 574 for assistance. With 574's help, an agreement was drawn up, and by noon the strikers were back to work with wage increases of from fifteen to twenty cents per hour, and recognition. The next morning the good news had travelled to the other candy workers. On Thursday the Carley workers came to 574 and asked for help. The request was of course granted. Roy Weir, organizer of the Central Labor Union, was invited over, and made a fine speech, explaining to the new recruits to the union movement that their easy victories were the result of the militant struggles staged by Local 574 in the past. On Friday the Hollywood candy workers struck. A mass meeting for all local candy workers was held Monday evening. There is no question but that this industry, employing about 750 workers, will be completely unionized in the near future.

PARTY AT WORK MINNEAPOLIS The Minneapolis branch is making extensive preparations for the tour of comrades Shachtman and Wasserman. On Friday evening, Nov. 1, a mass meeting has been arranged at the Pythian Hall, 444 So. 4th St., Minneapolis, at which comrade Shachtman will speak on the subject: "The Danger of War!" Over one hundred tickets have already been sold for this important meeting.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 2, a party of all friends of the Workers Party will be held at the branch headquarters, 631 Third Avenue So. in honor of the visiting comrades. Other local meetings are being arranged for comrade Shachtman.

On Friday night, Oct. 25, V. R. Dunne spoke at an open meeting at the branch headquarters on "The American Federation of Labor Convention: Craft or Industrial Unions." Comrade Dunne spent several days at the Atlantic City convention of the A. F. of L.

EASTERN OHIO An inter-branch committee was formed at a conference in Youngstown by delegates from the Akron, Youngstown and Cleveland branches to cooperate in unemployed, trade union and organizational work with comrade Jack Wilson of Akron selected as permanent secretary. New Castle delegates who arrived, through unavoidable circumstances, after the conference did its main work, likewise joined in the move to co-ordinate the Party work in the Ohio district. A program including mass meetings with exchange speakers, special classes and forums was adopted.

A Sacramento Defense meeting is being held in Akron Sunday, Oct. 27 with comrade Wilson as speaker.

Sixty persons heard comrade Max Shachtman lecture on "The Coming World War," at a mass meeting held in New Castle last Thursday night.

A good portion of trade unionists attended the Youngstown mass meeting held for comrade Shachtman Friday night when he talked on the war question.

A meeting was held this Friday night in Youngstown by the Workers Party branch and the Spartacus Youth League with comrade R. Ferguson, of Akron as speaker. He discussed the life and teachings of Karl Marx.

TUCSON, ARIZ. Comrades in Tucson and vicinity are selling party literature and carrying on other activities. They believe a branch may be organized in the near future.

SALT LAKE CITY Splendid progress is being made by the branch here which includes a railroad man, teachers, smelter men, office workers, etc. in its membership. Members are taking an active part in mass organization work and making an excellent showing in sale of party literature, etc.

THE DIVISION OF ETHIOPIA

The imperialist robbers have evidently reached agreement on the proper share of the "white man's burden" that each is to bear in Ethiopia. The inordinate ambitions of fascist Rome have yielded in part to the never satisfied hunger of the British lion. The Lake Tana region of Ethiopia has been recognized by Mussolini as sacrosanct to English capitalism. The English can pursue their vast project in the Sudan and Egypt for the building of a cotton empire which shall render Great Britain free from all dependence on the United States as a source of this precious raw material. The success of this enterprise depends on absolute control of the waters that give fertility to the land, the waters that flow from Lake Tana into the Blue Nile. This was one of the major interests that Britain felt to be threatened by the Italian thrust into Ethiopia. While the gestures at Geneva continue out of sheer inertia and in order to present some sort of facade for a structure that has long since crumbled, the real imperialist "solution" involving arrangements among Italy, France and England has been achieved. The spoils having been divided, the growls of the English lion will subside. English diplomacy will now devote itself, as it has been preparing to do since the start of the present crisis, to casting all blame on France for the failure to stop the seizure of Ethiopia by the Italian army. This propaganda will also serve to merge into justification of a more and more outright diplomacy of alliances in Europe. Already the writers are coining the phrase that will carry the gullible masses over to the new state of affairs. There will be not a League of Nations but Leagues of Nations. England will enter into such leagues to guarantee the peace in Western Europe, but not in Eastern Europe where "there will never be peace unless the nations there are left to work out their own salvation," as Sidebottom writes in the London Times. How hypocritical this is can be seen in the methods adopted by English capitalism to leave alone Russia and the East of Europe. The British navy is being expanded at breakneck speed, the armaments and munitions plants belch smoke night and day. At the same time England aids Germany materially and diplomatically in its preparations for the attack on the Soviet Union. Everywhere on the continent England is planning carefully for the new and inevitable world war.

SOCIALIST PARTY AND THE COMING WAR

(By the Editorial Board)

Resolution of N.E.C. Reveals Centrist Position on Basic Problems of the War Danger

The resolution on the war situation adopted by the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party at its Chicago meeting, Oct. 12-13, and the "Answer" of the Socialist Call to the Bauer-Zyromski thesis, in the October 12 issue, constitute the two most important statements made so far by American Socialists on the war question. To understand what is going on among American Socialists on the war issue, one must recall the three tendencies within the world Socialist movement:

The Outright Chauvinists

1. The leaders of the Second International continue their historic position of unqualified social-patriotism, expressed most blatantly by the British Labor Party's declaration of "the duty unflinchingly to support our Government in all the risks and consequences of fulfilling its duty" against Italy. The American "Old Guard" automatically adopt this position; the same Oct. 12 issue of the New Leader which supports imperialist sanctions under the hypocritical slogan "Sanctions Do Not Mean War," already advertises a speech by Dr. William Bolin, Old Guard theoretician, in support of "Military Sanctions!"

2. The pseudo-lefts in the Second International, led by Bauer of Austria and Zyromski of France, use the most inflammatory language, the most "realistic" exposure of imperialism to call for support of imperialist governments in the war against Germany. These "lefts," now that the Third International has come down to their level, are the strongest proponents of organic unity on a program of social-patriotism and whitewash of the Stalinist bureaucracy. Those whom Blum and Vandervelde cannot bring along with their traditional chauvinistic support of "their" own capitalist governments, Bauer and Zyromski seek to drag along with their "revolutionary" reasons for social patriotism—reasoning identical with the Stalinist treachery of the Seventh Congress.

Division Growing Between Chauvinists and Revolutionists

3. The unification of chauvinists, pseudo-lefts and Stalinists into one camp has sounded the death-knell of all groups which seek to stand between this camp and that of the revolutionists. The alternatives are so clear-cut! Until the actual outbreak of war in 1914, the lines were not clearly drawn. Today, however, before the war, the traitors are already on record. Hence, intermediate groupings will inevitably be cut to pieces if they do not choose sides. Already such groups are moving decisively into one or another of the opposing camps. The long-independent Norwegian Labor Party, having come out for economic sanctions, moves rapidly toward the Second International. The S.A.P. of Germany, a left-wing split-off from the Social Democracy, led by ex-Brandenburgers, takes giant strides into the social-patriotic camp by declaring its admiration for the "realism" of the Seventh Congress. The boasted anti-war struggle of the Socialist League in the British Labor Party has already petered out; its spokesman, Sir Stafford Cripps, fawningly declaring to the Brighton Congress of the Labor Party: "Our common objectives (1) of peace and Socialism through Democracy (2) are far too great and too vital to the workers of this country to allow any question to arise of a split in our ranks." ("Any question" being in this case the question of social-patriotism versus revolutionary working class opposition!) Thus the Socialist League, in the name of unity, submits to social-patriotism.

The Camp of Revolution

But at the same time that some intermediate groups go into the traitors' camp, others move sharply in the opposite direction. The I.L.P. of England, yesterday closest of independent groupings to the Stalinists, comes out sharply against imperialist sanctions, and in its intransigent struggle against both chauvinist internationalists, is rapidly moving toward a Leninist position against war. The powerful group of French Socialists around Pivert, only a year ago identified with the Zyromski group, have come out against national defense; and the whole Socialist Youth of the Seine district, following its expelled leaders, is conducting a heroic struggle against the Stalinist and Socialists betrayers. Thus, the growing war danger unifies not only the social patriots; it also is the central issue which draws the revolutionary forces closer together and wins new contingents to their ranks.

It is against this background that one can best understand the meaning of the American Socialists' statements on the war situation.

The Old Guard and the N.E.C.

The American Old Guard is not a peculiar phenomenon; it is somewhat analogous to the Neo-Socialists, led by Marquet, who split from the French Socialists two years ago. Time and time, Leon Blum attempted to arrive at permanent harmony with Marquet, only to have to break, finally, because of the inability of this ossified right-wing to adapt itself to the revolutionary ferment pervading the Socialist masses after Hitler's victory. Similarly, the American Leon Blums, having sought by the ambiguous phraseology of the Detroit Declaration of Principles, to maintain their grip on the leftward-moving Socialists, made a desperate attempt, three months ago, at the New York N.E.C. meeting, to arrive at a "peace pact" with the Old Guard. But even this blow to the left did not satisfy the Old Guard which demanded nothing less than complete control of the party. Hence, after three short months, the N.E.C. majority, at the Chicago meeting, was compelled to break on a number of questions with the ossified Old Guard. This break may even lead to a split similar to that of the French Neo-Socialists. The complete rigidity of the Old Guard is shown by its present rabid opposition to cooperation with the Comintern, at a time when the Comintern has come out for social-patriotism when the French Socialists are moving toward organic unity, the Belgian and Swiss Socialists are in a similar united front, and the representatives of the Second International are conferring with Cachin and Thorez concerning the basis of cooperation of the two internationals!

The N.E.C.'s "Radical" Phraseology

At the time of the split with the Neo-Socialists, Leon Blum, leaning on the left for support, used positively inflammatory language. "Working class revolution," "armed insurrection," came trippingly from his lips. The split over, and his own hegemony temporarily consolidated, he reverted to his usual social-patriotism. A similar strategy governs the American Socialist N.E.C. as the struggle breaks out again with the Old Guard. Hence, one finds in its war resolution a great deal of radical phraseology. It also permits itself this phraseology for another reason: American imperialism is a colossus so powerful that it can afford for a considerable period to hold aloof from the opposing war camps forming in Europe; hence there is none of the governmental pressure which in Europe "helped" the Socialist parties make their decisions on the war question. The N.E.C. resolution, therefore, does not take the traditional, openly chauvinist position of the Second International leadership. Instead, it belongs to the category of pseudo-revolutionary documents like that of Bauer-Zyromski.

The N.E.C. has learned not a little from the Jesuitry of Bauer-Zyromski. Its resolution bristles with such phrases as "No device controlled by capitalist governments can be a trustworthy instrument of peace"—"We call for ceaseless working class struggle against all capitalist governments including the government of the U.S."

The Real Meaning of the Document

BUT it ALSO boasts that the Socialist Party has been the only political party during the last two presidential campaigns which has stood for the League of Nations; nor does it now repudiate this stand for the League of Nations. True, it speaks of support of the League, "only through reservations designed to free the League from the domination of the large imperialist countries and to direct its procedure into channels of democracy and peace," i.e., for a "reformed" League.

But to sow the illusion that it is theoretically possible to make a peace instrument out of the League of Nations is to sow the worst illusions. The League is, and cannot be anything else than the sum of the capitalist countries which constitute it. What "reservations" can "direct the procedure" of the U. S., for instance, "into channels of democracy and peace"? Even to pose the question is to demonstrate its absurdity. How can the League be "freed from the domination of the large imperialist countries"? By giving more votes to Austria, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Roumania, Albania, Switzerland, etc.? But these "small" countries are merely satellites of one or the other imperialist combination! We see, then, what a vicious illusion it is to suggest the possibility of purifying the League. Tomorrow, when the League powers are about to launch the war, it is directly through its League that the imperialist powers will arrange the war and provide themselves with the necessary idealistic cover; already supported by the Second and Third Internationals, the League powers undoubtedly will go through some mummery of giving "parity representation" to their satellites; perhaps give the International Labor Office a "labor voice" in the League etc., etc.

Nor is this all the poisonous broth that the Socialist N.E.C. has prepared for youth's future. America being outside the League, the N.E.C.—side by side with its radical phraseology about war resistance—calls for "legislation which will assure American neutrality." The American Socialist N.E.C., like its European colleagues, calls for imperialist governmental action as a peace move!

This is the same reasoning that leads the Stalinists and European Socialists to betray the working class to the capitalist war machine by calling upon the governments to enforce economic sanctions. The N.E.C. calls upon workers to fight for governmental legislation to insure peace. The fundamental crime is the same in both cases: it is to tell the workers to seek any form of governmental action against war, to entrust the fight against war, which is inseparable from the struggle against imperialism, to the imperialists themselves. The supporters of League of Nations' sanctions, the supporters of American "neutrality legislation" alike assign the decisive action to the imperialist governments.

Then fallacy of calling for governmental action against war arises from the failure to draw the necessary conclusions from the doctrine, to which the Socialists render lip-service, that war is inevitable under capitalism. From this doctrine it immediately follows that war is an integral part of the capitalist process; as "natural" to it as "peace" and a continuation of the "peace" policies by other means. Once this fundamental truth is grasped it becomes impossible to talk clap-trap about "legislation which will assure American neutrality." For the "peace" policy of American capitalist society is to secure the widest area of markets; without the expansion of markets capitalism cannot live; the only conditions under which a dominant imperialist power voluntarily withdraws from a given market is for war, as when Britain voluntarily withdraws, by means of sanctions, from the Italian market. In order to crush Italian competition in other markets! If American imperialism, therefore, were to accede to ironclad "neutrality" legislation, to withdrawal from the Italian market it would only be because its "peace" policy called for a war policy against Italy and her allies! In calling for such neutrality legislation, therefore, the Socialist N.E.C. is telling that section of the working class which follows it, to pursue a policy which, if the government accedes to it, is but the immediate forerunner of imperialist war; and the workers having supported the government in the first steps, would be led blindly into war.

For all its radical phraseology, therefore, the Socialist N.E.C. resolution does not depart fundamentally from the position of the Stalinists, the Second International and the Bauer-Zyromski group.

Why Thomas is a Social Patriot

To those sincere Socialist workers who have hitherto unthinkingly accepted the "anti-war" pacifism of Norman Thomas and Devere Allen, the intellectual fathers of the N.E.C. resolution and who recoil from the implications of the resolution, we wish to point out that there is no question of personal sincerity involved. As Lenin pointed out, no one has yet invented a sincerimeter. Thomas and Allen fail to understand the Marxist theory of the state; their consequent reformism leads them on all critical questions to seeking state-aid on behalf of the working class. (There are, of course, certain concessions which can be wrung through struggle from the capitalist state, and embodied in legislation: minimum wage legislation, unemployment benefits, free education, etc.) But it is theoretically and practically impossible to embody in legislation under the regime of imperialism anything more than partial concessions. It is false to call, as the Hillquit amendment does, for socialized production by legislative process. It is equally false to call for legislation to keep American imperialism from going to war; for war is as necessary to capitalism as is the exploitation of wage labor. Not only will not and cannot the capitalist state grant such fundamental concessions; whenever the working class, by its independent organization and activity, grows powerful enough to threaten to bring about by its own efforts socialized production and peace that capitalist state will throw off its democratic trappings and with naked force attempt to drown in blood the working class which dares to seek such ends.

To those like Thomas and Allen who are, as it were, congenitally unable to understand the necessity of the struggle and its scope, the opportunist short-cut to "legislation which will assure American neutrality" may be a comforting dream. But it is a false dream; workers lulled to sleep by it will be awakened to a terrible reality of imperialist war against which they have failed to prepare the struggle. There is only one road to the struggle against war: to turn the imperialist war into the civil war for the liberation of the working class. The social revolution is a hard road, a difficult road; but it is the only road. And the first step on that road is clarity: to know how to begin!

(Note: This second section of this article, dealing with the Socialist Call answer to the Bauer-Zyromski resolution, will appear next week.)

ascendancy. The chief point that must be made is that Lewis-Hillman et al. do not represent genuine progressivism and labor militancy. They aim to build a more up-to-date model (up-to-date for the U. S., for it is the same type of unionism as that of the British Trade Union Congress for years and the famous German Confederation of Labor before Hitler so easily wiped it out, represented) of class-collaboration unionism. The Gompers craft model with its syndicated slant, its anti-state bias (opposition to social legislation, etc.) designed to bargain with small employers, could meet in some fashion the needs of an earlier period. What Lewis-Hillman stand for is a more efficient type of unionism, structurally adapted to dealing with big corporations and governmental agencies such as labor boards which can "bargain collectively" and thus hold the workers in line in the present period. Both proponents of the new unionism such as Howard of the Typographical Union and opponents such as Matthew Woll put their finger on the real issue in the convention debates. Howard, for example, stated that if members who had come into the new federal union and the workers in the basic industries generally "were not permitted to organize under the federation's auspices they would do so under other leadership or under no leadership at all, and would present the government with a far more serious problem than if they had been taken into the federation." Matthew Woll put it in his somewhat more theoretical fashion, that he feared the adoption of unrestricted industrial charters would "destroy the basis of voluntarism in the labor movement and work toward diverting control of labor organizations to the jurisdiction of government agencies."

End of Gompersism

It was, in other words, Gompersism which finally died at this A. F. of L. convention at Atlantic City. His physical presence was absent from an A. F. of L. convention for the first time in the Federation's history at the 1925 Atlantic City gathering. His ghost made its exit from the convention this year.

Because there is thus no difference in underlying philosophy but only tactical distinctions between the old guard and the so-called progressives, it was possible, as the NEW MILITANT predicted, for Lewis to "attack" Green repeatedly during the convention and then turn around and nominate him for president of the Federation again, an office to which he was unanimously re-elected.

The present set-up, therefore, presents its encouraging and also its ominous aspect. The fact that there is a serious rift in the top leadership of the A. F. of L. which always means freer discussion and more leeway for dissenting conceptions of all kinds, is one of the encouraging features. The fact that hard-balled politicians such as Lewis sense an intensifying insurgency in the rank and file which makes it necessary for such labor fakers to step out of their old roles entirely and to pose as fighters and "radicals" also means much. The fact that the insurgent newcomers in automobiles, rubber, etc., who before the convention openly attacked Green in their own conventions have now also seen him attacked, his prestige and Woll's seriously undermined right on the floor of an A. F. of L. convention, will further encourage the militant elements.

Stalinists Trail Lewis

But it is a matter for the deepest concern that no voices were raised for genuine, as against fake industrial unionism and militancy, and that as yet no organized force appeared in an A. F. of L. convention to raise that banner. The Stalinists with their complete turn to the right in every field devote their energies not to building up a real left-wing but actually to playing up Lewis, Hillman, Gorman, et al. as the genuine article, pinning hope upon them for organizing steel and similar industries, carrying on cheap intrigues to get figures such as Gorman to introduce Labor Party resolutions and trying to make the workers believe that this is a triumph for progressivism. Browder and Company are not naive enough to believe this stuff. They are cynical enough, after years of tutelage in the Stalin school of goose-stepping, to try to make the workers believe it. Thus under their present policy of conciliation toward the A. F. of L., as under their third period policy of "dual unionism," they confuse the workers, dissipate the progressive forces and betray the labor struggle. And Louis Budenz, has after a few brief weeks in the Stalinist camp also already degenerated to the point where he goes about the country supporting these betraying policies!

"Militant" Socialists, while moving toward a trade union program which abstractly sets forth a Leninist position, have their economic base in their jobs in the needle trades and other unions under the so-called "progressives" Hillman, Dubinsky, Gorman, Lewis himself. The "Militant" Socialists, too, therefore, utterly fail to attack these leaders and their policies and contribute to confusing and misleading the workers.

Opportunity for Militants

The line of policy for revolutionists and for all genuinely militant elements in the unions is not that of an alliance with Lewis-Hillman to wage a mock battle against the corpse of Gompers or the non-entity Green or the much deflated Matthew Woll whose ideas, like his oratory, are of nineteenth century vintage. No, the conservative forces in the A. F. of L. today are the Lewis-Hillman forces, the more dangerous because they masquerade as progressive and up-to-date. The strategy of revolutionists is to take full advantage of any opportunity which these elements create for them by their attack on other trade union bureaucrats or by organizing campaigns or strikes on which they may embark under pressure on the one hand from the newer elements in the unions and in order, on the other hand, to show the employers and the Roosevelt administration that the workers will "really" follow them. On the other hand, the philosophy of these men must be combatted relentlessly. They cannot be depended upon to lead any organizing campaign or strike to a conclusion which is in the interests of the workers. In one way or another they will betray them as surely as Claherty betrayed the rubber strike and Dillon the General Motors strike. The militant forces in all of the unions, in every section of the country, in the A. F. of L. generally, must organize on a basis of class struggle, industrial unionism and genuine trade union democracy against the Lewis-Hillman line.

The Atlantic City Convention

The Atlantic City convention brought out the alarming fact that only the merest beginnings have been made with this job and that the would-be political leaders of the trade union movement are in reality sabotaging it. But the convention also made clear that in the coming year the genuine militants, if they are both aggressive and astute, have an unprecedented opportunity for work in the unions.

Expel 13 Bolsheviks From S.P. of France

as undisciplined by the Bureau of the Party are also considered by the bourgeoisie to be a violation of social discipline within bourgeois society."

Fourth in the list of the crimes of the Bolshevik-Leninists are their articles on the events of Brest and Toulon which were greeted by the Stalinists and Socialists as acts of "provocation" and by the Bolshevik-Leninists as symptoms of the sharpening of the class struggle. "We maintain," they declared, "that at a time when the fires of revolution are being lighted, that at a time when the workers rise in their might, arms in hand, against the state forces of repression, to give the miserable explanation that all this is the provocation of 'suspect elements' instead of a Marxist explanation of the class struggle constitutes outright treason! A simple comparison of extracts from the bourgeois press and from the Populaire and l'Humanite suffices to confirm our charges."

Agitated for Fourth International
Finally, the Bolshevik-Leninists are indicted for the crime of agitating for and publishing an appeal for the formation of the Fourth International. On this subject an earlier leaflet of the Bolshevik-Leninist group made the position perfectly explicit. "Partisans of the Fourth International? We have never concealed that for a single moment. When we entered the Socialist Party it was perfectly well known that we considered neither the Second nor the Third International to be instruments of the struggle of the proletariat and that an international regrouping of working class fighters on a revolutionary basis was on the order of the day."

Appealing to all revolutionary elements in the Socialist Party to resist the expulsion of the left and to expose the reactionary policies of the bureaucracy, the Bolshevik-Leninist group declared:

"Expelled or not, we shall continue our policy of revolutionary regrouping. Expelled or not, while war thunders, we shall fight patriotism and chauvinism in the workers' ranks."

"Expelled or not, we shall fight to face the Fascists with something better than pitiful invocations! We shall fight to build the people's militia which alone can smash the Fascist leagues."

"Expelled or not, we shall fight to orient the popular masses along the lines of the class struggle, for the revolution, for a workers and peasants government and to prevent the Front Populaire from ending up in a government of class collaboration with the Radical traitors."

The thirteen expelled leaders are comrades Hic, Frank, Rous, Rousset, Gerard, Melchior, Martin, Molinier, Van, Naville, Rigal, De Vreiere and Danno.

A few days after the expulsions, comrade Rous, who was a member of the Permanent Administrative Committee of the Socialist Party, was asked to leave the session of that committee. Comrade Marceau Pivert solidarized with Rous. A discussion followed which showed that the ferment is having its effects even in the topmost rungs of the Socialist Party. In reply to the attack of the bureaucrats, Rous demanded a national congress to decide the question of the party's attitude toward war, to answer the following question: "Is it or is it not a violation of discipline to be an implacable enemy of national defense, to work for the defeat of the bourgeois government?"

S.P. Central Committee Splits
The reply was a motion to exclude comrade Rous from the meeting of the C.A.P. Among those who voted for it were Zyromski and Descurieux, members of the "left" Battalion Socialiste which is Stalinist and therefore thoroughly social patriotic in its tendency. But a minority motion which secured the votes of seven members, all of whom with the exception of Marceau Pivert are anything but Bolshevik-Leninist sympathizers, showed that a process of differentiation is taking place even at the summit of the Socialist bureaucracy.

The Theoretical Origin of Social Patriotism

THE SOURCE

Called from Leon Trotsky's immortal classic, "The Criticism of Fundamentals: the Draft Program of the C. I." which exposed the foundation of Stalinist degeneration, the following section showed as far back as 1928 how the revisionist theory of "Socialism in One Country" led inevitably to social patriotism. This prediction, considered at the time of its presentation to the Sixth World Congress of the Comintern to be an academic deduction, especially in view of the solemn pronouncements of the Congress in favor of revolutionary defeatism, needed hardly seven years and another Congress of the C. I. to find its confirmation in life itself and in the official minutes and resolutions. Indeed, so true has this prediction become that the official organ of the French Communist Party speaks ad nauseum of the need to defend French culture and patrimony, as the inheritance of the working class alone, against German invasion. A casual glance at the Daily Worker will reveal a similar and probably more obnoxious social patriotic propaganda.—Ed.

By LEON TROTSKY

The principle question raised in the quoted passage, namely, THE CONCEPTION OF BUILDING UP OF SOCIALISM IN ONE COUNTRY AS A SOCIAL PATRIOTIC CONCEPTION was undoubtedly formulated correctly. The patriotism of the German social democrats began as a patriotism of their own party, the most powerful party of the Second International. On the basis of highly developed German technique and the high organizational abilities of the German people, the German social democrats were bent on the construction of their "own" socialist society. If we leave aside the die-hard bureaucrats, careerists, parliamentary sharpers and political crooks in general, the social patriotism of the rank and file social democrats was a result of precisely in the building up of German socialism. One cannot think that the hundreds of thousands of rank and file social democrats—let alone the millions of rank and file workers—wanted to defend Hohenzollern and the bourgeoisie. No. They wanted to defend German industry, the German railways, air highways, German technique and culture and especially the organizations of the German working class, as the "necessary and sufficient" national prerequisites.

A similar process took place also in France. Guesde, Vaillant and thousands of the best rank and file party members with them, and hundreds of thousands of rank and file workers in general believed that precisely France with her revolutionary traditions, her heroic proletariat, her high culture, her flexible and talented people was the promised land of socialism. Old Guesde and the Communist Vaillant, and with them the thousands and hundreds of thousands of workers did not fight for the bankers or the rentiers. They sincerely believed that they defended the basis and the creative power of the coming socialist society. They proceeded entirely from the theory of socialism in one country and made sacrifices to this idea, believing that "temporarily" this was international solidarity.

The comparison with the social patriots will of course be answered by the argument that patriotism in relation to the Soviet States is a revolutionary duty whereas patriotism in relation to a bourgeois state is treachery. This is surely so. Can there be any dispute on this question among grown-up revolutionists? But this incontrovertible idea becomes, as we progress more and more, a scholastic cover for deliberate falsehood.

Revolutionary patriotism can be only of a class character. It begins at patriotism to the party organization, to the trade union, and rises to national patriotism when the proletariat has captured power. Wherever the workers have power patriotism is a revolutionary duty. But that patriotism must be an inseparable part of revolutionary internationalism, the invincible conviction that the main class aim, even less so than partial aims, cannot be realized by national means or within national boundaries, constitutes the heart of revolutionary internationalism. If, however, the final aim has been realized within national boundaries by the efforts of a national proletariat then the backbone of internationalism has been broken. The theory of the possibility to realize socialism in one country destroys the inner connection of the patriotism of the victorious proletariat with the defeatism of the proletariat of the bourgeois countries. The proletariat of the advanced capitalist countries is still on the road to power. How and in what manner it will march toward it depends fully and entirely on the question as to whether it considers the building up of socialist society a national or an international task.

If it is at all possible to realize socialism in one country then one can believe in that theory not only AFTER the conquest of power but also "prior" to it. If socialism can be realized within the national boundaries of backward Russia then there is the more reason to believe that it can be realized in advanced Germany. Tomorrow the leaders of the Communist Party of Germany will surely bring forward this theory. The Draft Program empowers them to do so. The day after tomorrow the French party will have its turn. That will be the beginning of the downfall of the Comintern along the lines of social patriotism. The Communist Party of any capitalist country which will have become imbued with the idea that its particular country possesses all the "necessary and sufficient" prerequisites for the independent construction of a "complete socialist society" will in substance in no respect differ from the revolutionary social democrats who also began not with Noske but who definitely stumbled on August 4, 1914 on this very same question.

If they say that the very existence of the U.S.S.R. is a guarantee against social patriotism because in relation to a Workers' Republic it is a revolutionary duty, in this one-sided utilization of a correct idea is expressed national narrow-mindedness. Those who say so have in mind only the U.S.S.R., closing their eyes to the entire proletariat of the world. To lead the proletariat to the idea of defeatism in relation to the bourgeois state is possible only by an international orientation in the program on the main question and by a merciless resistance to social-patriotic propaganda which is now still masked but which seeks to establish a theoretical nest for itself in the program of Lenin's International.

LAKE CHARLES, La. (FP).—Machine gun bullets protecting scab operations in several gulf ports closed by striking International Longshoremen's Assn. members, killed three men, injured at least eight, opened one port and forced Gov. O. K. Allen of Louisiana to call a 3-day truce while port authorities and union officials sought an agreement.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 20.—Violence again flared in the bitter class war raging in Los Angeles, when on October 3, Phillip Weiss, a member of the I.L.G.W.U. was shot down by Sam Lubarsky, part owner of a cloak shop.

A strike has been in progress at Lubarsky's shop for some months. On the morning of the day of the shooting the union had pulled out two workers in the shop, and during the noon hour Lubarsky went to a restaurant patronized by union workers and attempted to recruit scabs. He was chased out of the restaurant by indignant workers. Outside on the street he got into an argument with Lutzky, of the I.L.G.W.U. and a crowd of workers gathered. Lubarsky suddenly pulled a gun and the crowd fell back. While the workers were still retreating to get out of range of his gun he fired and Weiss fell. Luckily the bullet went completely through the body after passing through the right lung, thus lessening the danger of complications. However, pneumonia developed and Weiss is not yet entirely out of danger. Lubarsky was held on $5,000 bail.

Between 1,500 and 1,800 fish cannery workers will be affected by a strike against five large canneries which has been called for Tuesday morning. The strike call was issued by the Fish Cannery Workers Union.

Demands are for 40 cents per hour for the first eight hours, 45 cents an hour for the next eight hours, and 50 cents thereafter, for the women workers. The demand for the men is 5 cents per hour higher. About 75 percent of the cannery workers are women. The closed shop is demanded.

The plant of the Van Camp company will not be affected as it has already granted the demanded wages, but refused the closed shop. The strike has an excellent chance of succeeding as the sardine packing season is due to begin about November 1.

The Machine Is A Communist

Industry Idle to Keep Parasites in Power Cost Workers Three Hundred Billion in 1930-34 -- The High Cost of Capitalism!

By HILDEGARDE M. SMITH

There is proof enough in just one circumstance that Roosevelt and his New Dealers are insincere about their advocacy of "a more abundant life." That circumstance is their utter ignoring of their own "National Survey of Potential Product Capacity." Have you heard the Ginning Messiah give a "fire-side chat" on the finding of this—his own commission? No! And you won't! For just what were the findings of this government commission? Revolutionary stuff!

Our Production Capacity

This board of sixty experts worked for nearly a year measuring the product capacity of our United States. They did a good job. And an honest job. Too good and honest—too many unpleasant truths about how the masses in this country are being cheated—for Roosevelt and his New Dealers to tell the workers about it. True, a resume of it has been published, called "The Chart of Plenty." It is in many public libraries and all workers should read it. For in this survey is ample and reasonably authentic information as to just how abundant a life might be given to the mass of the American people. It is a careful study of not only how much is produced, but how much with the present equipment—the natural resources and the industrial plant—could be produced and how much for the best interests of the people should be produced. And the result was briefly this: if the resources of this country and its man-power were really put to work for the welfare of its citizens, every family in the United States could have an annual income in goods and services of $4,400 per year valued in 1929 dollars. And that on a short work week! Also, with efficient planning this annual income could be greatly increased within a decade.

This is seemingly refuted by the survey made by the Brookings Institution, "America's Capacity to Produce," which has been hailed by advocates of the present social order as "proof" that the "Economy of Abundance" is a fiction. But, as Mr. Harold Loeb, director of the H. S. of P. P. C., points out, the Brookings Institution survey was figured within the framework of the existing economic system. That is, their survey was not strictly a survey of physical factors but that they entangled themselves in two contradictory frames—the commercial and physical—which made their findings meaningless as far as actual physical capacity is concerned.

In brief, the facts established by the two surveys is this: the Brookings Institution survey makes it evident that abundance, in spite of our enormous resources, cannot be given to the people of the country under the capitalist system. The profit motive won't stand for it. The National Survey of Potential Product Capacity in essence establishes the fact that only under a socialist system can the resources be efficiently used to give the people the abundance to which they are entitled. For instance, in the four years, 1930-1934, nearly three hundred billion in goods and services could have been produced which were not produced. And on this point Mr. Loeb himself makes the following statements:

"The difference between actual production and possible production represents the cost to the people of the United States of maintaining present financial institutions. . . . The existing resources, plant and personnel of the United States, are not only capable of providing a high standard of life for the entire population, but are also capable of simultaneously replacing obsolete equipment and expanding the plant at a rate somewhat higher than the satisfactory rate practiced during the years 1923 to 1929. . . . A most curious spectacle this. . . . The American people, through their authorized agents are found using governmental power to maintain the 'blessed state of poverty.' . . . And to the favorite cry of the opponents of a socialist society that it would be the end of 'liberty' Mr. Loeb says: 'Liberty would be enjoyed by most people. Today over 90 percent of our people have their freedom restricted by material necessities. releasing of production and the resulting abundance would enormously expand their freedom. . . ."

A Machine Civilization

But the most curious fact established by this survey—a government survey, remember—is this: our mass production factories, our machine civilization, can only be used efficiently. . . . If it is put to work producing things for the masses, food, clothing, houses, furniture and other household supplies. . . . all the things the masses want and need—and are now so largely deprived of. How many times have you heard some "statesman" or some capitalist journalist proclaim that our "American system has built the greatest civilization on earth?" Hundreds of times of course! And this "greatest civilization" today is what? A machine civilization. That is irrefutable. And now this government survey shows that this machine civilization can only be used efficiently if it is put to work producing for the masses. . . . dividing the wealth among the people. So what does that make the machine? A Communist! Nothing less. The machine is a communist!

This might be a joke on the rich exploiters and their lackeys. But as yet the "joke" is on the workers. For as the rich few who control this "wonderful civilization" have the workers "fooled"—persuaded to believe that this potential plenty is a delusion. Just as the powers that rule us are today suppressing the Marxists—the communists—so are they today suppressing the communist machine test it give this potential wealth to the masses. Theirs is a "dog in the manger" economics. They cannot possibly use the potential products themselves. . . . so they, with gas bombs, National Guard, bullets and oratory, are fighting the workers to keep them from getting what they cannot use themselves, but want to keep anyhow—to preserve their privileges and power.

Why They Buried the Report

No wonder the New Dealers and Roosevelt himself have buried the report of this, their own, commission! For they are "the authorized agents using governmental power to maintain the blessed state of poverty!" They aided and abetted the exploiters who control the product capacity of the country in their decision that those three hundred billion in goods and services which the people needed, would not be produced because it could not be produced at a profit to them! They are the ones, these advocates of "a more abundant life" who are willing that millions should live on the verge of starvation—the infamous Roosevelt subsistence wage—so that these rich and privileged persons—and they themselves—might continue to satisfy their swollen egos with opulence, and their lust for power and privilege. Their words say—"we bring you a more abundant life." But their actions say—"we are willing that millions should be deprived of what is rightfully theirs—the abundance of this country—in order that we may hog the fat of the land."

Workers! Your ancestors gave of their sweat and their blood to build up the abundance of this country! You have done likewise. That abundance is your rightful heritage! And now, every day of your lives, you and your children are being cheated—yes, shamefully cheated!—of what is yours. Give the lie to these who would tell you that "socialism is just dividing poverty." You can get the facts about that from this Government survey (of course you could tell your exploiters that Karl Marx said practically the same thing long ago) and throw this information in the teeth of anyone who tries to tell you that our abundance is "bunk." Their own dope now refutes them. $4,400 a year might be "poverty" to a Roosevelt, or an Astor or an Andy Mellon, but to you and your children it would truly mean "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." And that is what you are honestly entitled to today.

Despite the participation of the League for Industrial Democracy, headed by Norman Thomas, there was a notable absence of Socialists in the audience. Those who were not Stalinists were almost entirely Workers Party or I.W.W. elements, or non-proletarians.

Among the other speakers were Mary Fox, secretary of the Joint Committee; H. D. Sizemore of the General Defense Committee; Anna Damon, Secretary of the I.L.D.; Murray Baron; Heywood Brown, who called William Pickens of the N.A.A.C.P., also on the speakers' list, a scab; and Rabbi Sidney Goldstein of the American League Against War and Fascism.

Browder was sitting on the platform but did not speak. His silence was made up for, however, by C.P.

Resist Attempt to Deport Warnick brought about by the special snooping committee of the American Legion. Warnick has been bailed out of Angel Island Prison, and is represented legally by Austin Lewis, well-known local attorney of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The National Sacramento Appeal Committee has been authorized by Warnick to undertake activity in support of his fight. It was the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, now a constituent of the N.S.A.C., which raised $3,200 bail to take Warnick out of Sacramento County Jail last January after he had been there for six months.

Norman Refused Parole

Another example of continuing persecution is the failure of an attempt by Lorine Norman, one of the eight convicted Sacramento workers, to secure parole because she will shortly become a mother. She has been released on bail temporarily to go to a hospital. Governor Merriam is under pressure from the reactionary bloc to compel her to return to prison as soon as her child is born.

Recently also, as a result of the insidious campaign of the Chamber of Commerce, Associated Farmers, Industrial Association and American Legion, Charles McLaughlin of Santa Anna was held for criminal syndicalism, charged with being a member of the Communist party. If convicted, he would get 14 years in San Quentin along with Norman Mini, Caroline Decker and the other Sacramento workers. The case is pending.

members on the street after the meeting. Among those selling literature and giving out leaflets were three young girls, members of the W.P. The Stalinists demonstratively crumpled up leaflets and denounced the W.P. members as "degenerate renegades."

While the Herndon meeting showed that thus far only a limited circle is actively behind the persecuted Negro worker, it can be the beginning of a real movement. If the Joint Committee follows a really inclusive policy, designed to win the loyalty of all organizations of the working class and sympathizing circles, while pursuing that militant line which alone can save Herndon, it may yet get a wide following and do a constructive job for the class.

Many pamphlets on the Herndon case published by the Joint Committee were sold at the meeting. A new edition, specially prepared for the N.P.L.D., may be bought through Pioneer Publishers, 100 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C. It sells at 2 cents per copy and may be had cheaper in bundles.

DUPONT PROFITS SOAR AGAIN UNDER 'OPPRESSIVE' N. DEAL

WILMINGTON, Del. (FP).—If the duPont family is opposed to the New Deal on the grounds that it is hurting business, they're kidding themselves.

For earnings of the E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. to be used for dividends amounted to $35,534,717 for the first nine months of 1935, the company's reports show. The earnings are more than $1,000,000 higher than for the same time last year.

Almost half the swag—$16,314,708—was raked in during the third quarter of the year. During that time, it is pointed out, the European political situation became considerably more tense.

November 7th is our day. For internationalists the world over, it is the day of the great vindication of their ideas and the harbinger of their final victory on an international scale. This is the spirit in which all the authentic representatives of the great proletarian revolution in Russia celebrate its 18th anniversary. Not as a completed, self-sufficient national affair, but as a beginning of the international revolution—this is the inner meaning of the workers' victory in Russia as its organizers and leaders explained it and as we understand it. We hail the Russian revolution as the prelude to the world "October."

The Russian revolution represents the triumph of an idea which had penetrated the masses and become a material force. Marx transformed socialism from utopia to science; the Russian revolution developed the science into action. Since November 7, 1917 the theoretical concept of the proletarian revolution has been a demonstrated reality over one-sixth of the globe and an imminent challenge to the whole capitalist world. That is why the Soviet Union has been and remains the great magnet of attraction for the revolutionary workers in all countries.

It was the inspiring force in the regroupment of the vanguard which had been dispersed and demoralized by the treachery of the Social Democracy in the war, and also the rallying point for the masses in their struggle against capitalism on a world-wide arena. The will to defend the Soviet Union which animated every class-conscious worker in the capitalist countries was expressed—as Lenin taught—by the revival of the revolutionary fight against the exploiters at home. That is the line upon which we reconstituted the American movement. It remains our line today.

The Russian revolution demonstrated the heroic qualities of the proletariat and showed that revolutionary Marxism alone is capable of shaping leaders equal to the highest test of the historic turning point of humanity. In the persons of Lenin and Trotsky the revolution found its authentic representatives—organizers of the victory who stood on a historic level with the founders of the doctrine, Marx and Engels. In the organization of the Red Army and its magnificent and victorious campaigns against the people's enemies in the civil war and the war of intervention the unbounded resourcefulness, creative energy and courage of the historically rising class was displayed. The working class, even in a backward country in which it constitutes but a small percentage of the total population, is capable of making its revolution and also of defending it. This is the message of the Russian Revolution to the whole class. What miracles of energy may confidently be expected from the working class in the advanced countries when the masses are fused with a Marxist leadership at the mo-

Peace Parade Bluff in Fact and Figures

Unions Protest Use of Name in Jamboree Led by Father Divine

The Daily Worker reports that 50,000 turned out for the People's Parade for Peace... the metropolitan papers put the figure at 15,000, including 2000 followers of Father Divine's eggshell-blue limousine.

Two letters we have received make it clear that the Daily Worker's estimate was arrived at by counting the organizations who did not march in the parade. From the American Youth Congress the following:

"Dear Sir:
"The national council of the American Youth Congress did not meet in time to consider the People's March for Peace. Therefore any public statement to the effect that we have endorsed this demonstration is unauthorized.

Very truly yours,

Executive Secretary."

Our information was derived from an article on page 1 of the Daily Worker for October 22: "In a ringing statement endorsing the People's March for Peace... Wal-

Il Duce Colors Hearst Stories on Ethiopia

Readers of the Hearst press, 28 newspapers with a total daily circulation of 5,500,000, and other newspapers carrying the Hearst-owned International News Photo Service, are being daily fed photographs of the Ethiopian war, none of which are taken by American photographers, but are supplied to Hearst by Mussolini's official picture agency, Luce! Editors have to rely on the Italian firm's word that the pictures are bona fide.

This is the most obvious example of the way in which Fascist propaganda about the war is being fed to the American masses. But it is only part of the story. Mussolini has made special arrangements to accommodate the Hearst, United Press and Associated Press correspondents directly behind the Italian lines. This is in order to secure "eyewitness stories," which carry more plausibility than the usual dispatches. But all correspondents' reports must travel the regular military wireless route, with censorship at Asmara and then again at Rome. Nothing gets through this filter except stories satisfactory to the Fascists.

An example of the usefulness to the Fascists of so-called eyewitness stories is the A. P. dispatch sent by Andree Berding, who is being accommodated by high officers of the Italian Army. According to this lackey, on a 26 hour visit to the northern front, he found the natives not only already accustomed to the Fascist occupation, but that "Scores of Ethiopians gave the Fascist salute" and "Young Ethiopians already were calling out Buon Giorno."

Unfortunately, the lack of adequate communications and the difficulties of coverage from the Ethiopian side have so far made it impossible to counteract the Fascist propaganda by more accurate news.

France Faces Civil War as C.P. Prepares Government for Imperialist Defense

By H. F. ROBERTS

Approaching war—now closer than ever with the impending conclusion of an Anglo-French alliance—is hastening the maturing of the internal political crisis in France. Laval stands today atop a teetering structure which will dissolve and disappear in the decisive days to come.

France faces civil war. The result will be either a new star in the European Fascist constellation or a revolutionary workers' and peasants' government. The choice of those two alternatives is being made now, when the preparation of the French working class for the offensive against war and Fascism—which means and can only mean the offensive against the bourgeois state—is the only hope of preventing Fascism from grinding the workers' organizations out of existence and hurling France and all Europe into war.

What is monstrous in the present crisis in France is the fact that the way may well be paved to fascism and to war by a Government of the Front Populaire. Under the direct pressure of Cachin, Thorez and Co., the Front Populaire is striving to prove to the French bourgeoisie that it does not intend to fight the bourgeois state, that it is capable of mobilizing the French workers for the holy war against German Fascism—for the defense of "democracy"—for the defense of the French imperialist state.

Class Struggle Set Aside
Class lines and the class struggle have been entirely obliterated by the Front Populaire. At its meetings the red flag of the workers is set alongside the tricolor of the French bourgeoisie. On its platforms sit representatives of the French workers and the Daladiers, the Cots, the representatives of the French bourgeoisie. Daladier, "the murderer of workers of February 6," urged the Front Populaire policy upon the Radical Socialist Party at its Congress last week as an "alliance of the third estate and the proletariat." The Radical Socialist cuts, bloody repression against the workers. With all this the Stalinists of France are not concerned. For Herriot is an adherent of "collective security" and the Covenant of the League of Nations and when he speaks in this spirit "Humanite" nods happily: "We cannot but approve of these words and it would be good if Laval could be inspired by them." (Sept. 30). The Stalinists are not so interested in protecting the workers against Herriot but they gratuitously offer to protect Herriot against the Fascists.

Protection for the French Breasting
"We can assure you," wrote the C.P. to the Radical Socialist Party in Lyon, "that the adherents of our party are determined not to permit injury to a hair on the head of those who fight for bread, peace and liberty—and in the very first place, of Chairman Herriot." (Quoted by Populaire, Oct. 19.)

Herriot is a member of the Laval government which last week passed a series of decrees stated to be directed against "all anti-Republican forces" but which were patently designed to deal with the organizations of the workers—just like the decrees of Bruening, von Papen and von Schleicher—to ease the way for the Hitler, the de la Roquette of tomorrow.

The most important of these decrees increased the Garde Mobile, which is a force educated in the spirit of civil war against the workers, from 15,000 to 20,000—and the new men were ordered to posts in 150 towns in the Seine and adjoining regions—the proletarian heart of France. Other decrees put restrictions on public demonstrations, on the carrying of arms by demonstrators and in addition gave the government the right to dissolve

Britain Acts for the 'Small Nations'

Since 1870 the British government has annexed the following "independent" territories:

Baluchistan, Burma, Cyprus, North Borneo, Wei-hai-wei, Hongkong, Koweit, Sinai, North Guinea, South Guinea, East Guinea, Solomon Islands, Tonga Islands, Egypt, Sudan, Uganda, British East Africa, British Somaliland, Zanzibar, British Central Africa, Nigeria.

In addition, the following territories were mandated to Britain at the end of the World War: South West Africa, Mesopotamia, Palestine, Trans-Jordan, Tanganyika, Togo, Cameroun, Samoa and other Pacific Islands.

And Sir Samuel Hoare says Britain is "now acting in the interests of 'small nations'!"

Party, which stands at the head of the Front Populaire, closed its congress with resolutions calling for "passionate devotion to national defense" and the "restoration of the authority of the state."

At the head of this party stands Herriot, minister in the Laval government, responsible for the miserable regime of decree-laws, wage

574's Fighting Policy Thorn in the Side of Labor Skates

Assistance Rendered to Six Strikes in Other Industries Resulted in Victory

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 31.—A representative of the Green-Woll-Tobin gang yesterday brought into the open plans for a pogrom against the famous General Drivers Union Local 574.

In a statement to the press, Meyer Lewis, representative of William Green, A. F. of L. president, declared that he was in Minneapolis to superintend a "purge" of labor organizations. Making no pretense that the "purge" was to be limited to the central labor body—the Green-Woll-Tobin gang were defeated at the recent Atlantic City convention in their attempt to secure authorization for expulsion of radicals from the unions, but did secure a provision giving central bodies authority to expel radical delegates—Lewis bluntly indicated that "the big guns of the American Federation of Labor" would be aimed also at organizations outside the A. F. of L. ranks.

As proving the necessity to bring about "an industrial employer and employee relationship which is truly American," Lewis named the 1934 strikes of Local 574, the recently settled strike of ornamental iron workers and the Strutwear hosiery workers' strike which is still going on.

574 Leads Minneapolis Labor

Preceded by a successful coal drivers' strike in January, 1934 and a general strike of other drivers four months later, the famous July, 1934 strike of Local 574, which received nationwide attention, established the union's control of the transport industry of Minneapolis.

This made it the largest union in the city. Its militant leadership and success, its popularization of the slogan, "Make Minneapolis a Union Town," and its aid to other unions, inspired hitherto dormant labor into a series of successful strikes which have put Minneapolis into the forefront of the labor movement. This threat to the swivel-chair bureaucrats led, six months ago, to the lifting of Local 574's charter by Dan Tobin, head of the Teamsters' International. Despite this move, which split the Minneapolis labor movement wide open, half the Central Labor Union delegates refusing to unseat 574's delegates, a majority for unseating being secured only after a threat to lift the charter of the central body, Local 574 and the unions grouped around it have continued to grow in strength. Last month Local 574 won from the employers closed-shop contracts covering the transport industry.

The other two strikes mentioned by Green's representative were rescued by Local 574.

Iron Workers' Strike
The ornamental iron workers' strike, led by an A. F. of L. union against a plant owned by Walter Tetzlaff, notorious leader of the union-busting Citizens Alliance, was endangered by scabs escorted into the plant by Farmer-Labor Mayor Latimer. The Farmer-Labor administration refused to enforce an anti-scab ordinance forbidding housing of employees in an industrial plant. On appeal from the striking union, Local 574 sent representatives to sit on the strike committee and sent its powerful picket lines to close down the plant.

In a desperate attempt to open the plant, the Farmer-Labor administration's police climaxed a three-night attack on the picket lines with an armored-car shooting barrage on September 11. Two workers were killed. But the strike held strong until the boss was compelled to settle with the union on terms favorable to the strikers.

Hosiery Workers' Struggle
The other strike mentioned by Green's representative as an excuse for a "purge" of "radical communist groups" is being conducted directly under the leadership of the national office of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, unit

Both Sides Are Right!
Toledo and Mpls. Press Argue on which City Has Most "Labor Trouble"

By ART PREIS
Toledo and Minneapolis newspapers have been heaving editorial bouquets at each other recently, each one offering the palm to the other's city for the distinction of having the most militant labor movement in the country.

The following editorial published in the Toledo News-Bee (Scripps-Howard sheet) on October 16 is a humorous commentary on how the bourgeoisie is "whistling in the dark," and likewise an eloquent tribute to the effective work of the Workers Party in helping to make Toledo and Minneapolis the "hot-spots" of the class struggle in America. The editorial, entitled "The Pot to the Kettle," is here given in its entirety.

"The Pot to the Kettle
"The Minneapolis Journal evidently has had a young man out over the country, engaged in 'drawing the fire.'
"The Journal, in a city with the worst record for strike violence of any city in America, came out on Oct. 11 with a piece entitled 'New Factories Shun Toledo, City Torn by Violence of Strikes.'
"We can imagine that they had a staff meeting at The Journal, following that city's latest killing on the streets, and the editor told 'em: 'Boys, we've got to do something to show that Minneapolis isn't so bad, after all. Let's get a piece about Toledo. That ought to make Minneapolis look pretty good.'
"We will give The Journal piece credit, nevertheless, for its recognition that things have changed for the better in Toledo during the past summer, and particularly since the philosophy of the Toledo Plan has been applied.
"Throughout the country, however, there has been a lot of finger pointing at Toledo. Cities in trouble of their own have striven to boil up Toledo labor stories running back to the old Auto-Lite rioting story to draw the fire from their own labor controversies.
"Toledo has had troubles to be sure, but at no time have these been a circumstance to what they have been painted by our loving rival cities."
Short Memories
Of course, that crack about things turning for the better in Toledo during the past summer—meaning that the industrialists, etc., of Toledo have succeeded in putting the quietus on the labor movement here—is merely wistful wish-thinking. The Auto-Lite strike was merely a beginning, and not an end, as the

LABOR DEFENSE FRONT

Protest Against the Frame-Up and Deportation of Jack Warnick

It has been revealed that the evidence being used against Jack Warnick by Federal immigration authorities seeking to deport him to Canada consists of material obtained from the Sacramento court which acquitted him in the criminal syndicalism trial in April.

This material consists of a Communist party membership book issued in the name of Bertrand Warner, and an I.L.D. membership book in the name of Jack Warnick. A letter from Austin Lewis, attorney for Warnick, to a member of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee, asks him to "get us all the help you can" in the Warnick case. The National Sacramento Appeal Committee, which is handling the appeal of Norman Mini, Prisoner 57606 in San Quentin, and which fights for the release of all criminal syndicalism victims in California, has voted to aid Warnick's fight to stay in this country.

"The hounding of Warnick," according to Herbert Solow, Secretary of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, "is a continuation of the drive to smash California unionism. Warnick is guilty of no crime. He was acquitted even by the frame-up court in Sacramento. Six years ago he tried to take out naturalization papers, but could not prove that he had been born in Montreal because that city had no birth registration. Consequently, he was not naturalized."

"It is not enough for the Associated Farmers and Chamber of Commerce that they have put Warnick's wife, Caroline Decker, in Tehachapi Prison. Now they want to prevent Warnick from alleviating her suffering by an occasional visit. They want to deport him from the country in which he has spent his whole life since the age of two. They want every militant worker to understand that to take part in a strike struggle or a union organizing drive is to become subject to the most bitter and endless persecution."

Importance of Case

"Warnick is deserving of wide support. His case is of concern to the whole working class and to every friend of civil rights. Protests should go at once, from organizations and individuals, to Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, Washington, D.C., calling for the abandonment of deportation proceedings in the case of Jack Warnick. The N.S.A.C. will be glad to transmit to Warnick's attorney any funds contributed to his defense."

The N.S.A.C. is continuing its drive for funds for the Mini appeal. Raymond W. Henderson, Bakersfield attorney who handled the famous Wobblly trials, is now preparing his brief. Contributions should be made payable to Harry W. Latimer, Chairman, National Sacramento Appeal Committee, Room 707, 41 Union Square, N. Y. C.

Jack Warnick is a graduate of the University of California. He was brought to the West coast from his birthplace, Montreal, at the age of two and has lived in the United States ever since. He was a leading militant of the now-extinct Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, and belonged, with Caroline Decker and Norman Mini, to the faction which dared criticize the policies of Sam Darcy of the Communist party. He was active in the Redwood City mushroom strike and other union work. During the criminal syndicalism trial in Sacramento, Warnick and Mini protested against the C. P. defense policies in several respects. When the C.P. tried to wipe out its record of disruption by denouncing Mini as a stool-pigeon, Warnick issued a statement blasting the slanderers and expressing solidarity with Mini.

He resigned from the C. P. and was subsequently "expelled," with the proper ceremonies of denunciation. He was "charged" with being a "counter-revolutionary Trotskyite," but in fact has not been connected with the political movement since leaving the C. P.

Herndon Sick; Faces Chain-Gang

Angelo Herndon surrendered to the Georgia authorities October 28 in accordance with the orders of the U. S. Supreme Court. An attorney immediately applied for a writ of habeas corpus on the grounds that the ancient slave insurrection law under which Herndon was sentenced to 18 to 20 years on a chain gang has never undergone a test of constitutionality.

Herndon's motion will be heard Nov. 12. In the meantime, the court has ordered that he shall not be removed from Fulton County (Atlanta) before the issue is settled. He is now lodged in Fulton Towers, the county jail. While he is thus saved for the moment from the chain-gang, his health is endangered by the damp atmosphere in Fulton Towers. Herndon suffers from gastritis and chronic bronchitis, the latter being almost as bad as tuberculosis.

Should Herndon win a writ, he would be retried. Should he fail to get a writ, an appeal will be made all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court, demanding such a writ. This would involve a long struggle, somewhat similar to Mooney's repeated efforts to force the Supreme Court to act on his case.

During such a struggle, whose eventual outcome cannot be foretold, the courts could grant or refuse bail as they chose. Herndon might have to go to the chain-gang while the issue is fought out.

The Joint Committee to Aid the Defense of Herndon, organized by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense and five other organizations, is extending its petition campaign. The N.P.L.D. has brought out a special edition of the new Herndon pamphlet. Already 4,000 copies have been sold. A few more are available at 2 cents each or $1.50 per hundred, at the office of the N.P.L.D., 22 East 17th Street, N. Y. C.

Sac'to Defense Meet In Cleveland

John N. Thurber, leading Socialist, will preside at a mass meeting called by the Cleveland sub-committee of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee on Nov. 1 at 8 P.M. The meeting will take place in Morgan Hall, 1550 E. 40th St. The speakers will be F. Cedervall of the I.W.W., Joseph Knight of the Workers Party and J. Sommer-latte of the Socialist Party. The Cleveland committee is the latest sub-committee to be set up in the Sacramento movement. Its forces are now organizing for the mass meeting, selling pamphlets and circulating collection lists. Other sub-committees are functioning in San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, Boston, and are being organized in several other cities.

Court Reverses Ruling In Ohio Railroad

Mike Lindway, National Screw Co. striker framed on a dynamite charge in Cleveland, Ohio, has advanced a step in his fight for freedom. The Ohio Court of Appeals reversed the conviction on the grounds that certain evidence used by the prosecutor should not have been allowed in the case. Prisoner 69549 of the Columbus Pen, and the General Defense Committee which handled his case, thus win a real victory. The Associated Industries may compel a new trial of Lindway, according to Tor Cedervall, secretary of Local 2 of the G.D.C.

Mendieta Gag-Law Outlawed in Cuba

The Cuban Supreme Court having declared unconstitutional a newspaper gag-law adopted by the Mendieta regime, conditions for the work of the Cuban National Committee for Amnesty for Political Prisoners may be eased somewhat. The work of this Committee, itself a united front of thirty-one workers' organizations, is being supported in this country by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Vigilante Justice in Santa Rosa, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—District Attorney Wm. F. Cowan of Sonoma County late today refused to accept statements from three victims of the Santa Rosa vigilantes, so long as they insisted upon having one of their own representatives present. Mr. and Mrs. Sol Nitzberg and Charles Mayer met at the District Attorney's office in Santa Rosa by appointment, but Mr. Cowan refused to conduct his inquiries in the presence of Ernest Besig, Director of the American Civil Liberties Union from San Francisco. The entire group thereupon departed with Besig, promising to submit sworn statements from all three.

"It is perfectly obvious," declared Mr. Besig, "that Mr. Cowan by delays is maneuvering to escape issuing complaints against the more than twenty known vigilantes. Previous interviews with victims of the vigilantes have been turned into fishing expeditions concerning their economic and political opinions because they did not have the protection of counsel. The district attorney is doing no more than attempting to put our clients in a bad light."

Explaining the two-month delay in taking any action, Cowan in a letter to Besig complained that "None of these victims, except one, ever solicited a personal interview with this office. . . ." In today's brief conference the District Attorney also asserted that, "If it were not for outside interference, these people would be content to do nothing."

Moreover, the October meeting of the National Committee laid down regulations to guarantee the minority the same rights to present their case in the period preceding the second convention of the party which is to convene on Dec. 27. This opportunity is still open to the Oehler-Stamm group if they wish to return to the party and conduct themselves as loyal members. Their refusal to accept it is only a confession of lack of confidence in their ability to influence the party members with their arguments.

Opportunities Big for New Rubber Union

Confidence in Own Strength; No Reliance in Boards or Labor Fakers Is the Road to Victory

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 28.—The prelude to a new epoch in the history of the labor movement in the rubber industry is being written by the United Rubber Workers of America since its inception as an international union following two years of constant defeats for the workers under the reactionary leadership of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

Not only did the rubber workers distinguish themselves by freeing the unions here from the stranglehold of William Green and his henchman at their convention but now they are leading a fight against the establishment of an eight-hour day and wage cuts. Non-union members are rapidly returning to the fold.

Sunday night a mass meeting with the young officials of the international union as speakers was attended by nearly 2,000 workers, the largest gathering since the fall of 1933 when the unions were just formed.

The futile "effort" of the Goodyear company union to fight against the 8-hour day under the pressure of the 12,000 workers in the two plants here has neatly exposed the lies built by Goodyear in the 20 years existence of this tool, and swung more workers into the bona-fide union.

Union Active

The United Rubber Workers' leaders took quick advantage of the exposure of the company union. A committee went to the Goodyear president and demanded a return to the six-hour day. Mass meetings were held. A picket line was established around the entrance of the Goodyear plants, urging the workers to rejoin the union.

The Union Buyers club held militant demonstrations at the factories pleading to all workers to join the union so that a real fight against the starvation policies of the rubber barons could be made. These facts indicate what the temper of the rubber workers has become as the rubber barons are trying to foist the cost of a price war upon the backs of the already underpaid workers.

Significant too is the open letter written by the independent union leaders who have been fighting the A. F. of L. since they were ousted for trying to form prematurely the international union. These leaders praised the United Rubber Workers of America and asked for re-admission into the ranks of the bona-fide union.

What has caused this seemingly sudden lift from the apathy of last spring after the betrayal by Claherty? What does the future hold for the rubber workers in view of the facts of today? These are questions in every progressive's mind which need an answer.

Struggle of Rubber Barons

We have already mentioned the valiant fight against Green and company. This gave self-autonomy and an opportunity for the rubber workers themselves to guide their union.

Then the inexorable laws of capitalism forced the rubber barons to try to save their profits, defeat their competition and fight for monopoly control of the industry which created the basis for the present upswing of labor.

To defeat competition Goodyear, Firestone, Goodrich and the others had to sell tires and other articles for lower prices. But they wanted to make profit so they naturally wanted to cut wages. That's why they introduced the eight-hour day under which a worker toils 40 hours a month more but receives only $3 extra! In other words, he gets longer hours and a wage cut.

The workers began to fight against this move. At Goodyear the company union was meeting. It claimed to be there to help the workers. That's why 150 workers jammed the meeting and asked for the return of the six-hour day.

But the move of the company union naturally failed. John House, Goodyear local president, told the workers at a mass meeting that "the company union will never bite the hand that feeds it. Join our bona-fide union and we'll really fight together against the rubber barons!"

Fight for Six-hour Day

The other union leaders took up the cry. Warned by the NEW MILITANT, the progressive and other unionists were prepared for the rubber barons. They used the slogans advocated in these columns: Fight for the Six-Hour Day! No Wage Cuts! No Discrimination in Lay-offs!

"Only through the United Rubber Workers of America can the workers fight against the attempt of the companies to lower the miserable standard of living!" This message has been patiently explained to workers at meeting after meeting. The utility of the company union moves has helped greatly in establishing this truth.

Boldly the leadership of the international is trying to meet the challenge of the rubber barons. Holding mass meetings; the picket lines; patiently teaching the facts to the workers; these are correct steps to rebuild the unions.

But there is much more that can be done and must be done if the challenge is to be met successfully. And the first thing is the necessity of realizing that the federal government, despite talk of Madame Perkins, won't do anything.

No Illusions in Boards

Remember, this same woman helped in the rubber betrayal this spring. Likewise, at best she will only appoint a fact-finding board. But the rubber workers know the facts. Smaller pay checks with more work speak for themselves.

No illusions must be tolerated regarding the role of the federal government. It has in the past, it does today, and it will tomorrow do all in its power to aid the rubber barons. For it is their government, not the workers'.

The workers must realize that the simple act of their joining the union will not mean that the companies will be frightened into returning the six-hour day. Quite to the contrary. The rubber barons will fight more strongly than ever against the workers.

What is necessary is to educate the workers into seeing that organization can mean something only if it has the correct program, not only of what they want, but how the workers can achieve it. How they can re-establish a six-hour day.

Capitalists have never given anything voluntarily. Only insofar as the rubber workers have strength to force their demands, by strike, if necessary, can they succeed in wresting back the wages and hours stolen from them by the companies.

Until this is permanently established in the workers' minds and they are convinced they must fight with this fundamental idea as their policy, the hard work of the union leaders will come to naught. The basis for the defeats by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats lay in their class-collaboration philosophy. They preached that the rubber barons and the workers were brothers. The latest company moves tears this falsehood apart. The lesson of this should not be forgotten.

The progressive platform of the United Rubber Workers, which recognizes this idea—class struggle—as embodied in the constitution, gives a good basis for winning back the rubber workers. Events favor the union too.

Continue the Battle

By starting a fight against the companies, the union leaders have aroused the workers who are rejoining the ranks. They are writing a good first chapter in the future history of the labor movement in rubber.

A continuation and intensification of the efforts, bringing more sharply into the progressive program adopted at the rubber workers' convention, will bring further success and stave off the drive of the companies.

The battle between the capitalists and the workers has begun more openly than ever before in the rubber industry. Final victory can come to the workers only when the present decaying system is buried in its grave and a socialist economy under the control of the workers lives in its place.

In this epoch of imperialism with nothing but war and further degradation of the workers' standards possible under capitalism, no illusions can be tolerated that security and peace will reign in the future. This can come only under a workers' government. These thoughts must prevail among the rubber workers if they are to fight correctly against the rubber barons. In them lies the only hope of victory!

PRAYDA ON "MOTHER"

All the old, worn-out claptrap of bourgeois democracy finds a ready market in Moscow today. In an article that outdoes a 1927 Mother's Day speech by the president of the Florists' Association "Prayda" describes a visit of Stalin to his "dear old mother." Any hack who translates into Russian the song "Mother"—"M is for the million things she gave me"—is due for a sure fire success. . . .

"POPE'S COUSIN ONCE REMOVED"

The Daily Worker announces with justifiable pride that a "First Cousin (once removed) of the Pope" has come out in favor of the Stalinist Peaceful People's Peace Program and joined the League Against War and Fascism. The D. W. says that this "once removed cousin" is a real "religious Catholic." ("Real religious" to differentiate her from the ordinary Stalinist stooge type.) The cousin is all for Pope Pious but the "D. W." informs us that she has learned "that more than prayers are needed to preserve peace." "Organic Unity" of "Christ's Vicar" and "the Infallible Leader" is now on the order of the day. I suggest as the first article of the new creed: "I believe in the Holy Roman Catholic Church, the forgiveness of sins, the life everlasting, the indivisibility of peace, and the infallibility of Stalin." "I knows it, Browder, I knows it, Browder, I knows it, Browder—our line's been changed again." . . .

CHAMPS

"Detroit Michigan, Oct. 21.—A leaflet issued by the Young Communist League here, calling for the support of Morris Sugar, labor's candidate for the Common Council, carries the picture of three champs—Joe Louis, Tommy Bridges and Morris Sugar." —Daily Worker, Oct. 22.—The Daily Worker should have added that the three champs were blindfolded, then copies of the "Mirror," the "News," and the "Daily Worker" were placed before their noses, all agreed that the Daily Worker smelled equally as strong as the other two. . . .

THE CHANGING LINE

"Jasper McLevy is a bosses' skate—our line's been changed again. Now we vote the S. P. slate—our line's been changed again." The Daily Worker of October 24 announces the withdrawal of all C.P. candidates in Bridgeport and the pledge of support "to Jasper McLevy and the entire S.P. slate."—"I knows it, Browder, etc." . . .

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

"I will support all moves of the League of Nations or any individual nation for genuine peace"—O. G. Doonan, Communist candidate in East Edmonton as reported in the Canadian Worker.

Point 6 of the 21 conditions for admission to the Third International. "Every party that wishes to belong to the Third International is obligated to unmask not only open social patriotism, but also the dishonesty and hypocrisy of social-pacifism, and systematically bring to the attention of the workers the fact that, without the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, no kind of international court of arbitration, no kind of an agreement regarding the limitation of armaments, no kind of a 'democratic' renovation of the League of Nations will be able to prevent fresh imperialistic wars." —But "the line's been changed again." Today, any C. P. member carrying out Point 6 is a "counter-revolutionary Trotskyite" and is excluded from the C. P., while the spokesmen and press of the C. I. with Stalin at the head, are busy painting up that old prostitute-hag, the League of Nations as a blooming, peace-loving virgin.

The Danger of War and the Defense of the Soviet Union

New Version of Social Patriotism as Deadly as Old

Fourth Int'l Only Guardian of Workers Fatherland

By MAURICE SPECTOR

Theodore Dan of the Russian Social-Democratic Party bitterly resisted the Soviet seizure of power. Otto Bauer of the Austrian Social-Democratic Party dragged the masses with poison of "constitutional" Marxism and confidently took Dollfus's word for it that the latter was not plotting a counter-revolutionary coup d'état. Jean Zyromski of the French Socialist Party lavishly scatters revolutionary phrases while supporting the expulsion of the Bolshevik-Leninists. Having thus brilliantly acquitted themselves in the class struggles of their several countries, these worthies in a thesis on "Socialism and the War Danger" jointly rally to the defense of the Soviet Union.

The International, they declare, meaning the Second International, must free itself from "traditional opinions." It is common knowledge that the "traditional opinions" meant raising the sword of "revolution against war" in the security of peace-time and docilely capitulating to the military budgets on the declaration of war. In 1914, says Bauer, "the International could not decide in favor of either of the two coalitions which were both composed of capitalist and imperialist powers, and the Socialist parties accepted a policy of National Union with their respective governments." But the present danger of a war between two coalitions, one headed by Hitler Germany, the other including the Soviet Union, creates an entirely different situation. The amendments to the "traditional opinions" the thesis presents for the changed situation only prove that the more Bauerism changes, the more it remains the same, with this difference that in its pre-war manifestoes at least, the Second International never did come out in support of "National Union." In words at least, the pre-war pledges of the International threatened the imperialist war-mongers with a revolutionary crisis.

Defending the Soviet Union With Social Patriotism!

On their own candid admission, the motives impelling Bauer-Dan-Zyromski to flaunt their social-patriotic policy are the noblest, the most impeccable. "The interests of international socialism demand that German fascism shall be defeated. The interests of international socialism demand that the Soviet Union shall be victorious." How is all that to be effected? By a revolutionary struggle against capitalism, and not against the war danger merely as some isolated phenomenon? By organizing the forces of the working class in the direction of the dictatorship of the proletariat? By registering the bankruptcy of the Second and Third Internationals whose policies and leadership were impotent to stem the tide of fascism? Do Bauer and Company urge the British Labor Party to fight for a government to establish socialism and not administer capitalism or the Socialist-Leninist leadership of the People's Front to quit collaborating with Herriot-Laval and organize the workers' militia against the armed menace of La Roque?

Not at all. To appeal to the independent action of the masses was never the weakness of Bauer-Dan-Zyromski. As their signal achievements indicate, they are realists. To overthrow fascism, promising their recruiting services in advance, they invoke the powerful aid of the peaceful and democratic imperialist powers associated in the League. The Comité des Forges, Schneider-Creusot, and Winston Churchill, these will make the world safe for the Soviet Union! But if you think we are going too far, let us quote: "In fighting against war, international socialism must support the governments of those countries which, saturated by the results of the last war, want to preserve peace"—as the British Royal Air Force is preserving peace beyond the north-west frontier of India. "International socialism," they add, "must support the institution of the League of Nations. . . . In all countries allied with the Soviet Union, Socialists cannot and must not hinder the conduct of the war. They must appeal to the workers to do their duty as soldiers as well as in the war industry." Compelled by the obvious realities to admit that the League is an instrument of imperialism, that the good Democracies are based on subjection of the proletariat and the colonial peoples, that the regional pacts are modern military alliances, they nevertheless cling to their main thesis that imperialism in military alliance with the U.S.S.R. is still hallowed.

Essentially the Bauer thesis urging the alliance of the working class with the capitalist state allied with the U.S.S.R., is the now familiar and treasonable position of the Stalin-Laval communique. Both declarations of policy serve as the basis for "organic unity" of the Second and Third Internationals. Unless the masses can be organized to resist the social-patriotic sophistry of Stalin-Bauer, they will be involved in a ghastly repetition of August 1914. The most tragic illusion of all is that the defense of the Soviet Union requires the betrayal of the working class independence in countries allied with the U.S.S.R. The Stalin-Bauer policy invites the defeat of both the Soviet Union and the international working class.

The one reliable ally of the Soviet Union is the international working class. But it is that ally that Stalin and Bauer with their social-patriotism are attempting to demoralize, systematically driving them into the camp of the rival imperialisms struggling for the redistribution of the world market. On this point there can be no doubt. The whole policy of the People's Front in France is directed to civil peace, class collaboration in preparation for the coming war. The support of the sanctions policy of the League of Nations involves the proletariat in support of the governmental policies of the imperialist powers in the League. The Bauer thesis piously expresses the hope that the lessons of the last war "will inspire the working class of the world with the determined will to throw a new war . . . to overthrow the capitalist system." The Bauer position will do anything but that. The fruits of the Stalin-Laval pact are already tragically apparent. The former communist and revolutionary ideology in the ranks of the Comintern is being supplanted by the ideology of liberalism, patriotism, and pacifism. The collaboration with the "remnants of bourgeois democracy" proclaimed by the Seventh Comintern Congress must inevitably sabotage any developing struggle for power, lest it undermine the military capacity of the bourgeois ally and appear to redound to Hitler's advantage. Once educated in the spirit of the "sacred union," it is not easy to make a right about face at anybody's command. Declaration of war will be followed by the suppression of all critical working class organization and press. The General Staff will rule. Bauer's policy will never lead to the revolution; it can only lead to another Versailles or the complete collapse of civilization.

Our's Is the Policy of Lenin

To the social-patriotism of Bauer-Dan we oppose the only policy that can save the Soviet Union as a socialist state, the position of revolutionary defeatism in every capitalist country whether allied with the Soviet Union or not. Lenin advocated the defeat of Czarist Russia and the overthrow of the Kerensky Government regardless of the protestations and oburgations of patriotic socialists that defeat, revolution and a separate peace would betray the cause of Western Democracy and play into the hands of Prussian Militarism. Lenin and Trotsky were vociferously denounced as German agents. Their former slogan of "make the world safe for democracy"—the democracy represented by the imperialist Allies,—the socialist-patriots have now supplemented with the plea of the Defense of the Soviet Union. But this kind of "Defense" must lead exactly to the same results as their 1914 defense of Entente democracy or "socialism" on the part of the German government-socialists. Social-patriotism had done its work so thoroughly that despite the terrible slaughter of the war and the subsequent chaos, in the victorious and vanquished countries alike, the proletariat was unable to overthrow the guilty ruling classes. "The working class," Bauer-Dan write coolly, "were not able to overthrow capitalism when it was weakened by the World War; they are now threatened with the danger of having to go through the hell of a second World War." If that is the case, it is thanks principally to the social-patriotic and treacherous doctrine and leadership of Bauer and Company in the last war.

Logic of Stalinism Precluded

The whole course of events which culminated in the Stalin-Laval pact and now finds expression in the Bauer thesis accurately verifies the consistent contention of the Russian Opposition that for the U.S.S.R. the most serious of all questions in connection with the war danger was the inner regime. The ebb in the tide of the post-war revolutionary movement nurtured the soil of the nationally disposed bureaucracy. Stalinism rationalized its position in the familiar theory of socialism-in-a-single-country, which by implication dispensed with the necessity of a revolutionary Communist International, since socialist construction was independent of the "state aid of the Western proletariat." Accommodation with the "neutralized bourgeoisie" and maneuvering through the League of Nations realistically followed. To destroy the Leninist Opposition it was necessary to crush the party. The anti-Marxist policies of the Stalinized Comintern contributed decisively to the accession of Hitler. The sequel of it all was the defensive measure of the Stalin-Laval communique which directs a mortal blow at the remnants of revolutionary policy of the Comintern. Every defeat of the Western working class has in turn resulted in the strengthening of the bureaucratic reaction, to the point where its most perfect expression is the personal dictatorship of Stalin. A new world war in which the workers would fail to achieve their independence of both the Soviet and the Comintern bureaucracy, in which they would continue to take part as an ally of the imperialist governments would spell doom to the Soviet Union as a workers' state.

The Two Roads

If the Stalin-Bauer policy leads to the calamitous repetition of August 1914, it criminally opens the door to the peril of imperialist intervention, not only from the direction of Hitler, but also from the "democratic" allies of the U.S.S.R. In the event of a protracted struggle and under the dictatorship of the most reactionary elements whom the imperialist war inevitably brings to the top, the "democratic" allies may turn openly fascist, concluding their own peace with their fellow-fascists at the expense of the Soviet Union. Even now, Laval's collaboration with the Soviet Union is sufficiently precarious and feeble for a rapprochement with Hitler have been extended more than once. But if the proletarian revolution does not destroy Western imperialism, the Soviet Union will be subjected to the terrific pressure of world reaction. This and the exhausting demands of modern military operations would confront the Soviet Union with the peril of an internal bourgeois-Bonapartist attack on its social basis. In these circumstances it is in the vital interests of the defense and preservation of the U.S.S.R. as a Workers' State (1) to build up the new revolutionary Fourth International independent of the diplomacy of the Soviet bureaucracy, and directing its energies to the transformation of the impending world imperialist war into a civil war for international socialism; (2) despite the perilous difficulties involved, to make every effort to renew the Bolshevik party of Lenin by the organization of the Soviet section of the Fourth International, pledged to the unconditional defense of the U.S.S.R. but in the interests of very defense to the unsparing criticism of everything in the war and diplomatic policy of the Stalin regime that is incompatible with revolutionary Marxism.

WHO FINANCES ITALY'S WAR?

How Big Business Provides Loans to Mussolini

(Reprinted from the British "New Leader," Organ of the I.L.P.)

Speculation has been very active in European capitals recently about the possible source of funds to keep the Italian war machine going. Will France furnish Italy the money to fight a war in Abyssinia? It is extremely improbable that the Laval government, pledged to economy and the security of the franc, will permit any loans. But there is another power in the French Republic from which Italy can obtain funds.

Observers have been wondering why certain French newspapers have shown such an exaggerated friendliness towards Italy. This friendliness cannot be entirely attributed to outright subsidizing of French journalists by the Italian government (it is common gossip that there have been large quantities of Italian money going around the Paris publishing world). A better explanation can be found in the enormous influence certain portions of French industry have on the press.

Loans to Industry

If the French banks, so the story goes, cannot lend directly to the Italian government, there is nothing to prevent them from offering loans to French industry. And the latter are in no way forbidden to assist Italian industry. It is a roundabout way, but, for that matter, no less effective.

This is how this reported scheme will work. French industries will invest their funds in Italian industry. The Italian government, which has a very thorough control over Italian industry, will convert those francs into lira and utilize them for the purchase of the raw materials, which Italy so sadly lacks, from foreign countries. It is very simple, and works just as well as a direct loan.

There have been some indications which support this story.

At the time of the Stresa Conference, a delegation of French bankers and industrialists, led by Ernest Mercier (one of the subsidizers of Colonel de la Rocque's Fascist Croix de Feu), were escorted on a tour through Italian industrial plants under the guidance of Count Volpi, the great Italian capitalist who has profited heavily from his connections with the Fascist government. As a climax, this delegation was received in Stresa by the Duce himself.

Money from War

Late in July, the "Eco de Paris," a newspaper with Fascist sympathies, which has shown a marked friendliness to Italy, published an article signed by the editor on the state of Italian finances. The article painted a very rosy picture of Italian finances and industry. But there was one very significant sentence in it: "It is probable that Italy must sooner or later make a bid, under one form or another, for foreign credit." The "under one form or another" was obviously the Duke's bid, through his principal spokesman in the French press, for the sort of circuitous financing described above.

Whether the Laval government will allow such a deal to be made remains to be seen. But deal or no deal, there is little doubt that French industry stands to make money from war and preparation for war in Italy. For important French firms are closely connected already by investment in Italy.

M. Albert Galcier, for instance, M. Galcier is one of the directors of the great Italian trust Montecatini, whose chemical works profit from the sale of explosives. He is also director of Hauts Fourneaux, Forges et Aciéries de Denain et d'Anzin, affiliated with the Comité des Forges, and having as vice-president M. Léopold Pralan, vice-president of the Comité des Forges. This firm of Denain and Anzin make special steels for war vessels and other steel products for military purposes.

There is another director of Montecatini, M. Paul Ernest Picard, also director of the Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, one of the great credit establishments in Paris. M. Picard is also a director of Forges et Chantiers de la Méditerranée, which makes armaments.

Explosives Pay

The lines run the other way, also—Italy into France. Montecatini is interested in the subsidiaries of the great French chemical trust of Kuhlmann and in another French chemical firm, La Société des Phosphates Tunisiens et des Engrais et Produits Chimiques.

The French financial press, "Information," August 1, gives a brilliant picture of the place Montecatini holds in Italy, especially in war time:

"The explosives branch is prospering. Besides receiving the ordinary orders, it is a secret to no one that the present outlook of the exterior politics of Italy is provoking additional orders which are not confined only to explosives. It is certain that, under the present circumstances, Montecatini will find their importance increasing, especially since Montecatini tends, more and more, to satisfy all Italian industrial needs."

While the French business men are profiting from these war preparations, it is interesting to find the Germans are not absent either from the fertile field of Montecatini.

Germany's Part

The I. G. Farbenindustrie, the enormous German chemical trust, long ago leased patents to and acquired shares in the Italian trust. And now we find that, according to "Information," a banking group, at the head of which is the Dresdener Bank, Montecatini shares amounting to about 500 million lire, par value. Knowledge of this fact should throw light on the German attitude, which is undisguisedly hopeful for an Abyssinian war. Thus while German arms have been sold to the Abyssinians, German industry has been investing in the Italian munitions business.

And Britain? It is well known that Britain's export trade with Italy is larger than that of other countries. Even without this trade, there are British investments in Italy, prominent among which is the branch of the armaments firm of Vickers, called Vickers Termini.

Participation of British industry in the profits of war in Italy may provide one explanation why the "big business" press in London has been so friendly towards Italy.

Comrade Candide and Comrade Browder ... A Tragi-Comedy

Being the Story of an Honest Worker Who Fell into a Coma in the Twilight of the "Third Period"

By JOHN MARSHALL

Chapter I

THE story is told of an honest worker, who was a fraternal delegate to the 8th Convention of the Communist Party in April, 1934. For want of a better name, we shall call the comrade Candide. The high point of that convention, all must recall, was a programmatic speech by Earl Browder, which lasted six hours; its conclusion was, according to the Daily Worker, rapturously greeted by a prolonged ovation from the assembled delegates.

At the very moment Browder finished his report, Candide suddenly lapsed into utter unconsciousness. After several weeks at the hospital, the doctors diagnosed his case as sleeping sickness, and there he lay in a coma for over a year, kept alive by artificial feeding.

During that time tremendous changes came over the policies of the Comintern. The Soviet Union entered the League of Nations; Stalin-Laval concluded the Franco-Soviet pact, warning French communists not to actively oppose French imperialist military preparations. The "social-fascist" leaders of the Second International became brothers-in-arms. The C. P. discarded the "united front from below" and formed united fronts from above, forswearing in advance any criticism of their allies. The Social-Democratic policy of "the lesser evil" was taken up by the C. P. through the medium of the Popular Front. The dual Red trade unions, which had been declared parts of the capitalist state apparatus and even semi-fascist and company union in character, were dismantled twice as fast as they had been created. The Seventh Congress of the Comintern gave official blessing to support of bourgeois democracy, both in peace and war.

Oblivious to all these mighty events, our hero slumbered on, until, on May Day of this year, he was unexpectedly aroused from his coma by the stirring strains of the Internationale from a workers' parade. His revolutionary spirit reawakened, Candide's body quickly followed, and he was soon on the road to recovery.

While convalescing, Candide began to read the Communist press with great eagerness, to review the progress made by the movement during his long sleep. He could hardly believe his eyes. Slogans in the Daily Worker: "For a Labor Party—Invoke Sanctions Against Fascist Italy—Support the League—Blockade the Suez Canal—United Front—Popular Front—Hurrah for John L. Lewis, etc., etc." He asked himself: Had illness affected his mind? Or was all this a monstrous deception perpetrated upon the revolutionary workers? Had the enemies of the C. P., the social-fascists or the Trotskyites, captured the Daily Worker? He piled the comrades who visited him with question after question without satisfaction. They kept assuring him that all this was the new official line. He could not believe them; they were merely trying to humor and soothe an invalid.

Browder's magnificent speech at the Eighth Convention still echoed in his ears; its compelling analysis of the world situation and its clear directives for the forthcoming period were still fresh in his memory. Candide could not rest until he had seen his beloved leader to find out from his lips the truth of the matter.

Chapter II

ONE day last week, restored to health, comrade Candide made his way to the ninth floor where Browder holds court. We have received a transcript of their conversation from our private agents, from which we extract the following:

Candide: "Comrade Browder, for four years I have been a loyal member of the party, the International Workers Order, the International Labor Defense, the Trade Union Unity League, the Friends of the Soviet Union, the League Against War and Fascism, the United Front Supporters, the A. F. of L. Rank and File Committee for Unemployment Insurance, the Anti-Nazi Federation, Friends of the Workers School, Film and Photo League, the Freiheit Mandolin Orchestra, the Pierre Degeyter Society, the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union, the Workers International Relief, and the League of Struggle for Negro Rights. For the past year and a half through no fault of my own, I've been out of touch with party affairs. I've so many things to ask you about, I hardly know where to begin. But tell me, comrade, is it true that the Central Committee addressed a letter to the leaders of the Socialist Party here, asking for a united front?"

Browder: "Yes, we sent the first letter on June 25 last year, and we've been sending them at regular intervals ever since."

Candide: "But only two months before your letter at the Cleveland Convention I heard you say: 'Unity behind these gentlemen, Norman Thomas and the S.P. leaders, means surrender to the capitalist attacks. That is not the kind of unity the workers need. We need a united front of the workers against the capitalists, and all their agents. But that means that unity must be built up, not with these leaders but against them. That means not a united front from the top, but a united front from below.' (p. 56.) To verify my recollections, I bought a copy of your speech the other day, and, sure enough, those were your very words."

Browder: "The world situation has changed since then, comrade, and we must adapt our tactics accordingly."

Candide: "But has the situation so radically changed in this country, or has the essential character of all these social-fascist leaders changed?"

Browder: "Dimitroff, the new leader of the Comintern, declared at the recent Congress: 'We must unite all democratic forces in the non-fascist countries in order to defend the remnants of bourgeois democracy.'"

Candide: "How can we unite with social-fascists, those cunning agents of fascism in the ranks of the working class, to fight fascism? Isn't the slogan of 'the defense of democracy' a social-fascist slogan, and a reliance on the democratic state in the struggle against fascism, the fatal policy of the 'lesser evil' that handed Germany over to Hitler? How well I remember your condemnation of these craven Socialists and the reformist trade union bureaucracy who hold back the workers from revolutionary struggle which alone can defeat and destroy fascism, and under the slogan of defense of democracy, and choosing the lesser evil, lead the workers to submit and support the intermediate steps to the introduction of fascism. That is why we call these leaders social-fascists, and their theories social-fascist. (p. 15.)

Candide: "I'm glad you brought up the united front in France. One of the conditions for the united front agreement there reads that both parties shall abstain from criticism of each other. But at Cleveland you said: 'In all united front activities, the Communists must always grant the right to all other groups, and reserve the right for themselves, of mutual criticism.' (p. 72.) Why did the French Communist Party give up the right of criticism, and even agree to abandon all factional work in the trade unions?"

Browder: "It was necessary in order to attain unity and maintain it."

Candide: "But you went on to say: 'The Communists can never agree to be silent, to refrain from criticism, on any breaking of agreements for struggle, or any betrayal or desertion of the fight. Any such agreements would not be contributions to unity, but rather to disunity.' (p. 72.)"

Browder: "Our Socialist comrades are fighting side by side with us" and the Radical Socialists, against the fascists. There have been no betrayals, no desertions of the fight."

Candide: "But at Brest and Toulon, the sailors, who protested against the Laval-Herriot decrees, were killed and wounded. What did the Socialist leaders, what did we do about that? Could we stand silent when workers are shot down by French gendarmes, while Herriot sits at the same time in the Laval cabinet and the Popular Front?"

Browder: "You don't understand the cunning of the fascists, comrade. Those riots were the work of police provocateurs, of fascist agents, possibly of White Guard, Menshevik, counter-revolutionary Trotskyites. Blum and Cachin, the leaders of the united front, agreed on that. No, we have the most harmonious relations within the Popular Front, and as for the united workers' front, that has been going so well that we are even now negotiating to form a single party."

Candide: "Every day, comrade, and sometimes three and four times a day. Now I think I understand the reasons for all these things, and then again I'm not sure. There are so many innovations in the Candide: "Unite in the same party with social-fascists? On what basis? A revolutionary program of struggle, the program of Marx and Lenin?"

Browder: "The time is not ripe for that. We will unite today on a program of struggle against war and fascism. We must overcome the sectarian tendencies in the party. That's why it's necessary, for example, to build a Labor Party here."

Candide: "But, comrade, how can you win the workers to a revolutionary program in this epoch, which Lenin called 'the epoch of wars and revolutions,' by uniting with reformists on a reformist program? Isn't it the worst form of right opportunism to hide the face of the party in that manner? You, yourself, said at the last convention that 'we must again emphasize . . . that . . . under no circumstances . . . (can we allow) . . . the abandonment of the independent role of the Communist Party. To push the Communist Party into the background, to allow it to be forgotten, is fatal to the success of a particular campaign, as well as endangering our future development. The tendency to bring forward workers' tickets in large industrial cities is generally wrong; it is a tendency to succumb to Farmer-Laborism.' (p. 69-70.) How can we withdraw our party candidates in favor of a joint labor or people's tickets, as we are doing today?"

Browder: "Don't you read the Daily Worker, which explains all these things?"

Candide: "Every day, comrade, and sometimes three and four times a day. Now I think I understand the reasons for all these things, and then again I'm not sure. There are so many innovations in the

The Art of Insurrection

By LEON TROTSKY

(From Volume III of the History of the Russian Revolution by Leon Trotsky)

People do not make revolution eagerly any more than they do war. There is this difference, however, that in war compulsion plays the decisive role, in revolution there is no compulsion except that of circumstances. A revolution takes place only when there is no other way out. And the insurrection, which rises above a revolution like a peak in the mountain chain of its events, can no more be evoked at will than the revolution as a whole. The masses advance and retreat several times before they make up their minds to the final assault.

Conspiracy is ordinarily contrasted to insurrection as the deliberate undertaking of a minority to a spontaneous movement of the majority. And it is true that a victorious insurrection, which can only be the act of a class called to stand at the head of the nation, is widely separated both in method and historic significance from a governmental overturn accomplished by conspirators in concealment from the masses.

Conspiracy and Insurrection

In every class society there are enough contradictions so that a conspiracy can take root in its cracks. Historic experience proves, however, that a certain degree of social disease is necessary—as in Spain, for instance, or Portugal or South America—to supply continual nourishment for a regime of conspiracies. A pure conspiracy even when victorious can only replace one clique of the same ruling class by another—or still less, merely alter the governmental personages. Only mass insurrection has ever brought the victory of one social regime over another. Periodic conspiracies are commonly an expression of social stagnation and decay, but popular insurrections on the contrary come usually as a result of some swift growth which has broken down the old equilibrium of the nation. The chronic "revolutions" of the South American republics have nothing in common with the permanent revolution; they are in a sense the very opposite thing.

This does not mean, however, that popular insurrection and conspiracies are in all circumstances mutually exclusive. An element of conspiracy almost always enters to some degree into any insurrection. Being historically conditioned by a certain stage in the growth of a revolution, a mass insurrection is never purely spontaneous. Even when it flashes out unexpectedly to a majority of its own participants, it has been fertilized by those ideas in which the insurrectionaries see a way out of the difficulties of existence. But a mass insurrection can be foreseen and prepared. It can be organized in advance. In this case the conspiracy is subordinate to the insurrection, serves it, smooths its path, hastens its victory. The higher the political level of a revolutionary movement and the more serious its leadership, the greater will be the place occupied by conspiracy in a popular insurrection.

It is very necessary to understand the relations between insurrection and conspiracy, both as they oppose and as they supplement each other. It is especially so, because the very use of the word conspiracy, even in Marxian literature, contains a superficial contradiction due to the fact that it sometimes implies an independent undertaking initiated by the minority, at others a preparation by the minority of a majority insurrection.

The Role of Spontaneity in Social Crises

History testifies, to be sure, that in certain conditions a popular insurrection can be victorious even without a conspiracy. Arising "spontaneously" out of the universal indignation, the scattered protests, demonstrations, strikes, street fights, an insurrection can draw in part of the army, paralyze the forces of the enemy, and overthrow the old power. To a certain degree this is what happened in February 1917 in Russia. Approximately the same picture is presented by the development of the German and Austro-Hungarian revolutions of the Autumn of 1918. Since in these events there was no party at the head of the insurrectionaries imbued through and through with the interests and aims of the insurrection, its victory had inevitably to transfer the power to those parties which up to the last moment had been opposing it.

To overthrow the old power is one thing; to take the power in one's own hands is another. The bourgeoisie may win the power in a revolution not because it is revolutionary but because it is bourgeois. It has in its possession property, education, the press, a network of strategic positions, a hierarchy of institutions. Quite otherwise with the proletariat. Deprived in the nature of things of all social advantages, an insurrectionary proletariat can count only on its numbers, its solidarity, its cadres, its official staff.

Just as a blacksmith cannot seize the red hot iron in his naked hands, so the proletariat cannot directly seize the power; it has to have an organization accommodated to this task. The coordination of the mass insurrection with the conspiracy, the subordination of the organization of the insurrection through the conspiracy, constitutes that complex and responsible department of revolutionary politics which Marx and Engels called "the art of insurrection." It presupposes a correct general leadership of the masses, a flexible orientation in changing conditions, a thought-out plan of attack, cautiousness in technical preparation, and a daring blow.

Limits of Spontaneous Insurrection

Historians and politicians usually give the name of spontaneous insurrection to a movement of the masses united by a common hostility against the old regime, but not having a clear aim, deliberate methods of struggle, or a leadership consciously showing the way to victory. This spontaneous insurrection is concedingly recognized by official historians—at least those of democratic temper—as a necessary evil, the responsibility for which falls on the old regime. The real reason for their attitude of indulgence is that "spontaneous" insurrection cannot transcend the framework of the bourgeois regime.

The social democrats take a similar position. They do not reject revolution at large as a social catastrophe, any more than they reject earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, eclipses and epidemics of the plague. What they do reject—calling it "Blanquism," or still worse, "Bolshevism"—is the conscious preparation of an overturn, the plan, the conspiracy. In other words, the social democrats are ready to sanction—and that only ex post facto—those overturns which hand the power to the bourgeoisie, but they implacably condemn those methods which might alone bring the power to the proletariat. Under this pretended objectivism they conceal a policy of defense of the capitalist society.

The Significance of "Blanquism"

From his observations and reflections upon the failure of the many insurrections he witnessed or took part in, August Blanqui derived a number of tactical rules which if violated will make the victory of any insurrection extremely difficult, if not impossible. Blanqui demanded these things: a timely creation of correct revolutionary detachments, their centralized command and adequate equipment, a well calculated placement of barricades, their definite construction, and a systematic, not a mere episodic, defense of them. All these rules, deriving from the military problems of the insurrection, must of course change with social conditions and military technique, but in themselves they are not by any means "Blanquism" in the sense that this word approaches the German "putschism," or revolutionary adventurism. Insurrection is an art, and like all arts has its laws. The rules of Blanqui were the demands of a military revolutionary realism. Blanqui's mistake lay not in his direct but his inverse theorem. From the fact that tactical weakness condemns an insurrection to defeat, Blanqui inferred that observance of the rules of insurrectionary tactics would itself guarantee the victory. Only from this point on is it legitimate to contrast Blanquism with Marxism. Conspiracy does not take the place of insurrection. An active minority of the proletariat, no matter how well organized, cannot seize the power regardless of the general conditions of the country. In this point history has condemned Blanquism. His affirmative theorem retains all its force. In order to conquer the power, the proletariat needs more than a spontaneous insurrection. It needs a suitable organization, it needs a plan; it needs a conspiracy. Such is the Leninist view of this question.

Engels on Barricade Fighting

Engels' criticism of the fetishism of the barricades was based upon the evolution of military technique and of technique in general. The insurrectionary tactic of Blanquism corresponded to the character of the old Paris, the semi-handicraft proletariat, the narrow streets and the military system of Louis Philippe. Blanqui's mistake in principle was to identify revolution with insurrection. His technical mistake was to identify insurrection with the barricade. The Marxian crit-cism has been directed against both mistakes. Although at one with Blanquism in regarding insurrection as an art, Engels discovered not only the subordinate place occupied by insurrection in a revolution, but also the declining role of the barricade in an insurrection. Engels' criticism had nothing in common with a renunciation of the revolutionary method in favor of pure parliamentarism, as the philistines of the German social democracy, in cooperation with the Hohenzollern censorship, attempted in their day to pretend. For Engels the question about barricades remained a question about one of the technical elements of an uprising. The reformists have attempted to infer from his rejection of the decisive importance of the barricade a rejection of revolutionary violence in general. That is about the same as to infer the destruction of militarism from considerations of the probable decline in importance of trenches in future warfare.

The organization means by which the proletariat can both overthrow the old power and replace it, is the soviets. This afterwards became a matter of historic experience, but was up to the October revolution a theoretical prognosis—resting, to be sure, upon the preliminary experience of 1905. The soviets are organs of preparations of the masses for insurrection, organs of insurrection, and after the victory organs of government.

However, the soviets by themselves do not settle the question. They may serve different goals according to the program and leadership. The soviets receive their program from the party. Whereas the soviets in revolutionary conditions—and apart from revolution they are impossible—comprise the whole class with the exception of its altogether backward, inert or demoralized strata, the revolutionary party represents the brain of the class. The problem of conquering the power can be solved only by a definite combination of party with soviets—or with other mass organizations more or less equivalent to soviets.

popular masses and the progressive class, between the proletariat and its vanguard, between the soviets and the party, between insurrection and conspiracy. But if it is true that an insurrection cannot be evoked at will, and that nevertheless in order to win it must be organized in advance, then the revolutionary leaders are presented with a task of correct diagnosis. They must feel out the growing insurrection in good season and supplement it with a conspiracy. The interference of the midwife in labor pains—however this image may have been abused—remains the clearest illustration of this conscious intrusion into an elementary process. Herzen once accused his friend Bakunin of invariably in all his revolutionary enterprises taking the second month of pregnancy for the ninth. Herzen himself was rather inclined to deny even in the ninth that pregnancy existed. In February the question of determining the date of birth hardly arose at all, since the insurrection flared up unexpectedly without centralized leadership. But exactly for this reason the power did not go to those who had accomplished the insurrection, but to those who had applied the brakes. It was quite otherwise with the second insurrection. This was consciously prepared by the Bolshevik party. The problem of correctly seizing the moment to give the signal for the attack was thus laid upon the Bolshevik staff.

When Is the Time Ripe for the Action

Moment here is not to be taken too literally as meaning a definite day and hour. Physical births also present a considerable period of uncertainty—their limits interesting not only to the art of the midwife, but also to the casuists of the surrogate court. Between the moment when an attempt to summon development of the nation. A revolution becomes possible, however, only in case the society contains a new class capable of taking the lead in solving the problems presented by history. The process of preparing a revolution consists of making the objective problems involved in the contradictions of industry and of classes find their way into the consciousness of living human masses, change this consciousness and create new correlations of human forces.

The ruling classes, as a result of their practically manifested incapacity to get the country out of its blind alley, lose faith in themselves; the old parties fall to pieces; a bitter struggle of groups and cliques prevails; hopes are placed in miracles or miracle workers. All this constitutes one of the political premises of a revolution, a very important although a passive one.

A bitter hostility to the existing order and a readiness to venture upon the most heroic efforts and sacrifices in order to bring the country out upon an upward road—this is the new political consciousness of the revolutionary class, and constitutes the most important active premise of a revolution.

These two fundamental camps, however—the big property holders and the proletariat—do not exhaust the population of a country. Between them lie broad layers of the petty bourgeoisie, showing all the colors of the economic and political rainbow. The discontent of these intermediate layers, their disappointment with the policy of the ruling class, their impatience and indignation, their readiness to support a bold revolutionary initiative on the part of the proletariat, constitutes the third political premise of a revolution. It is partly passive—in that it neutralizes the upper strata of the petty bourgeoisie—but partly also active, for it impels the lower strata directly into the struggle side by side with the workers.

Falsity of Menshevik Conceptions

But the falsity of this Menshevik conception appears also from a national point of view. From the standpoint of economic abstraction, it is indeed possible to affirm that capitalism in Russia has not exhausted its possibilities. But economic processes do not take place in the ether, but in a concrete historical medium. Capitalism is not an abstraction, but a living system of class relations requiring above all things a state power. That the monarchy, under whose protection Russian capitalism developed, had exhausted its possibilities is not denied even by the Mensheviks. The February revolution tried to build up an intermediate state regime. We have followed its history: in the course of eight months it exhausted itself completely. What sort of state order could in these conditions guarantee the further development of Russian capitalism?

"The bourgeois republic, defended only by socialists of moderate tendencies, finding no longer any support in the masses . . . could not maintain itself. Its whole essence had evaporated. There remained only an external shell." This accurate definition belongs to Miliukov. The fate of this evaporated system was necessarily, according to his words, the same as that of the Czarist monarchy: "Both prepared the ground for a revolution, and on the day of the revolution neither could find a single defender."

Kornilov or Lenin -- No Other Road

As early as July and August Miliukov characterized the situation by presenting a choice between two names: Kornilov or Lenin? But Kornilov had now made his experiment and it had ended in a miserable failure. For the regime of Kerensky there was certainly no place left. With all the varieties of mood, says Sukhanov, "the one thing upon which all united was hate for the Kerensky regime." Just as the Czarist monarchy had toward the end become impossible in the eyes of the nobility or grand dukes, so the government of Kerensky became odious even to the direct inspirers of his regime, the "grand dukes" of the compromiser upper crust. In this universal dissatisfaction, this sharp political nerve-tension of all classes, we have one of the symptoms of a ripe revolutionary situation. In the same way every muscle, nerve and fiber of an organism is intolerably tense just before an abcess bursts. The resolution of the July congress of the Bolsheviks, while warning the workers against premature encounters, had at the same time pointed out that the battle must be joined "whenever the general national crisis and the deep mass enthusiasm have created conditions favorable to the going over of the poor people of the city and country to the side of the workers." That moment arrived in September and October.

The insurrection was thenceforth able to believe in its success, for it could rely upon a genuine majority of the people. This, of course, is not to be understood in a formal sense. If a referendum could have been taken on the question of the insurrection, it would have given extremely contradictory and uncertain results. And a readiness to support the revolution is far from identical with an ability clearly to formulate the necessity for it. Moreover, the answer would have depended to a vast degree upon the manner in which the question was presented, the institutions which conducted the referendum—or, to put it more simply, the class which held the power.

The Limits of Democratic Methods

There is a limit to the application of democratic methods. You can inquire of all the passengers as to what type of car they like to ride in, but it is impossible to question them as to whether to apply the brakes when the train is at full speed and accident threatens. If the saving operation is carried out skillfully however, and in time, the approval of the passengers is guaranteed in advance.

Parliamentary consultations of the people are carried out at a single moment, whereas during a revolution the different layers of the population arrive at the same conclusion one after another and with inevitable, though sometimes very slight intervals. At the moment when the advanced detachment is burning with revolutionary impatience, the backward layers have only begun to move. In Petrograd and Moscow all the mass organizations were under the leadership of the Bolsheviks. In the Tambov province, which has over three million population—that is, a little less than both capitals put together—a Bolshevik faction first appeared in the Soviet only a short time before the October revolution.

The syllogisms of the objective development are far from coinciding—day by day—with the syllogisms of the thought process of the masses. And when a great practical decision becomes unpostponable, in the course of events, that is the very moment when a referendum is impossible. The difference in level and mood of the different layers of the people is overcome in action. The advance layers bring after them the wavering and isolate the opposing. The majority is not counted up, but won over. Insurrection comes into being at exactly that moment when direct action alone offers a way out of the contradictions.

Although lacking the power to draw by themselves the necessary political inferences from their war against the landlords, the peasants had by the very fact of the agrarian insurrection already adhered to the insurrection of the cities, had evoked it and were demanding it. They expressed their will not with the white ballot, but with the red cock—a more serious referendum. Within those limits in which the support of the peasantry was necessary for the establishment of a soviet dictatorship, the support was already in hand. "The dictatorship"—as Lenin answered the doubters—"would give land to the peasants and all power to the peasant committees in the localities. How can you in your right mind doubt that the peasants would support that dictatorship?" In order that the soldiers, peasants and oppressed nationalities, floundering in the snowstorm of an elective ballot should recognize the Bolsheviks in action, it was necessary that the Bolsheviks seize the power.

Lenin on Dynamics of the Majority

But what correlation of forces was necessary in order that the proletariat should seize the power? "To have at the decisive moment, at the decisive point, an overwhelming superiority of force," wrote Lenin later, interpreting the October revolution. ". . . this law of military success is also the law of political success, especially in that seething and bitter war of classes which is called revolution. The soviets, or generally speaking the biggest centers of trade and industry . . . decide to a considerable degree the political fate of the people—that is, of course, on condition that the centers are supported by sufficient local rural forces, although this support need not be immediate." It was in this dynamic sense that Lenin spoke of the majority of the people, and that was the sole real meaning of the concept of majority.

The enemy democrats comforted themselves with the thought that the people following the Bolsheviks were mere raw material, mere historic clay. The potters were still to be these same democrats acting in cooperation with the educated bourgeoisie. "Can't these people see," asked a Menshevik paper, "that the Petrograd proletariat and garrison were never before so isolated from all other social strata?" The misfortune of the proletariat ing the power can be solved only by a definite combination of party with soviets—or with other mass organizations more or less equivalent to soviets.

The Importance of The Soviets

When headed by a revolutionary party the soviet consciously and in good season strives towards a conquest of power. Accommodating itself to changes in the political situation and the mood of the masses, it gets ready the military basis of the insurrection, unites the shock troops upon a single scheme of action, works out a plan for the offensive and for the final assault. And this means bringing organized conspiracy into mass insurrection.

The Bolsheviks were compelled more than once, and long before the October revolution, to refute accusations of conspiratism and Blanquism directed against them by their enemies. Moreover, nobody waged a more implacable struggle against the system of pure conspiratism than Lenin. The opportunists of the international social democracy more than once defended the old Social Revolutionary tactic of individual terror directed against the agents of Czarism, when this tactic was ruthlessly criticized by the Bolsheviks with their insistence upon mass insurrection as opposed to the individual adventurism of the intelligentsia. But in refuting all varieties of Blanquism and anarchism, Lenin did not for a moment bow down to any "sacred" spontaneity of the masses. He thought out before anybody else, and more deeply, the correlation between the objective and subjective factors in a revolution, between the spontaneous movement and the policy of the party, between the an insurrection must inevitably prove premature and lead to a revolutionary miscarriage, and the moment when a favorable situation must be considered, hopelessly missed, there exists a certain period—it may be measured in weeks, and sometimes in a few months—in the course of which an insurrection may be carried out with more or less chance of success. To discriminate this comparatively short period and then choose the definite moment—now in the more accurate sense of the very day and hour—for the last blow, constitutes the most responsible task of the revolutionary leaders. It can with full justice be called the key problem, for it unites the policy of revolution with the technique of insurrection—and it is needless to add that insurrection, like war, is a continuation of politics with other instruments.

Intuition and experience are necessary for revolutionary leadership, just as for all other kinds of creative activity. But much more than that is needed. The art of the magician can also successfully rely upon intuition and experience. Political magic is adequate, however, only for epochs and periods in which routine predominates. An epoch of mighty historic upheavals has no use for witch-doctors. Here experience, even illumined by intuition, is not enough. Here you must have a synthetic doctrine comprehending the interactions of the chief historic forces. Here you must have a materialistic method permitting you to discover, behind the moving shadows of program and slogan, the actual movement of social bodies.

The fundamental premise of a revolution is that the existing social structure has become incapable of solving the urgent problems of development of the nation. A revolution becomes possible, however, only in case the society contains a new class capable of taking the lead in solving the problems presented by history. The process of preparing a revolution consists of making the objective problems involved in the contradictions of industry and of classes find their way into the consciousness of living human masses, change this consciousness and create new correlations of human forces.

Conditions Coincide for Victory in Russia

Notwithstanding the number of great social and political crises, a coincidence of all the conditions necessary to a victorious and stable proletarian revolution has so far occurred but once in history: in above it a far-sighted, firm and confident leadership. This brings us to the last premise—by no means the last in importance—of the conquest of power: the revolutionary party as a tightly welded and tempered vanguard of the class.

Thanks to a favorable combination of historic conditions, both domestic and international, the Russian proletariat was headed by a party of extraordinary political clarity and unexampled revolutionary temper. Only this permitted that small and young class to carry out a historic task of unprecedented proportions. It is indeed the general testimony of history—the Paris Commune, the German and Austrian revolutions of 1918, the soviet revolutions in Hungary and Bavaria, the Italian revolution of 1919, the German crisis of 1923, the Chinese revolution of 1925-27, the Spanish revolution of 1931—that up to now the weakest link in the chain of necessary conditions has been the party. The hardest thing of all is for the working class to create a revolutionary organization capable of rising to the height of its historic task. In the older and more civilized countries powerful forces worked toward the weakening and demoralization of the revolutionary vanguard. An important constituent part of this work is the struggle of the social democrats against "Blanquism" by which name they designate the revolutionary essence of Marxism.

Victor Serge's Account of the Seizure of Power

THE AUTHOR

Victor Serge (Victor Kibalchitsch) was born in Brussels December 30, 1890. His parents were exiled Russian revolutionists. He was active in the movement at the age of fifteen as an anarchist. He was arrested in France in connection with the Bonnet case and was condemned to five years, which he served because he refused to denounce his comrades.

Freed in 1917 he went to Spain. As a printer in Barcelona he participated in an abortive insurrection. When the news of the October Revolution came he tried to reach Russia. He was arrested and interned in the Sarthe concentration camp in France. He was exchanged together with some Russians for officers of the French military mission in Russia. He travelled in the company of Rousakov, whose daughter Liuba, he later married.

He joined the Third International and was given the direction of the French language bureau, and later of the "International Correspondence." He took part in the revolutionary struggle in Russia (during the defense of Petrograd from the Yudenich offensive), and as a journalist, in the Austrian and German revolutions.

But he also took part in the faction struggles inside the party. In the latter part of 1927 he was expelled from the party and spent six weeks in prison.

Deprived henceforth of political activity, he lived by doing hack work (translations, etc.) which he was still able to procure, and devoted himself to his own literary and historical works: The Year 1 of the Russian Revolution, Men in Prison, Birth of Our Power, Literature and Revolution, The Conquered City, etc.

At the same time he tried to get permission to leave Russia. He received no answer, or at best equivocal answers for years, and finally a blank refusal. His friends in France made efforts in the same direction (letters to soviet authorities, visits to the ambassadors; only in the last few weeks (1933) did they have recourse to the press as a last measure) with no more success. The Committee which has taken up his cause includes such artists and writers as Paul Signac, Leon Werth, Georges Duhamel, Firmin Gémier, Victor Margueritte, Magdeleine Paz, Luc Durtain, Henry Poulaille, Charles Villard, etc. It has offered to stand all the expenses of repatriating Serge and his family.

On March 8, 1932, Serge was arrested and imprisoned once more. At the end of June he was exiled to Orenburg by executive order—renewable at will, and the same measure to be cancelled at will—from the G.P.U.

He is still in exile. The article printed here is a chapter translated from his best work: "The Year One of the Russian Revolution."

On the Eve of Battle

The conflict between the two powers—the Provisional Government headed by Kerenski, and the Soviet—entered a sharper phase in Petersburg after October 16, when the Military Revolutionary Committee was formed. The Committee was headed by Antonov-Ovseenko, Podvoiski, and Chudnovski. The Petersburg garrison had come over to the Bolsheviks. The government, citing the danger of a German offensive, tried to send the revolutionary regiments off to the front. The M.R.C. was equipped with liaison, information, and armaments departments. It began by appointing commissaries in every unit of the troops. The bourgeoisie was alarmed—but the appointment of commissaries at the armories put a stop to that. The delegates of the M.R.C. were welcomed by the troops who knew the Committee was opposed to the order sending them to the front. The M.R.C. simply refused to countersign the order. A refusal they were careful enough to explain as giving the Committee time to examine the question. . . . The M.R.C. assumed general power over the troops, and ended by ordering them not to pay any attention to the regular general staff. From then on the insurrection was, so to speak, latent. Two powers measured each other and two military authorities, the one insurrectional, deliberately cancelled each other's orders.

The Second All Russian Congress of Soviets was to meet in Petersburg on October 15. The Mensheviks managed to postpone the meeting until the 25th (Nov. 7, New Style), thus obtaining ten days grace for the bourgeois provisional government. No one doubted but that the congress, where the Bolsheviks were certain of a majority, would vote for the seizure of power. "You are setting the date of the revolution," said the Mensheviks to the Bolsheviks. In order that the foregone decision of the congress might be something more than a platonic expression of opinion it was necessary to support it by force of arms. As to the date for the insurrection two points of view were manifest; Trotsky wanted to tie up with the congress, believing that an independent insurrection of the party would have less chance of carrying along the masses; Lenin thought it "criminal" to temporize until the congress, fearing that the Provisional Government would forestall the insurrection by a vigorous offensive. Events failed to justify his fear, which was nonetheless legitimate. The enemy proved to be completely demoralized. In our opinion two perfectly correct conceptions, based on different considerations came into conflict on this point. The one strategic, based on the necessity for tying up the action of the party with an immediate demand intelligible to the widest masses ("All power to the Soviets"), certainly a condition for success; the other based on a general line, to eliminate every illusion of the possibility of proletarian power before the insurrection. Once this possibility is admitted in theory, why not admit the possibility of power without insurrection? That road could lead far. Since 1906 Lenin had attacked the tendency to "Gloss over or forget the insurrection in considering the organization of revolutionary power. . . ." His realistic position might be expressed thus: Conquer first. Lenin wished the insurrection to forestall the congress; faced with a fait accompli the congress could not but sanction it. He urged his point of view in a personal conference with the organizers of the insurrection. He was passionately concerned with the details of the preparation, and would not consent to defer the offensive at any price. Nevski and Podvoiski tried vainly to convince him that a few extra days of preparation would only increase the chances of victory. "The enemy will also profit by delay," he replied obstinately. Antonov-Ovseenko has left a striking account of an interview with Lenin, which occurred a few days before the battle, in a house in the workers' quarter of Vyborg. Lenin, hunted by Kerenski's police, Lenin, who in case of capture would probably have been killed by a "stray" bullet, came in in disguise. "We found ourselves in the presence of a little old graybeard wearing a pince nez, wearing it well enough, rather debonaire in fact; a musician, a teacher, or a librarian one would have thought. He took off his wig and revealed his usual humorous expression; 'What news?' He was full of assurance. He inquired the possibility of calling the fleet to Petersburg. In reply to the objection that this would leave the coast unprotected he said curtly: 'The sailors must know that the revolution is in greater danger in Petersburg than on the Baltic.'"

Situated in the center of the city on the little island in the Neva River, the fortress of Peter and Paul was a source of worry to the M.R.C. Its guns commanded the Winter Palace; there were 100,000 rifles in its armory. Its garrison appeared to be faithful to the Provisional Government. Trotsky proposed to capture this citadel from the interior—by a meeting. He succeeded (with Lashevitch). October 22 was the day of the Petersburg Soviet; it was the day of the plebiscite, so to speak, of the insurrection. It often happens that events of great importance rise from apparently unimportant immediate causes; for the latter is in reality nothing but the last link in a whole chain of causes. The Central Executive, including the treasury of the Soviet, was still in the hands of the pacifist socialists. The Soviet needed a newspaper. It was decided to hold a number of large meetings on the 22nd to raise funds for that purpose. The bourgeois press, frightened by the mobilization, announced that it was an uprising. Kerenski gave out fine sounding statements, but they were nothing but sound. "All Russia is with us; we have nothing to fear." And he threatened "the elements, the groups, the parties who dare attack the liberty of the Russian people, who risk opening the front to Germany, who will end by completely liquidating the revolution." A regular Galifret! But his threats were vain; he was too late. The 22nd saw a formidable mobilization of the masses. Every hall was filled. At the Peoples House (Narodni Dom) thousands filled the auditorium, the galleries, the corridors; in the great hall clusters of human beings hung shakily to the steel framework of the building. . . . John Reed was there; his notes on this meeting, where Trotsky roused the crowd, deserve repetition: "The people around me appeared to be in ecstasy. It seemed that they were about to burst forth spontaneously in a religious hymn. Trotsky read a resolution to the general effect that they were ready to fight for the workers and peasants to the last drop of their blood. . . . Who is in favor of the resolution? The innumerable crowd raised its hand as a single man. I saw the burning eyes of men, women, adolescents, workers, soldiers, mujiks. . . . Trotsky went on. The hands remained raised. Trotsky said, 'Let this vote be your oath. You swear to give all your strength, not to hesitate before any sacrifice, to support the Soviet which undertakes to win the revolution and give you land, bread, and peace.' The hands remained raised. The crowd approved; they took the oath. . . . And the same scene was repeated all over Petersburg. The last preparations were made everywhere; everywhere they swore the last oath; thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of men. It was the insurrection."

Kronstadt and the Fleet

On the morning of the 25th the revolutionary forces of Kronstadt received orders to prepare to defend the Soviet Congress (for the offensive was launched under the formal cover of defense). Let us pause for a moment on the preparations at Kronstadt, of which one of the participants (I. Flerovski) has left an excellent account. The rational element, the element of coordination, the perfect organization of the insurrection as a military operation according to the rules of war, there appears most clearly; and the contrast with the spontaneous, badly organized movements so numerous in the history of the proletariat is striking. "Preparations for the march on Petrograd were carried on during the night. . . . The Navy Club was jammed with soldiers, sailors, and workers, all under arms, all ready for action. . . . The revolutionary general staff followed the plan of operations exactly, designated the various units and sections, made inventory of supplies and ammunition, assigned the different leaders. The night passed in feverish work. The following boats were ordered to support the operation: the torpedo boat minelayer Amour, the old cruiser Dawn of Liberty (formerly Alexander III), the monitor Vautour. The Amour and Vautour were to disembark troops in Petrograd. The cruiser was to take up a station at the entrance of the maritime canal, commanding the coastal railroad with its cannon. A feverish but silent activity went on in the streets. Army and Navy detachments marched toward the port. Only the serious, concentrated faces of the first ranks were to be seen by the light of torches. Neither laughter nor talk; only the martial tread of marching men, sharp commands, and groaning passage of trucks interrupted the silence. In the port the boats were hastily boarded. The detachments drawn up on the docks waited patiently for their turn to embark. Is it possible, I thought in spite of myself, that these can be the last moments before the Great Revolution? Everything went off with such simplicity and order that one could believe that nothing more was at stake than some everyday military maneuver. How little this resembled the revolutionary scenes that one remembers from history. . . . 'This revolution,' my companion said, 'is going off well.'"

This revolution went off in swell proletarian style—with organization. That is why it conquered in Petrograd, so easily and completely. Let us borrow another significant scene from these memories. On board one of the boats headed for the insurrection; the delegate of the revolutionary general staff enters the officers mess. "Here the atmosphere is different. They are worried, careworn, puzzled. As I enter and salute the officers rise. They listen to my short explanation while standing. I give the order: 'We are going to overthrow the Provisional Government by force. Power will pass to the Soviets. We do not count on your sympathy; we don't need it. But we urge you to remain at your posts, filling your duties punctually and obeying our orders. We shall spare you superfluous trials. That is all.'—'We understand, the captain replies. The officers file out to their posts; the captain mounts the bridge.'"

A numerous fleet came to the aid of the proletariat and the garrison. The cruisers Aurora, Oleg, Novik, Zabika, Samson, two torpedo boats and several other vessels steamed up the Neva.

The Capture of the Winter Palace

Three comrades, Podvoiski, Antonov-Ovseenko, Lashevitch, had been entrusted with organizing the capture of the Winter Palace. Schudnovski, a Bolshevik from the earliest days, who was soon to die in the Ukraine, worked with them. The former imperial residence is situated in the center of the city on the banks of the Neva. It faces Peter and Paul fortress which lies across the river at a distance of five hundred yards. To the south the palace looks out on a vast paved square which contains the Column of Alexander I. Across this square in a semi-circle are the former army and foreign affairs buildings. In 1879 the revolver shots of the student Alexander II fled, doubled over, pale with fright, echoed among these buildings. In 1871 the explosion of a dynamite charge set by the carpenter Stephen Kalitourine under the imperial apartments, blasted through the square. Here on January 22, 1905, troops opened fire on the crowd of the hymn sung by workers come to petition their "Little Father Tsar." There were fifty deaths and more than a thousand wounded—the autocracy met fatally of all, by its own bullets.

On the morning of the 25th of October Bolshevik regiments acting in concert with the Red Guard, began to encircle the Palace, now the seat of Kerenski's ministry. The attack was planned for nine o'clock in the evening, although Lenin, ever impatient, urged them to attack sooner. While a wall of steel gradually surrounded the Palace, the Congress of Soviets met at Smolny, a former school for daughters of the nobility. Still hunted by the police a few hours before he was to become the leader of the first workers' state, still in disguise, Lenin strode up and down a small room in the building. Of each new arrival he asked, "The Palace? Not yet taken?" His anger against temporizers mounted hourly. He threatened Podvoiski, "We must shoot him, we must shoot him." The soldiers grouped around bonfires in the streets near the palace were equally impatient. "The Bolsheviks are turning diplomat too," they muttered. Once more Lenin's view, in a minor detail, was that of the masses. Podvoiski, sure of victory, deferred the attack. Agitated demoralized the already doomed enemy. Every drop of revolutionary blood, now easily spared, was precious.

The first summons to surrender was sent in to the ministers at six o'clock; at eight o'clock another ultimatum; Bolshevik orators harangued the defenders. A crack battalion came over to the Bolsheviks; welcomed by a tremendous hurrah as they crossed the square. The women's battalion surrendered a few moments later. The terrified ministers, left alone in the vast palace without lights, guarded by a handful of military cadets, still hesitated to surrender. Kerenski had run out on them, promising to return at the head of a detachment of faithful troops. They expected to be torn to pieces by an infuriated mob. The cannon of the Aurora—firing blank cartridges—finally demoralized the defenders. The attack met only feeble resistance. Grenades exploded on the great marble staircases, there was hand to hand fighting in the corridors. In the shadows of a great anti-chamber a single file of cadets crossed bayonets before a pannelled door. It was the last rampart of the last bourgeois government of Russia. Antonov-Ovseenko, Podvoiski, and Tchudnovski pushed past the motionless bayonets. "I am with you," one of the youths whispered. Inside was the Provisional Government; thirteen pitiful, shaking ministers, thirteen fear-strained faces hidden in the shadow. As they went out of the Palace surrounded by Red Guards, a cry for their death went up. The soldiers and sailors had slight desire to see a massacre. The Red Guard kept them close. "Don't soil the victory of the proletariat with excesses." Kerenski's ministers were sent off to Peter and Paul Fortress, the former Bastille through which so many Russian heroes had passed. There they joined the last ministers of the Tsar. That was all. In the neighboring sections of the city traffic had not even been interrupted. On the wharfs sight-seers looked on quietly. A detail of organization: in order that momentary successes of the enemy might not interfere with their work the military leaders of the insurrection had prepared two reserve headquarters.

The Congress of the Soviets

While the reds surround the Winter Palace the Petrograd Soviet meets. Lenin comes out of hiding. Lenin and Trotsky announce the seizure of power. The Soviets are going to offer a democratic peace to all belligerent powers; secret treaties will be published. Lenin's first words emphasize the importance of the bond between the peasants and the workers, which is yet unsealed:

"In Russia the immense majority of the peasantry has said: 'Enough of this game with the capitalists, we shall march with the workers.' A single decree abolishing the landowners' estates will gain us the confidence of the peasantry. They will understand that their salvation is with the workers. We shall set up workers control of industry. . . ."

The All Russian Congress of Soviets does not open until evening in the great white ball room at Smolny, illuminated by enormous chandeliers. Five hundred and sixty-two delegates are present; three hundred and eighty-two Bolsheviks, thirty-one non-party sympathizers with the Bolsheviks, seventy Left Social Revolutionaries, thirty-six center right Social Revolutionaries, three nationalist Social Revolutionaries, fifteen United Internationalist Social Democrats, twenty-one Menshevik partisans of national defense, seven Social Democrats from various national organizations, five anarchists. The room is crowded and feverish. The Menshevik Dan opens the congress in the name of the former All Russian Executive; cannon thunder on the Neva as the officers are elected. The resistance of the Winter Palace drags on. Kamenev, "dressed in his best and in a holiday mood," replace Dan as president. He proposes a three point agenda: "Organization of Power; War and Peace; The Constituent Assembly." The Mensheviks and the Social Revolutionaries take the floor first. For the former Martov, their most gifted and intelligent leader, whose physical sickness seems, in spite of his great personal courage, to be sickness of the idea he serves, "Martov, planted as usual with his hand on his hip, pale, trembling and queerly twisted, shaking his ruffled hair, urges a peaceful solution of the conflict." A little later! Mistslavski takes the floor for the Left Social Revolutionaries. His party mistrusted the Provisional Government and was favorable to the seizure of power by the Soviets, but had refused to join in the insurrection. He speaks in nuances. All power to the Soviets, certainly! All the more so since they have already seized power. But all military operations must be immediately stopped. How can anybody think in the middle of a cannonade? To which Trotsky replies, "Who is embarrassed by the sound of cannon? To the contrary, we shall work all the better."

The cannon glare in the windows. A sailor from the cruiser Aurora appears in the hall to reply to the Mensheviks and the right Social Revolutionaries who are denouncing "this crime against Country and Revolution." "A bronzed figure he was," Mistslavski relates, "his gestures were curt, his words cut through the air like a knife. Stocky and strong, he mounted the platform, his hairy chest showing beneath the high collared shirt that curved gracefully about his shaggy head. The hall crackled with excitement. . . . The Winter Palace is finished," he said, "the Aurora is firing at point blank range." "Oh," groans the Menshevik Abramovitch, on his feet, distracted and wringing his hands, "Oh!" The man from the Aurora responds to this cry with a graceful gesture of magnanimity and consoles him in a loud whisper that trembles with suppressed laughter, "They are shooting blank cartridges. No harm must come to the ministers and the woman's battalion." A turmoil ensues. The national devisorist Mensheviks and the right Social Revolutionaries, sixty delegates altogether, go out. "To die with the Provisional Government." They don't get far; they straggling cortege found the streets barred by the Red Guard and they dispersed. Late in the night the Left Social Revolutionaries decided to follow the Bolsheviks and remain in the Congress.

Lenin did not mount the rostrum until the following day when the decrees on land, peace, and workers' control of production were voted. His appearance was the signal for a tremendous acclamation. He waited calmly for it to end, looking out over the victorious crowd. Then he said quite simply, without any gesture, his two hands resting on the pulpit, his shoulders slightly inclined forward toward the crowd: "Now we shall construct the socialist society."

do McNutt, national chairman of the American Youth Congress, representing more than 2,000,000 organized youth, called upon the youth of America to "prepare for war by marching for peace."

If the A. Y. C. wants to avoid such misleading appearance we would suggest that it curb the public statements of its overzealous national chairman who deals out their "2,000,000 organized youth" with such a free hand.

We have received another letter, a press release from the Knitgoods Joint Council:

"For immediate release. The following letter was sent by the Joint Council of Knitgoods Unions to the People's March for Peace Committee protesting the unauthorized use of the names of their affiliated locals, 155 and 2085 United Textile Workers of America, as endorsers of the People's March for Peace Committee:

"Dear Sir:

"We are in receipt of your communication with reference to the People's March for Peace Parade to be held next Saturday, October 26, and note that two of our affiliated locals, 155 and 2085, United Textile Workers, are listed as endorsers of your organization.

"While our organization is opposed to war and is at all times ready to take action in support of peace, we cannot permit the names of our affiliated locals to be used as endorsers of an organization about which we know nothing and of a parade in the arrangement of which we have not even been asked to participate.

"We want to protest this unauthorized use of the names of our locals. We believe that such methods of obtaining endorsers set against attempts of sincere labor organizations to organize movements for peace. . . .

and the garrison was that they were "isolated" from those classes from whom they intended to take the power!

But was it really possible to rely upon the sympathy and support of the dark masses in the provinces and at the front? "Their Bolshevism," wrote Sukhanov scornfully, "was nothing but hatred for the coalition and longing for land and peace." As though that were little! Hatred for the coalition meant a desire to take the power from the bourgeoisie. Longing for land and peace was the colossal program which the peasant and soldier intended to carry out under the leadership of the workers. The insignificance of the democrats, even the most leftward, resulted from this very distrust—the distrust of "educated" sceptics—in those dark masses who grasp a phenomenon wholesale not bothering about details and nuances. This intellectual, pseudo-aristocratic, squeamish attitude toward the people was foreign to Bolshevism, hostile to its very nature. The Bolsheviks were not ill-humored, literary friends of the masses, not pedants. They were not afraid of those backward strata now for the first time lifting themselves out of the dregs. The Bolsheviks took the people as preceding history had created them, and as they were called to achieve the revolution. The Bolsheviks saw it as their mission to stand at the head of that people. Those against the insurrection were "everybody"—except the Bolsheviks. But the Bolsheviks were the people.

The Significance of the October Revolution for the Orient

By LO SEN

Few were the countries under imperialist domination which failed in the post-war years to react to the revolutionary stimulus which radiated from proletarian Russia. The war had strained the imperialist world until it broke at its "weakest link." This breach once made, the tide of revolt rose in the whole colonial and semi-colonial world. The October Revolution led not only to convulsions in Europe but directly opened the path to national revolutionary struggle in Turkey, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, Afghanistan, India, Indonesia, Indochina, Korea and China.

It was in China that this ferment developed to its greatest dimensions. China was in many ways—and still is—the key to the national emancipation movements throughout the vast domains of imperialism. Upon the outcome of the struggle there depended in large measure the correlation of class forces not only in the colonial world but between the struggling Soviet state and its enemies in capitalist Europe.

Reaction in Russia—Revolution in China

The revolutionary wave in Europe was already declining; the Soviet state, isolated and embattled, had been compelled to retreat to the New Economic Policy, when the wave of struggle began to rise high in China. The Chinese Revolution threatened imperialism with a new, and perhaps this time mortal blow. Victory for the revolution in China could have broken down the isolation of the Soviet state. Events instead harshly decided that the disastrous defeat of the Chinese Revolution should itself become one of the most ghastly consequences of proletarian Russia's isolation within a rim of hostile, capitalist states.

The bureaucratic stratum which had begun to solidify on the outer crust of the newly-formed Soviet state took Russia's national isolation as its starting point. To justify itself it erected the theory of socialism in one country, the well-spring of Stalinism. In this culture the germs of opportunism thrived and waxed strong. The Soviet bureaucracy turned to the East not to help apply there the lessons of the Bolshevik victory but to seek allies in the national bourgeoisies of the Eastern countries. Toward this end it draped the mantle of Lenin around the death's head of Menshevism and made it large enough to provide shelter for the national bourgeoisie of China. From this source flowed the policies which led to the ghastly tragedy which in 1927 plunged China into the maw of reaction.

It was China's tragedy to receive the lessons and experiences of the October Revolution refracted through the dirty lenses of Stalinism. For these "lessons" the Chinese masses were forced to pay a frightful price. Today an understanding of the real relationship between the October and China's revolutionary future has to be restored. A re-evaluation of the historical and theoretical lessons to be drawn from that relationship is imperative if the red day of revolution is ever again to dawn for China.

The Bond Binding both Revolutions

Between the Chinese and Russian revolutions there is an organic bond, welded by the past and linked to a common future. The fate of the two countries is joined, in the first place, by a contiguous frontier which crosses Asia for a distance of almost 6,000 miles. There is, moreover, no real dividing line, either in the geographical or in the ethnic sense. The two countries and the two groups of peoples do not clash at a barrier, but tend gradually to merge, the one into the other.

Great similarities exist in the social composition of the two countries. In both there are a large number of races and nationalities with specific characteristics and cultures. In both the agrarian population overwhelmingly predominates and the proletariat is a small but decisive minority. Like Tsarist Russia, China is a backward nation in which the beginnings of capitalism are entwined with feudal forms of exploitation which hold the peasantry as a whole in their grip. Whereas in Russia the autocracy acted as a break on the growth of productive forces and perpetuated the barbarism of the past, in China imperialism in a far more drastic manner paralyzed the country's social and economic growth. The backwardness in economy and social organization condemned the masses of both countries to conditions of helotry supported by the blackest of superstition, ignorance and the burden of tradition centuries old.

In Russia the comparatively small and youthful proletariat smashed the shackles of the old society and established its own class dictatorship. With state power in its hands it unleashed mighty creative energies which opened the way for the industrialization and modernization of the country. It elevated the cultural level of millions of people thus lifted from the dreary darkness to a new life illuminated by science and by education. China's victory still lies ahead, but in the experience of the Russian working class there are lessons of precious and vital significance without an understanding of which the Chinese proletariat will be unable, in its turn, to fulfill its historic mission.

Permanent Revolution—1905 Lesson

Both the events and the governing ideology of the Russian revolution at its various stages exercised a direct influence upon the development of the Chinese revolution. Russia's 1905 was one of the world factors which directly contributed to the explosion in China in 1911 which toppled the Dragon Throne of the Chings. From the 1905 experience Lenin and Trotsky had already arrived at the conclusion that the task of realizing the bourgeois democratic revolutions in the backward countries—and carrying them through to their end—devolved in the present epoch of world capitalism not upon the bourgeoisie but upon the proletariat allied with and leading the peasantry.

This tremendous concept, the very essence of Leninism and of the theory of the permanent revolution, possessed for China and for Russia, a decisive significance. By 1911 the productive forces of China had not reached the point where it was possible for this idea to find expression in the actual relationship of class forces. Indeed, the state of productive forces was such that neither the bourgeoisie, stifled by imperialism, nor the proletariat, scarcely yet born, were in a position to replace the Manchu Dynasty by any new, unified class rule. Power, therefore, fell to the militarists whose warring satrapies became masks for the interplay of imperialist antagonisms in China itself.

But the 1911 revolution had nevertheless ushered in a new, transitional epoch involving not the rise of a new dynasty but the transformation of the economy and class structure of the country and of the state superimposed upon it. The dismal failure of two attempts, in 1916 and 1918, to restore the monarchy, showed that China had rounded a decisive mile post in her history.

Proletariat Emerges in China

In the war years great changes took place. The imperialist grip, tighter after 1911, relaxed. Productive forces leaped spectacularly forward. A modern Chinese proletariat came into being, seemingly overnight. But the whole historical development of the Chinese bourgeoisie condemned it, even in the period of its relative growth, to the position of a vassal dependent upon imperialism. This meant that the task of ultimately emancipating China would fall to the proletariat as part of the whole task of liberating Chinese society from the chains of its past and leading it to its new place in a new, socialist world. In 1917, in the struggle against Tsarism, the Russian proletariat showed exactly how this could be done. The Bolsheviks, under Lenin and Trotsky, translated daring theory into dazzling reality. October blazed the way for China and all the "backward" countries of the world.

The validity for China of the underlying strategic-theoretical concepts of the October Revolution was not immediately perceived. But the October itself, far more immediately and directly than in 1905, became a mighty stimulus to a new revolutionary upheaval in China. The war, the growth of productive forces expressed in the creation of modern industry, had set all classes in motion in China and out of this movement a social, literary and cultural renaissance emerged as the herald of the second Chinese revolution. When the intellectuals and then the workers began to intervene in the march of events and to seek to mold them in their own interests as they saw them, it was under the direct impetus and influence of the October Revolution. Even the Chinese bourgeoisie, its hopes for the independent development of capitalist economy revived and fluttering, tried to give its own class aspirations a Communist coloration—as Lenin foresaw it would—and its most conscious representatives sought the prestige of Russia's support and put themselves at the head of the spontaneously growing movement of the workers and peasants.

Lenin's Teachings

Here the fundamental requirement of the Chinese proletariat was a party of its own, deeply impregnated with the experience and fundamental strategy of the October Revolution. Such were the parties for the Eastern countries envisaged by Lenin at the Second Congress of the Comintern in 1920. At that Congress Lenin had given the strategic lead to the East, particularly to China where the development of class forces already provided the most fertile ground for the planting of the Bolshevik seed. Imperialist domination, he pointed out, stifled the forces of production and therefore the proletariat had to take the lead in the struggle against it—"but from this it does not follow at all that the leadership of the revolution will have to be surrendered to the bourgeois democrats." To the contrary, the Communists must prevent the bourgeoisie from securing control of the national movement. They must develop the class consciousness of the masses, lead them to the organization of soviets and with the help of the proletariat of the advanced countries, to Communism. In this process the Communists would find it "useful" and even necessary to ally themselves to the national revolutionary movements, "not however amalgamating with them, preserving the independent character of the proletarian movement, even though it is still in its embryonic form." They must put the masses on guard against the attempt to cloak a bourgeois democratic movement in a Communist garb.

Execution of workers outside a Hankow factory by a Kuomintang officer.

But Menshevism Leads in China

These were the clear and unequivocal terms in which Lenin laid down for the East the essential lessons of the October Revolution. But by the time the workers of the East, particularly of China, were ready to absorb and apply these ideas, Lenin was gone. The thoroughly reactionary concept of socialism in one country had replaced Leninist internationalism. A bureaucracy which hoped for nothing better than a Chinese Kemal Pasha had replaced the leaders who looked not for nationalist but for class allies. A mechanical, non-dialectic theory of stages replaced the historical dynamics embodied in the theory of the permanent revolution. The Menshevik ideas, which might have wrecked the Russian revolution had it not been for Lenin were dragged out of the past by the same men who had defended those ideas against Lenin in 1917, the Stalins, the Bukharins, the Martinovs. This Menshevik baggage was labelled with Lenin's discarded slogan of the democratic dictatorship, decked out with devious, tortuous interpretations which outraged Lenin's very memory. Thus fortified, and backed by the prestige of the whole Russian proletariat, the Borodins and the Votinskys came to China to teach the Chinese workers that the "national" struggle for liberation preceded the class struggle of the working masses against their own exploiters.

This was the monstrous thing, that from the land of the October came men who taught that imperialism had the effect of welding into a common front of struggle against it all the classes of Chinese society except the old feudal militarists. From this to the "bloc of four classes," the stifling of the mass movement wherever it menaced bourgeois interests and therefore the "national united front," the recognition of and subordination to bourgeois leadership through the Kuomintang, from all this to the shattering catastrophes of Canton, Shanghai, Wuhan, Changsha it was but a step—a step taken over the dead bodies of the flower of the Chinese proletariat and peasantry.

Executioners in Russia and Orient

When against this betrayal Leon Trotsky raised the voice of the Opposition, the voice of Marx, of Lenin, of the October, he and his adherents were driven from the party by the club of the apparatus, driven into prison, into graves or into exile. How bitter it is to think that while in China workers, peasants and intellectuals, victims of the Stalinist betrayal, went down under the lash of the terror wielded by Stalin's great and good allies yesterday, the Chiang Kai-Sheks, the Wang Ching-wei, the Feng Yuxiang; in Russia Stalin used the apparatus of the Soviet state to whip the Leninists who had tried to save the Chinese workers from the Cavaignacs and Gallifets into whose hands he, Stalin, had delivered them!

The course of the post-revolutionary period, the inevitable lurch to insane adventurism, from August, 1927, to the end of 1930, and the subsequent attempt to cloak an insurgent peasant movement with a proletarian garb, only led to new disasters, to new blind alleys. It did not lead to the Chinese October. Instead it has only fed the finest fighters of the revolution into the maw of Kuomintang reaction. It only facilitated the Kuomintang's betrayal to imperialism and its destruction of the very lifeblood of the Chinese people.

For an end to this tragedy, too long, too costly! Like everywhere else Stalinism in China has left only smoking ruins and the bodies of heroic dead in its wake. Its dead hand must be torn away from the throat of the world proletariat. In China as elsewhere we must build a new revolutionary party, the party of the Fourth International, a party which will know how to face the problems of the Chinese revolution with a real understanding of the significance, for China, of Russia's October.

Comrade Candide and Comrade Browder ... A Tragi-Comedy

Daily. For example, there's the appeal to the patriotic traditions of the American people. At Cleveland, you quoted from the 'new fascist program for the S. P.,' presented by Joseph Sharts, which read: 'These great traditions cluster around the Stars and Stripes and make it worthy to be fought for, regardless of the capitalist connections in recent years. Not by the pacifist but by the patriotic approach lies our path to power and freedom.' And then you said: 'It would be difficult to improve on Mr. Sharts by quoting directly from Hitler.' (p. 78.) How can we imitate the fascists by such appeals to patriotism?

Browder: "That is the American approach to the problem of Bolshevizing the masses."

Candide: "The American approach! Why, that was the slogan of Budenz, one of those left social-fascists whom you called 'the most dangerous enemies of the workers' struggles today.'" (p. 76.)

Browder: "Not so loud, comrade. Budenz is in the next room."

Candide: "There are lots of other things in the Daily Worker I don't understand. The editorials call upon the Roosevelt government and the League of Nations to invoke sanctions against Fascist Italy. You taught us that the Roosevelt administration is 'the beginning of the introduction of fascism.' . . . The New Deal was in political essence and direction the same as Hitler's program." (p. 20-21.) How can we, a working class party, call upon one semi-fascist government to stop another Fascist state from conducting an imperialist war? Aren't we playing the game of the imperialists, instead of pursuing an independent working class policy?"

Browder: "We're utilizing the contradictions between the imperialist powers, just as the Soviet Union is doing in the League of Nations."

Candide: "I can understand why the Soviet state must try to utilize these contradictions in diplomatic maneuvers with the imperialist powers, but how can the Communist left parties ask the cooperation of their own ruling class to fight another? How does such class-collaboration look to the Italian workers?"

Browder: "Would you have us isolate ourselves from the organized workers by opposing sanctions, which is the only way to avert war and oppose Fascism? Why, only the counter-revolutionary Trotskyites are against sanctions. We've won over all the trade unions, almost all the Socialist parties to our policy."

Candide: "That's just the point. You said that both the A. F. of L. and the company unions were governmental agencies of the capitalist class, just as the Fascists and social-fascists were the twin political agencies of the capitalist class. (p. 29-30.) If the A. F. of L. is a semi-fascist agency of the Roosevelt regime, more dangerous than the company unions, then it naturally follows that its leaders would sanction the imperialist policy of the American government."

Browder: "You're living in the past, comrade. A new progressive movement has sprung up in the A. F. of L. headed by such people as John L. Lewis, Francis Gorman and Sidney Hillman, and that's why we're advising all our members to join it."

Candide: "Lewis heading a progressive movement? Why you coupled him with Green in 1934. And you're liquidating all the T.U.U.L. unions? Why I remember how my heart beat with pride as I listened to you describe the amazing progress made by the revolutionary trade unions of the T.U.U.L., 'by developing the whole mass movement of resistance to the NRA and the whole capitalist offensive, in the development of the strike movements,' (p. 36) while the Trotskyites and Musteltes sold out the workers in Minneapolis and Toledo. I remember that slogan you gave us: 'to unite the independent unions with the revolutionary unions into a single Independent Federation of Labor.'" (p. 38)

At this point Candide broke into hysterics and fell to the floor in a dead faint. We are informed that he has remained unconscious and delirious ever since. In that unfortunate condition, we must regretfully leave him.

Chapter III

PLAUSIBLE as it seems, we cannot, of course, vouch for complete authenticity of the above story. We can, however, guarantee the authenticity of the quotations from Browder. They will be found in the "Report of the Central Committee of the Communist Party to the 8th Convention, delivered by Earl Browder," published by the Worker's Library of New York, 1934. We recommend it for entertainment and meditation these sombre days.

Candide, the honest Stalinist worker, was completely bewildered by the contradictory lines of the Communist Party, and could find no explanation for them. Bewildered and confused by his leaders, who tell him one thing today and its opposite tomorrow, he relapsed into unconsciousness. Politically conscious workers, however, will want to know why the Communist Party has followed such completely contradictory policies in the past period.

To us, the reasons for the somersaults of the Stalinists are clear. It would be pointless to look for them in Browder's psychology or American conditions. These have nothing to do with the case. Browder, the leader of the C.P.U.S.A., is a political master-mind in only one sense: he reflects what goes on in the mind of his master, Stalin, who in turn translates into political terms the needs of the Soviet bureaucracy. We must, therefore, look abroad to the Soviet Union and the international scene to understand what has allied the Com-intern in the past thirteen years, years of great opportunities and tremendous defeats for the revolutionary working class.

As we view the history of the Third International, it has passed through four phases.

1. The heroic period from the Bolshevik revolution in October, 1917 to the death of Lenin in 1924. In these years the Third International was built; its revolutionary program formulated in the first four Congresses; the task of winning over the working class of the world to revolutionary struggle under the banner of Marx and Lenin begun. However, the destruction of the flower of the Russian proletariat in the civil wars, then the economic collapse which necessitated the introduction of the New Economic Policy in 1921 produced a widespread passivity in the exhausted Russian working class. Reflecting this passivity, the Soviet bureaucracy, whose control was centralized in Stalin's hands, developed and strengthened its grip upon the Communist party and the state apparatus during this period—and turned its face away from the international revolution.

The post-war tidal wave of revolution led by the Third International was broken by the retreat of the Communist leaders in Germany in the face of a revolutionary situation in October 1923 (this was under Stalin's orders), which was preceded by the defeat of the Bulgarian insurrection in 1923 and followed by the crushing of the Revolt in Estonia. The breaking of the revolutionary wave in Germany and elsewhere paved the way for the reorganization and strengthening of European capitalism with the aid of American capital.

2. The second period. The revolutionary ebb and the temporary stabilization of European capitalism gave further impetus to pessimism and passivity regarding the prospects of world revolution in the Soviet bureaucracy, which had usurped control of the Russian Communist Party and the Comintern. Turning their backs upon the international scene, the leaders of the bureaucracy, Stalin, developed the theory of "socialism in one country" as a justification for their conservative and narrowly nationalistic viewpoint. According to this theory, a classless socialist society can be built up in one single country alone, the Soviet Union, even if the proletariat in the more advanced countries fail to conquer the beginning of the degeneration of the parties of revolution in their respective countries to auxiliary policy of the conservative foreign policy of the Soviet bureaucracy. From this fatal theory flows all the blunders, defeats, and catastrophes which the working class has suffered since 1923.

During this second period right-opportunistic policies were substituted all along the line for revolutionary policies. Within the Soviet Union, the bureaucracy leaned upon the Nepmen and the Kulak for support in its struggle against the Bolshevik-Leninists; and opposed planned economy, industrialization, and collectivization demanded by the Left Opposition in favor of a course of concessions to Nepmen and Kulaks. In the sphere of foreign policy the Stalinists relied upon the reformist trade union bureaucracy of England through the Anglo-Russian Committee to lead the struggle against imperialist war and for the defense of the Soviet Union; upon Chiang Kai-shek and the Kou-Min-Tang in the Chinese revolution; and upon various unreliable peasant leaders throughout the world. The Communist parties were subordinated to these alliances with alien class elements. The balance-sheet included the betrayal of the English General Strike and the impotence of the British Communist Party; the tragic betrayal of the Chinese revolution; the weakening of the Communist parties and the revolutionary movement throughout the world. The essence of this course was to preserve the status-quo, while socialism was being built in the Soviet Union.

3. The Third Period.

When this policy culminated in "the bloodless Kulak uprising of 1928," the Stalinists suddenly veered around and transformed all their policies into their opposites. Instead of opposition to planned economy came the first and second Five Year plans with their mad gallop toward industrialization, regardless of costs and consequences, together with the campaign for complete collectivization and liquidation of the kulak. These domestic policies were complemented by the social-fascist, dual red trade union, united front from below policies. It was in this so-called "third period" that Candide received his political education, or rather, miseducation. So different in its form from the second period, the third period continued the same objective: preservation of the status quo—even if the cost involved was to sacrifice the German revolution to maintain the status quo.

4. The Fourth Period.

The adventurous, ultra-leftist line of the third period was abruptly terminated by Hitler's conquest of power as a direct consequence of the fatal policies pursued by the Communist Party of Germany. Panic-stricken at the spectacle of the Fascist monster they had helped create, the Stalinists have thrown away all the theoretical baggage of the third period in the wild flight to the right, which is still under way. This is a return to the fundamental course of the Stalinist bureaucracy, the right opportunist course of 1923-1928, on a wider scale and with more profound consequences. Again, its objective is: the status quo.

Today the Stalinists are again seeking protection in the arms of the social democratic leaders and the reformist trade union bureaucracy, as well as imperialist nations such as France. The sole task of the Stalinists outside the Soviet Union is to preserve the status quo by means of the Soviet diplomacy of Litvinov or the subsidiary means of the Communist parties. The last remnants of revolutionary working class policy has been abandoned in favor of popular fronts. The united fronts between the Socialist and Communist parties are united fronts of inaction, instead of struggle. The recent Seventh Congress of the Comintern set its seal of approval upon this course. The task of the Third International, which was organized by Lenin and Trotsky to conquer the world for socialism, has been reduced to the pitiful task of "defending the remnants of bourgeois democracy." Since the Stalin-Laval pact, the French Communist Party calls upon the French working class to support its own capitalist government in case of war against Fascist Germany, thus pitting one section of the working class against another, and betraying them both. This is a repetition on a grander scale of the social-patriotic betrayal of the Second International in 1914-1918.

Since 1923 the opportunist leadership of the Comintern had brought nothing but defeat after defeat upon the working class. Although the leaders of the various parties of the Third International still drape themselves in the banner of Lenin, they have violated every revolutionary principle he stood for. The Third International is no longer a revolutionary organization, no longer a progressive force in the labor movement.

The proletarian revolutionists of the world are gathering today under the new banner of the Fourth International. The struggle for the Fourth International is the struggle for the ideas of Marx and Lenin; for the overthrow of capitalism; for a workers' world. Rally to the support of the Workers Party, which has unfurled the banner of the Fourth International in the United States!

WHO WILL DISARM THE FASCISTS?

Nothing paralyzes the revolutionary activity of the advanced workers in any country so much as sabotage and treachery from within its own ranks. French social democracy and Stalinism are both engaged in creating and fostering the most harmful illusions in the ranks of the French proletariat. The success of their treachery can lead only to the victory of fascism. On a par with the social patriotic support of French militarism and imperialism, under the guise of "defense of the Soviet Union," by the support of the Franco-Soviet military alliance, is the sowing of the illusion by the "Popular Front" that the capitalist government can be made to disarm the fascist bands hired by finance capital. As a quid pro quo for their support of a "democratic" government, the Stalinists have been demanding that the government agree to disarm the fascists. Laval now "yields" to this so-called pressure from the "left" (as the capitalist press puts it) and announces that the Mobile Guards or special police are to be reinforced and given the immediate task of disarming the Croix de Feu and other private armies. No doubt the cretins who trust in the imperialist government which is ceaselessly preparing for war, to preserve peace, will hail this "decision" of Laval as a victory. In reality the workers should be aroused to the fraud that will be perpetrated by Laval to assist the fascists and strike a blow at the revolutionary vanguard of the proletariat. For under his fake promise, Laval will proceed to take strong measures against the armed workers, against the incipient workers' militia organized to defend the proletariat from fascist attack. The Laval government corresponds in its functions with that of Giolitto-Bonomi in Italy and Brüning-Schleicher-von Papen in Germany. It is the transition form between democracy and fascism. In this transition the fascist bands are created by finance capital and aided and strengthened by the support of the police and the army. With the direct connivance of leaders in the "democratic" government, of course.

THE POLICY OF LAVAL

Laval was placed in power by the financial oligarchy in complete control of the Bank of France. This capstone of French imperialism ousted Flaudin when he refused to obey the dictates of the bankers—the Rothschild interests, the de Wendels, etc.—in the matter of devaluation. Laval was placed in power because he was the willing tool of the big bankers in the carrying out of an economic policy which—by decree—unloads the entire crisis on the backs of the workers, the small functionaries and the exploited peasants. The same de Wendel who heads the armaments trust and heavy industry (Comité des Forges), who directly finances de la Roche, the world-be Hitler of France, entrusted the reins of the bourgeois government to Laval. Will any worker take seriously the word of Laval that he will act to disarm the bands created and supported by the same master whose orders are law to Laval—and are in actuality translated into laws by decree?

But perhaps it is not Laval who will really disarm the fascists, but a better friend of the workers, Herriot for example. Or better still one who advocates the People's Front like Daladier. The Stalinists, for the sake of Soviet diplomacy, perverted the united front with the French Socialists into a cross form of class collaboration for the preservation of bourgeois democracy. The united front became the social-patriotic People's Front with the inclusion of the directly bourgeois Radical Socialist Party of Herriot and Daladier. We are witnessing the ripening of the fruit of this People's Front. The Stalinists and Socialists make all possible concessions to the petty bourgeois Radicals, including a complete reliance on parliamentarism. The Radical Socialists, in turn, give support to the direct representatives of big business, to Laval. Herriot prevented a split in the Radical Socialist congress that has just been concluded over the question of supporting the government by decree of Laval. Daladier conducted an apparent fight for the People's Front against such support but was "persuaded" to yield to the patriotic Herriot. Daladier does not want to split his party. Thus the entire course of the Stalinists is clearly revealed as playing into the hands of the imperialists. The further end of the chain of class collaboration in which the working class links are forged by the Socialist and Stalinist betrayers, rests firmly in the grip of the de Wendels.

The workers must learn that this is the inevitable result of a course of class collaboration, that they remain completely at the mercy of the big bankers. Only by pursuing a clear-cut revolutionary policy of the working class can the workers attain their own ends. Not the direct representatives of the bourgeoisie, but the armed forces of the workers can disarm the fascists. The answer to Laval's fraud must be the more rapid arming of the workers and the building of the workers' militia.

By L. TROTSKY

We have a remarkable document in the letter of comrade Tarov, one of the Soviet Bolshevik-Leninists, a mechanic who of necessity finds himself today outside the Soviet Union. Early in 1923, Tarov was arrested as a "left Oppositionist"; he spent three years in exile, and sat four years in prison, in harsh solitary confinement, and then, once again, he spent several months in exile. What crimes did Tarov commit against the Revolution?

It appears that as early as 1923, he was of the opinion that the October revolution had created the possibilities for industrialization, immeasurably more rapid than was the case with capitalist countries. Together with other Tarovs he raised the alarm against the policy of staking everything upon the kulak which would lead to a crisis for the entire Soviet system. He demanded that efforts be focussed upon the peasant poor and the systematic switching of rural economy on to the rails of collectivization. Such were his chief crimes for the period of 1923-1926. He was more penetrating and far-sighted than the ruling upper crust. In any case, such were the crimes of the tendency for which Tarov bore the responsibility. In 1926, all the Tarovs demanded that the Soviet trade unions bring to an end, the political friendship with the General Council of British Trade Unions that was betraying the miners' strike, together with the General Strike; it was precisely for this service that Citrine, the head of the General Council, the former ally of Stalin and Tomsky, was knighted by His Royal Majesty during the Jubilee celebrations. Together with other Leninists, Tarov protested in 1926 against the Stalinist theory of a "democratic workers' and peasants' state"—a theory which impelled the Polish Communist party to support Pilsudski's coup. But even this did not exhaust the list of Tarov's crimes. As an internationalist, he was vitally interested in the fate of the Chinese revolution. He considered those Kremlin decisions criminal which compelled the young and heroic Communist party of China to enter into the Kowintang and to submit to its discipline; in addition to which, the Kowintang itself, a purely bourgeois party, was accepted into the Communist International, as a "sympathetic" organization. The time came when Stalin, Molotov and Bukharin, sent a telegram from Moscow, calling upon Chinese Communists to put down the agrarian movement of the peasants, so as not to "scare away" Chiang Kai Shek and his officers. Tarov, together with other disciples of Lenin, considered such a policy to be a betrayal of the revolution.

Leon Trotsky Analyses the Revelations of the Bolshevik Tarov

The Tarovs had several other similar crimes to their credit: From 1923 on, they demanded that work proceed on the drafting of the Five Year Plan; and when, in 1927, the draft of the first Five Year Plan was finally outlined, all the Tarovs argued that the annual increase in industry should be set not at 5-9 percent, as was done by the Political Bureau, but two or three times greater. True, this was all soon confirmed. But since the Tarovs by virtue of their foresight had exposed the backwardness of the ruling upper crust, they were therefore guilty of undermining the revolution (i.e. the prestige of the bureaucracy). The Tarovs paid a great deal of attention to the working class youth. In their opinion the youth had to be given an opportunity to do some independent thinking, to study, make mistakes, and learn to stand on its own feet. They protested against the fact that revolutionary leadership had been replaced by a regime of bulldozing corporals. They forecasted that this barrack-room strangulation of the youth must lead to demoralization and to the growth of outright hooligan and reactionary moods in its midst. These warnings were branded as an attempt to set the young generation against the old, as mutiny against the "Old Guard"—the very same "Old Guard" which has been culminated, smashed and committed to jails, or demoralized by Stalin with the aid of his Praetorians.

Such are Tarov's crimes. To this we must add that the Bolshevik-Leninists, including Tarov, never attempted to impose their ideas by force. They did not call for an uprising against the bureaucracy. For a period of almost ten years they sought and hoped to convince the party. They fought primarily for their right to bring their criticism and their proposals before the party. But the bureaucracy which had raised itself to autocratic rule upon the defeats of the world proletariat, counterposed to the Leninist Opposition not the force of argument, but the armed detachments of the G.P.U. Tarov happened to be among several thousand who were arrested during the Thermidorian annihilation of the Opposition in 1928. Thereafter he spent more than three years in exile, and about four years in jail. From his present brief story the reader is able to acquaint himself with the conditions that prevail in these jails: abuse, corporal punishment, the 14-day torture of a hunger strike, and in answer to it, forced feeding and new abuse. All this because the Bolshevik-Leninists posed the problem of collectivization before Stalin did, because they issued a timely warning against the consequences of the perdition alliance with Chiang Kai Shek and the future Sir Walter Citrine. . . .

Tarov's Mistake

But then came a new thunderclap from the blue: Hitler came to power in Germany. The policy of the Communist International had cleared the road for him. When Hitler was hoisting himself into the saddle, his stirrup was held by none other than Stalin. All the floods of eloquence poured forth by the Seventh Congress will not wash away from the ennobled Leaders in the biots of this historic crime. All the more rabid became the hatred of the Stalinist clique for all those who had foreseen and forewarned in time. The captive Leninists had to pay with their ribs for the deadly policy which combined ignorance with perfidy: it is precisely this need of swindlers ready for anything.

Thus, Tarov's attempt to return to the ranks of the official "party" met with complete failure. Tarov was left with no recourse other than to flee from the Soviet Union. His experience, for which he paid so dearly, is an invaluable lesson both for the Soviet and the world proletariat. The Open Letter issued by the organizations standing under the banner of the Fourth International finds a new and a clear confirmation in the Tarov case. The Open Letter states, "By means of persecutions, frauds, amalgams and bloody repressions the ruling clique seeks to nip in the bud every movement of Marxist thought. No where in the world is genuine Leninism so bestially hounded as in the U.S.S.R." These lines, superficially considered, appear exaggerated: Isn't Leninism being ruthlessly hounded in Italy and Germany? As a matter of fact there is no exaggeration in the Open Letter. In Fascist countries the Leninists are subjected to persecution along with

French Stalinists Give the Fascists A Lesson on the True Patriotic Spirit

Vaillant-Couturier, No. 1 French Stalinist publicist and blowhard, has discovered exactly what's wrong with the French Fascists. The Fascists, it seems, have been smart enough to oppose the policy of sanctions, to denounce it as a war policy, and thereby distinguish themselves before the masses from the Left parties which support sanctions, and therefore imperialism, war, to the very hilt.

"The idea," writes the vaillant Vaillant, "that the League of Nations can really prevent the war in Abyssinia exasperates the French Fascists. These unfortunates haven't the national sense to understand that if Mussolini is left free today to commit aggression against a member of the League of Nations on the pretext that it is weak, that would be to give full liberty to Hitler to set fire to Europe tomorrow. It is really sad to see Frenchmen blinded to such a point by party spirit, that they are ready to sacrifice the vital interests of the French people to the prestige of the black shirts of Mussolini." (L'Humanité, October 2.)

The French Stalinists are sad unto tears to think that these "unfortunate" Fascists just don't understand the "national" and "vital" interests of the "French people." Is there no bottom to the mire of betrayal in which these people now wallow? Another choice item from France to add to disgusting saga of Stalinist social-patriotism. The French Ministry of the Interior recently issued a ban on the display of foreign flags on public buildings except for some special occasion. L'Humanité jumps into the breach: "It seems that this has reference to the Socialist and Communist mayoralities and the red flag. This is hardly right."

"First of all because none of these mayoralities have played the red flag on their roofs other than morally. . . . Further, because the Communists and the Socialists were the first, on July 14, to associate the red flag to the tricolor."

"Finally, because it will be henceforth understood that the mayoralities will be able to put up outside their buildings, alongside the tricolor, the Soviet flag with its special insignia on such occasions, for example, as the anniversary of the pact of mutual assistance or May First, the legal holiday of the U.S.S.R." (L'Humanité, Oct. 2.)

combination that provides the essence of Stalinism.

Yet, Tarov, alarmed by the triumph of National Socialism, turned to the authorities in Moscow with the following proposal: he pledges to give up Oppositionist activity, in return for which, he, Tarov, is to be given the right to return to the ranks of the party, as a disciplined soldier, and there carry on the struggle against the Fascist danger. It is not difficult to explain the psychological causes for Tarov's step. There is no position more torturous for a revolutionist than to be bound hand and foot while the imperialist reaction is capturing one proletarian trench after another. But Tarov's political proposal was doubly unrealistic. In the first place, to support Stalin's struggle against Fascism unconditionally is, in the last analysis, to help Fascism—this has been irrefutably proved by the entire history of the last 12 years; in the second place, Tarov's proposal was not acceptable, and could not have been accepted by the bureaucracy. Even a single Leninist unselfishly and courageously fulfilling the tasks assigned him, in full view, without recanting publicly and without spitting upon the best traditions of Bolshevism would be a silent refutation of the legend entitled "Trotskyism as the vanguard of the bourgeois counter-revolution."

This assinine legend wobbles on its mythical underpinnings, and has to be propped up daily. Currently, Tarov's example, if he were successful, would inevitably arouse emulation. This could not be allowed. It is impermissible to allow bold men to return to the party who surrender only the public expression of their views—no, they must renounce their ideas, their right to think altogether. They must split upon views which have been confirmed by the entire course of events.

Signpost of Stalinist Corruption

Nothing so characterizes the Stalinist regime, its internal corruption and fraud, as its utter inability to assimilate a sincere revolutionist ready to serve obediently, but who refuses to lie. No! Stalin needs apostates, believing renegades, people who are shamelessly ready to call black white, who beat their hollow breasts, pathetically, while their minds are actually occupied with pie-cakes, automobiles and summer resorts. The party and the state apparatus is overrun with such swindlers, double-dealers, and corrupt cynics. They are unreliable but indispensable: bureaucratic abjection which has come into an irreconcilable contradiction with economic and cultural requirements of the workers' state is in acute other opponents of the regime. Hitler, as is well known, vented his greatest malice upon his oppositionist brothers-in-arms in the party, the "left wing," which reminded him of his own yesterday. The Stalinist bureaucracy vents the same hostile cruelty upon the Bolshevik-Leninists, the genuine revolutionists, who embody the traditions of the party and of the October revolution.

The political conclusions to be drawn from the case of comrade Tarov are quite evident. It would be sheer insanity to think of "reforming" and "regenerating" the C.P.S.U. today. A bureaucratic machine which serves primarily the purpose of keeping the proletariat in a vise cannot possibly be made to serve the interests of the proletariat. Revolutionary terror, which during the heroic period of the revolution served as a weapon in the hands of the awakened masses against the oppressors, and as a direct safeguard of the rule of the proletariat, has been completely supplanted by the cold blooded and venomous terror of the bureaucracy which fights like a mad beast for its posts and sinecures, for its uncontrolled and autocratic rule—against the proletarian vanguard. This is precisely why Stalinism is doomed!

Engels on Stalin

On February 20, 1889, Engels wrote Kautsky a truly remarkable letter—published only recently—on the class relations during the epoch of the Great French Revolution. Among other things, it states the following: "as regards terror, so long as it had any meaning, it was in its essence a war measure. The class, or a certain section of it, which was alone able to guarantee victory to the revolution, not only remained in power thanks to the terror . . . but also assured itself elbow-room, the freedom of movement, the possibility to concentrate forces at the decisive points, i.e. at the frontiers." But once the frontiers had been safeguarded thanks to military victories, and after the destruction of the frenzied Commune which had sought to carry liberty to other peoples on bayonets, terror outlived itself as a weapon of the revolution. Robespierre, it is true, was at the height of his power; but says Engels, "henceforth terror became a means of self-preservation for him, and thus it was reduced to an absurdity" (Engels' emphasis). These lines are remarkable for their simplicity and profundity. There is no need here to expatiate upon the distinction between the present and the past epoch: it is quite well known. Question Box

By A. WEAVER

Question: Why is it not correct for the Communist Party of Great Britain to support sanctions against Italy since a defeat of Italy will hasten the overthrow of Fascism?

Answer: To advocate that sanctions, applied by His Majesty's government in Imperialist interests, be given the support of the British workers means to advocate support by the latter of an Imperialist policy, and correspondingly, the renunciation of any attempt to struggle for the overthrow of English capitalism. If this policy is proposed for the purpose, pretended at least, of hastening the overthrow of Italian imperialism, then the advocates of such a policy are maintaining that between the two imperialisms, Italian fascism and British "democracy," the latter is the lesser evil.

The Italian chauvinist can, with equal justice, reply: "Italian, and not British imperialism, is the lesser evil since the latter exploits several hundreds of millions of people; Mussolini, less than a hundred million. The material conditions of British colonialism, e.g. India, is worse than that of the Italian masses under fascism. Victory in Ethiopia, followed by complete Italian control over the Mediterranean, Suez, etc., will smash the British empire, giving the British colonials a chance to assert their independence, and the revolution will be hastened in Great Britain. For revolutionary reasons, therefore, it is necessary to support the policy of Mussolini."

The reasoning can be carried to its logical conclusion: If, as a result of imperialist war, capitalism will be overthrown in those countries which are defeated, then it is necessary that the workers support imperialist war, and in each country conduct it as vigorously as possible so that the opposing capitalism will be all the more speedily destroyed.

Since the arguments are equally strong in all countries, acceptance of them by the workers internationally means the end of their struggle for the overthrow of their respective capitalisms. Who then will remain to overthrow the capitalists of the defeated countries?

What is false in the entire argument is the contention, a version of the "spontaneity" theory, that a victory by one Imperialist power over another necessarily means a victorious proletarian revolution in the nations controlled by the latter. A military defeat and the exhaustion of a country's economy through war weakens the grip of the exploiters, but, unless parties, free from the poison of chauvinism, and capable of leading the workers to victory, exist, these objective conditions can only result in increased misery for the toilers. This is borne out by the whole history of post-war Europe. Czarist Russia had the Bolshevik party of Lenin, and therefore a successful proletarian revolution, but it was one of the "victorious" allies. In the "vanquished" as well as some of the "victorious" countries, the class struggle, lacking the proper revolutionary leadership, led to fascism, e.g. Germany, Hungary, Italy.

A military defeat for Italy may mean the end of the Mussolini regime but this is not necessarily synonymous with a workers' victory. Those who draw an equation sign between the two, in the absence of a revolutionary party in Italy, are assuming that Italian capitalism cannot find new forms and methods to enslave the toilers; that the latter cannot sink to lower levels than fascism has already brought them, so that the revolution will come about automatically. There is nothing to justify such a conclusion: The standard of living of the Italian masses is the lowest in Europe but is not yet even the lowest in the world.

Because there is no revolutionary party today in Italy, the most pernicious idea that could be advanced is the concept that the Italian revolution can be hastened by eradicating the revolutionary activity of the workers outside of Italy, i.e., in the nations applying sanctions. It is precisely because the conditions of fascism have virtually stamped out revolutionary ideology from the minds of the Italian workers, that it is only a revolutionary shock from outside that country which can, in the immediate future, at least, again point out the way to them. Just as Marxism does not evolve out of the class struggle itself but is brought to the working class, so must it be brought to the Italian workers. Today the main stream of such knowledge lies outside of Italy.

Supporting the imperialists who are applying sanctions, therefore, is one of the surest methods of making it next to impossible for the Italian workers to arrive at Marxism, and in the final analysis of setting the world revolution back for decades. The surest way of aiding the Italian revolution is the Leninist way: The enemy is at home; turn the Imperialist war into civil war.

Why the National Government of Great Britain Is Prepared to Embark on a War with Italy

(Reprinted from the British "New Leader," organ of the Independent Labor Party)

The British Government claims to be opposing Italy because of love of the League Covenant and of the rights of small nations. No worker can believe this. The British Government showed no love for the Covenant when Japan defied it, and there is no government in the world which has more outraged the rights of small nations. The real motive of the National Government is to defend the interests of British capitalism and imperialism.

More than once we have pointed out in these columns the strategic importance of Abyssinia for British imperialism. The importance of Abyssinia from the point of view of the immediate interests of British capitalism is not so well known.

British Empire in Africa
Since the World War the British Empire in East and Central Africa has become a co-ordinated and connected whole. The inclusion of the German colonies made an "all-red" route from North to South of Africa. The British Empire now stretches from Cairo to the Cape.

This British Empire in Africa is pierced only by the independent state of Abyssinia, which is like an island in British territory. British imperialists are obviously not going to allow another capitalist power to take possession of that island!

How Capitalism Has Grown
But it is not merely a matter of the unity of the British Empire in Africa. It is also a matter of its value for British capitalists. It is doubtful whether any part of the British Empire has yielded to British capitalism such an increase of profits as British Africa since the World War.

We give some striking figures in proof of this. Take, first, the increase in the total trade of Africa (of which, of course, British capitalists control the major part). The following table indicates the enormous expansion of Africa as a source of profit-making:—

It is often not realized how important Africa is in the production of many of the most precious articles. Our next table shows African production compared with world production of four most valuable articles:

Article	Production—World	African
Gold (million ozs.)	19.5	11.0
Diamonds (mill. kar.)	7.2	7.2
Nitrates (1,000 tons)	10.0	5.2
Chrom ore (1,000 tons)	570.0	335.0

Increase of Gold from Africa
There has been a tremendous increase in gold production, as the following table shows:
Gold Export 1929 1933
Tanganyika 10,536 ozs. 32,518 ozs.
S.W. Africa 570 ozs. 919 ozs.
1931 1933
Uganda 71 ozs. 1,216 ozs.
Sierra Leone 8,650 ozs. 15,604 ozs.
The total exports of Kenya and Uganda have expanded from the annual average value of £1.17 million between 1910-14 to £4.32 million in 1931.

Threat to British Owners of Cotton Fields
The importance of Abyssinia to British capitalists because it contains the headwaters of the Blue Nile, which irrigates the British-owned cotton fields of the Sudan, has often been pointed out. But the significance of this is not always realized. Seventy-six percent of the value of the exports from the Sudan is due to cotton, and 58 percent of the total crop is grown in the Gezira, which is fertilized by the Blue Nile.

Before 1926, when the dam of the Blue Nile was constructed, the Gezira depended on a scanty and seasonal rainfall, and was little better than a desert. Now every year more of it is being put under cultivation. British capitalists are not going to permit another capitalist power to control a water supply which, if cut off, would retransform the Gezira into a desert and, in effect, expropriate the British shareholders!

Two British companies are mainly interested in the Sudan—the Sudan Construction and Equipment Company, Ltd. (capital, 1934, £0.4 million) and the Sudan Plant Syndicate (capital, 1925, £0.6 million; 1934, £2.3 million).

Big Increase of British Investments
British Africa has also increased greatly in value as an area for British investments. Here are examples of how the opportunities for British shareholders have increased. The following capital, according to the London Stock Exchange "Ten Years' Record," 1935, has been invested since 1925:

Investments Since 1925	In millions
Gold Coast Govt. Securities	£5.7
South African Govt. Securities	£42.0
N. Rhodesia Govt. Securities	£2.4
S. Rhodesia Govt. Securities	£4.2
Nyasaland Govt. Securities	£2.0
Tanganyika Govt. Securities	£5.5
Rhodesia Railway	£13.8
Nyasaland Railway	£0.8
African Trade Corporation	£3.5
Diamond Mines of S.W. Africa	£6.4
West Rand Consols	£3.3
Rand Selection	£2.4

These are twelve examples out of hundreds of shares dealt with on the London Stock Exchange. They total £32.0 millions! One other example: in four years £25 millions of British capital were invested in North Rhodesian mines.

Africans Become Wage-Slaves for British Capitalists
Since the World War tens of thousands of Africans have become the wage-slaves of British capitalist concerns. Here are the figures showing the increase in Kenya only:

1912	12,000
1920	90,000
1923	128,000
1927	185,000

Has Slavery in British Empire Been Abolished?
Why this expansion in Africa? One of the reasons is that the wages are extremely low—if one dare speak of them as wages. The price of labor in Kenya is ten shillings a week. This is why British capitalists invest money there. They can make greater profits. The low wages in the British Empire in Africa help to cause unemployment in Britain and to under-cut British working class standards.

The question is sometimes asked: Why have not the Abyssinian people revolted against the system of slavery? It is because they see little difference between slavery in Abyssinia and wage-slavery and forced labor in the neighboring British colonies where Africans are supposed to be free.

The land is taken from the Africans, who are only allowed to possess it in reserved territories. The result is that they are forced to go and labor for British capitalists. The British Government also forces the Africans to labor for particular periods in the year on government schemes of work. The governor of Uganda stated in 1922 that "at present but a small proportion of the unskilled labor employed by governmental departments is voluntary."

The position of the Africans has been described as follows by an authoritative writer: "White colonization and white industry mean that the black man loses the freedom to move in his own country, is made to work for the white man either by undisguised forced labor or by the corvée or by taxation, which he can only pay by hiring himself out year after year. It means sweating in the field for the profit of the white, sweating in the mines where he is paid a tithe of what a white man earns for the same work. Above all, it means losing his lands; a peasant people torn from the land in which his spiritual life is rooted must perish." (White, "The Abyssinian Dispute," page 65.)

But Why Should British Workers Be Killed?

The facts given in this article show the importance of British capitalist interests in Africa and indicate why our British capitalist government is prepared to go to the extent even of war to defend those interests against the threat of Italian capitalist and Imperialist interests.

But why should the lives of the British workers be sacrificed for profits of British capitalists?

The Significance of the Russian Revolution For the American Working Class

By A. J. MUSTE

The idea of winning American workers to Communism by showing them or talking to them about the progress of "socialist construction" in the Soviet Union always had its limitations. Of course, the Stalinist propaganda in this connection was always based on a fallacious theory, namely, that socialism could be built within the borders of the Soviet Union alone, if only war could be put off a few years by whatever means. Today "the final, irrevocable victory of socialism in the land of the Soviets" has been achieved according to the Seventh Comintern Congress. Any ideas or hopes based on such a theory, on an illusion, were bound to lead to confusion or disillusionment.

Achievements in the S. U.

Apart from this, it is true that there have been important technical and other achievements in the S. U. and we have every right to say that even the beginnings of a planned socialist economy under a workers' state can do more for the workers, in the face of the greatest obstacles, than capitalism. But even when based on this more sober and correct approach, the demonstration of the economic progress made in the S. U. was not calculated to impress and convince the general run of American workers. They could not visualize the low plane of the pre-war economy in Russia. They could see too plainly that the standard of living, technical development and labor productivity were still exceedingly low, compared to what they saw under their own eyes in the post-war U. S. under the most favorably situated capitalism in the world. They lacked the political development to analyze and understand what they saw.

There was a brief interval at the very close of the Hoover reign when very large numbers of American workers were impressed by the picture of no unemployment, etc. under the Five Year Plan in contrast with the misery, demoralization and vague alarm which pervaded the U. S. in those days, and said: "Pretty soon we'll have to do as they did in Russia." But even then the concept of Russia as the promised land was far more generally accepted among the intellectuals and even some of the agricultural population than among the workers; and the talk about doing as they had done in Russia often expressed a flight from reality rather than any determination to face it. Stalinist publicity seems now intent not so much on showing that things in Russia are superior to what obtains in the U. S. as upon showing that they are much the same in the Soviet Union as in the U. S.

Tell the Story of the Revolution

Yet the Russian revolution was and is of immense significance for American workers. The idea that it is a "Russian affair," "foreign," something that does not concern us, unless it be as an evil example, is of course false and dangerous. It is furthermore possible, I believe, to get large numbers of American workers to understand something of the significance of the Russian revolution, though it must always be remembered that the average worker is mainly concerned about things very near to home. It is after a new regime has been established in the U. S. also, not before, that his psychology and outlook be genuinely internationalist.

In the first place, the story of the revolutionary crisis itself, the misery and disorganization resulting from the war under the Czarist bureaucracy, the overthrow of the czar, the miserable failure of the bourgeois and non-revolutionary parties to stop the break-up of all economic life, to meet the needs of the masses, the gradual upsurge of the masses and their rise to power—all this merely as a dramatic spectacle is tremendously impressive. Workers who have been in strikes can live it from the inside. A popular version of Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution would be a powerful means for mass propaganda.

Show the Connection with War

The development should be shown in connection with the war. War is the only "way out" that capitalism knows. Permitted to remain in power it will lead the masses everywhere, in the U. S. too, to the abyss into which the Russian masses were thrust. Capitalism will stop short of nothing in order to retain its hold. The American workers are not immune, do not live in a universe apart, as they thought in the Coolidge-Hoover era. The depression has dispelled that illusion. There are only two ways to "stop war"—complete exhaustion, or the collapse of civilization, or the way the Russian workers chose, the road of revolution which puts an end to capitalism itself.

The idea that finally the workers have to take things into their own hands, that they can trust no one but themselves; the great idea of masses in motion, no longer inert, no longer meekly obeying orders, but standing up in their own right, marching, sweeping everything before them—all this makes a genuine appeal to American workers. On a small scale they have demonstrated in their own strikes that it can be done. Paint the picture of mass action, direct action, on the grand scale in the Russian revolution and they will understand.

Revolution No Tea Party

Show them, too, that the revolution is not a tea party. The masses have to arm themselves in order to escape slaughter at the hands of capitalist henchmen. It is not a question of electing one set of politicians to replace another. A clean break has to be made. The government has to be overthrown. The whole capitalist state and its machinery, police, courts, army must be destroyed. The workers must put their own state, their own revolutionary government, in its place. That is the lesson of the Russian revolution. American workers will come to see this too. There is that in their own tradition which will help them to see it.

The story of the Russian revolution, especially in connection with the contrasting policy pursued and results obtained in Germany and Austria, e.g. is the very best medium for teaching the workers what working class unity is and how it can be obtained. Impatience with divisions and "wrangling," desire for unity, are deep-seated. But history shows us that all forms of "unity" between workers and other classes on another than working class basis, all forms of "unity" in the working class itself, on anything save a revolutionary program are undependable, a death-trap indeed for the workers. Precisely at the critical moment they break down. They produce not unity, but confusion and division. Genuine unity is achieved on the basis of a revolutionary program and under the leadership of the revolutionary party. There can be and there is no other way—the way of Lenin and Trotsky.

Only the First Battle

The impression conveyed by much of the Stalinist propaganda is that the war of the working class for emancipation basically came to an end with the Russian revolution. It "established" socialism. Henceforth virtually the sole duty of the working class of the world is to "defend the Soviet Union," protect it from external attack, and then pretty much as a matter of course socialism will gain universal sway. This is bad, un-Marxist theory; it is also bad psychology. The Russian revolution resulting in the establishment of the first workers' state in all history, is indeed of incalculable significance. But it was not the war of the workers against their oppressors which came to an end in 1917 on Russian soil. The first major battle of a direct revolutionary character was fought there and the first great victory recorded. But the war is on. Subsequently, the workers have suffered heavy defeats. No matter. The shining example of 1917 stands. The war is still on. Here on American soil also the battle must be fought. Preparing for that battle against American imperialism is the primary duty of the American working class which has also its fighting traditions, a fresh, vigorous class which has never yet suffered a major defeat, but which has also tests to face such as the past never presented. Put the matter thus and Amer-less clear is the difference between the historic roles played by Robespierre and Stalin: the former assured the victory of the revolution over its internal and foreign enemies during the most critical period of its existence; but in Russia this work was accomplished under the leadership of Lenin. Stalin came to the forefront only after this period had come to a close. He is the living embodiment of a bureaucratic Thermidor. In his hands, terror was and remains primarily the instrument for crushing the party, the trade unions and the Soviets, and for establishing a personal dictatorship which lacks only . . . an imperial crown. Terror, which has fulfilled its revolutionary mission and has become transformed into a weapon of self-preservation for usurers, thus transforms itself into an "absurdity," to use Engels' expression. In the language of dialectics this means that it is doomed to inevitable collapse.

The Basis of the Terror

The senseless bestialities, which grew out of bureaucratic methods of collectivization, as well as the vile reprisals and violence against the best elements of the proletarian vanguard inevitably arouse exasperation, hatred and yearning for revenge. This atmosphere engenders moods of individual terrorism amongst the youth. The petty Ukrainian Bonaparte, S. Kossior, famous for his brazenness, said not long ago that Trotsky "calls in the press for the assassination of Soviet leaders," while Zinoviev and Kamenev, as proved—if you please by the Yenukidze case—participated directly in the preparation of the Kirov assassination. Since everybody who has access to the writings of Trotsky can easily verify whether or not Trotsky has called for "the assassination of Soviet leaders" (if one were to allow, in general, that there are adult people who have to verify canards of this sort), this itself casts sufficient light upon the other half of Kossior's lie which concerns Zinoviev and Kamenev. We do not know whether there are now in process of manufacture any fraudulent documents with the aid of "Latvian consuls" or "Wrangel officers." The Kossiors of the Bonapartist regime are still able to hound, strangle and shoot quite a number of impeccable revolutionists, but this will not change the essence of the matter: their terror is an historical absurdity. It will be swept away together with its organizers.

Fallacy of Individual Attempts

Do we call for the assassination of the Soviet leaders? The bureaucrats who have defied themselves may be sincerely under the delusion that they are making history, but we on our part do not share this illusion. Stalin did not create the apparatus. The apparatus created Stalin—after its own image. The replacement of Kirov by Zhdanov changed absolutely nothing in the state of affairs. Unlike the situation that prevails with goods for mass consumption, the assortment of Kossiors is unlimited. They vary from one another a centimeter or so in height and a few centimeters in girth. That is all! In everything else they are as alike as their own enclaves of Stalin. The replacement of Stalin himself by one of the Kaganoviches would introduce almost as little novelty as did the replacement of Kirov by Zhdanov. But would a Kaganovich have sufficient "authority"? There is no cause for worry, all the Kossiors—the first, the fifteenth and the one thousand and first—would immediately provide the necessary authority for him by means of the bureaucratic conveyor, just as they created Stalin's "authority," i.e., "authority" for themselves, for their uncontrolled rule.

That is why individual terror appears so pathetic and puny in our eyes. No, we have not unlearned the A B C of Marxism. Not only the fate of the Soviet bureaucracy but the fate of the Soviet regime as a whole depends upon factors of a world historic magnitude. Only successes on the part of the international proletariat can restore self-confidence to the Soviet proletariat. The basic condition for revolutionary successes is the unification of the world proletarian vanguard around the banner of the Fourth International. The struggle for this banner must be waged in the U.S.S.R. as well; prudently but unyieldingly. The historical absurdity of an autocratic bureaucracy in a "classless" society cannot and will not endlessly endure. The proletariat that has achieved three revolutions will once again lift up its head. But won't the bureaucratic "absurdity" resist? The proletariat will find a large enough broom. And we shall assist them. September 6, 1935

And it is through the medium of the life, the activities, the sayings of Lenin and Trotsky that the conceptions of revolutionary internationalism must in large measure be made real and living to American workers. A pamphlet of the most popular character on the life of Trotsky is one of our immediate needs for the broadest mass work. A popular book on the same subject is needed for those who have time and aptitude for more extensive reading. The conception that the figure of Trotsky, the chief organizer of the revolt in Petrograd during those "ten days that shook the world," organizer of the Red Army, first army in all history under the control of the workers; bearer of the banner of revolutionary internationalism, the banner of world-revolution, in the face of bitter and colossal persecution—the conception that this symbolic figure must be kept in the background is not sound. He belongs to the Russian Revolution, to the Soviet State though not to the Soviet bureaucracy under Stalinist domination. He belongs to China also, to Germany, to France to Latin America. He belongs to the working class and to the revolutionary party, the Workers Party, in the United States. Even Stalinist defamation will in the long run make clear rather than obscure that fact.

The American workers were deeply stirred by the Russian events of 1917, as those of us who were old enough at that time can well remember. The American workers are much nearer not only in point of time but with respect to the development of economy under which they live, and in point of their own political development—much nearer now to facing such a crisis as the Russia masses encountered eighteen years ago. As the capitalist crisis, including the war crisis, swiftly develops, so will the American workers rapidly develop a greater interest in the Russian revolution; come to know it as "their" revolution also, the first mighty victory in the world-revolution which will not be stopped until the working class has everywhere established its rule and humanity can advance to a new stage of civilization in comparison with which the highest that has so far been achieved will appear cheap and barbaric.

of the United Textile Workers. This strike is of national significance. The struck Strutwear plant was endangering the national existence of the union. Running at top speed, in three shifts, the open-shop Strutwear plant was flooding the East with sweatshop-priced goods. Previous attempts to unionize the plant had met with no success, the weak forces of the Central Labor Union being impotent to aid the hosiery federation. The rise to power of Local 574 gave the hosiery federation its long-sought opportunity.

Despite the fact that only a handful at first answered the strike call, the hosiery union's appeal to Local 574 resulted in the shut-down of the plant in August and it has remained closed since, despite numerous attacks by the police on the picket lines. Vincent Dunne, leader of Local 574, received three broken ribs at the hands of police and a sentence of fifteen days in the workhouse for his picketing activities in behalf of the Strutwear strikers. The local press announces the formation of vigilante gangs to war on strike leaders and the employers are hysterically demanding that the police reopen the plant. But the hardy pickets of 574 intend to keep the plant shut until it signs up with the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

Other Services of 574

In addition to these strikes, Local 574 has aided numerous others, including the Arrowhead steel strike, the Minneapolis-St. Paul mechanical strike of last January, the Fargo drivers' strike and the building-trades strike. In the last two weeks hitherto unorganized workers in the candy industry and chicken pickers came to the headquarters of 574 for aid in organizing unions, and won immediate success.

The example of what the militant leadership of Local 574 has been able to do for the workers of Minneapolis has driven the local bureaucrats into a frenzy of hatred. All attempts of local talent to destroy Local 574 having failed, the national union-busters, Green, Woll and Co. have now been called in. The capitalist press and radio, which commented approvingly on former New York police commissioner Richard Enright's recent declaration here calling for violence against the "reds and other lawless elements," will undoubtedly support Bill Green's assault on the unions, as will the employers' open-shop organization, the Citizens Alliance. Farmer-Labor Mayor Latimer, who recently went to Washington to appeal to Green to help him against the unions, declaring that "Progress has been and is being endangered by industrial strife," undoubtedly assured Green of all possible support. The "employer-employee" committee for "industrial peace," set up by Mayor Latimer, composed of President Cunningham of the State Federation of Labor, two other conservative trade union officials, a "neutral" member who is head of a local bosses' industrial institute, and three open-shop bosses—a vice-president of the local Manufacturing Association, and the managers of the non-union Northern States Power Company and the General Mills—will undoubtedly also support Green.

Labor Cold to States' Appeal

But Green will have to look far and wide for support from the labor movement.

Only two weeks ago a delegated conference of fifteen local unions met in the machinists' headquarters and voted to send resolutions to Tobin, Green, the State Federation and the Central Labor Union, demanding reinstatement of Local 574 as essential to the welfare of all local unions.

Local 574 sits on a joint council with the unions of the filling-station attendants and the automobile mechanics. The organizer of the Central Labor Union comes to 574's hall to appeal for help on the picket lines. The "women's clubs" to whom Green's representative announces he will appeal, certainly will not include the most powerful of all, the Farmer-Labor Women's Federation which, immediately after the attack on the ornamental iron workers' picket lines, held a mass meeting and denounced Mayor Latimer as a murderer.

The "veterans' organizations" will not include the Farmer-Labor Veterans Association, which joined the women's federation in demanding the expulsion from the party of Mayor Latimer.

Nor will Green get much help from the Farmer-Labor Hennepin (Minneapolis) County central committee delegates, who cursed their elected representatives for using the police against the strikers.

Nor will Green get much help from the many Farmer-Laborite aldermen and state representatives who called for Latimer's expulsion from the party and his recall from office.

Green, Woll and Tobin are undoubtedly assured of one thing—they have picked out the toughest place in the country for their union-busting.

Long Live the Russian Revolution

ment of the social crisis!

The Russian workers inherited from Czarism a poorly developed industry. And even that was ruined and disorganized, first by the ravages of the disastrous war of the capitalist powers and then by the civil war and the intervention. The success of the Soviet workers, deprived of all aid from the capitalist world, in reconstruction of the shattered basis of pre-war Russian industry and then in expanding it on a scale and at a pace unprecedented in history, has proven for all time the immense superiority of the Soviet system over the capitalist system of private ownership. That which the Marxists always maintained has been irrefutably confirmed in practice under the most unfavorable conditions by the Soviet proletariat. The productive forces of mankind, fettered by capitalist property relations and disorganized by ever-deepening crises, will be again vastly expanded under the socialist world system. All possible doubts on this score are removed by the achievements of the Russian revolution in the field of industry regardless of eventual fate of the present Soviet state.

The true adherents of the Russian revolution do not blind themselves to its weaknesses which are fundamentally the result of its isolation and capitalist encirclement and inseparable from it. The nationalist degeneration, which has proceeded uninterruptedly since Lenin's death and which expresses the pressure of alien classes at home and abroad, is the greatest menace to the Soviet Union and the most formidable obstacle to the extension of the revolution to other lands. Stalinism, the bearer of this nationalist degeneration, is the mortal enemy of the Soviet Union and the international revolution. He who does not see this and say it frankly is no revolutionist. Our attitude has nothing in common with those dubious "Friends of the Soviet Union" who expose their friendship in servile and uncritical support of every act and every crime of the bureaucracy. Such people, who are at best sentimental philistines serving reactionary ends and at worst wretched careerists and hired flunkies of the opulent bureaucracy, are outside the revolution and, at the critical moment, will turn up on the sidelines or on the other side of the barricades. As for us, the Russian revolution is our own. We owe the Soviet Union our criticism which is inseparable from the real and unconditional support which genuine revolutionists have always given it. Our fight against Stalinism is a fight for the real defense of the Soviet Union and its extension throughout the world.

The October revolution and the Third International of Lenin are forever united in history as one and the same enterprise. The ideas of the Third International, forged by Lenin and his collaborators in the darkest days of the world war, came to fruition in the October revolution and made it possible. And by the same token the consolidation of the victory in Russia gave the impulse to the world movement which called the Third International into existence as a world organization. Revolutionary internationalism was the guiding idea which gave meaning to the struggle and determined its course throughout. The abandonment of this line by the nationalistic usurpers has worked exclusively to weaken and undermine the Soviet Union, to destroy the Third International and to demoralize the proletarian vanguard throughout the world. But for the revolutionary Marxists who remain true to themselves the betrayal of the usurpers is only a summons to conduct a new struggle for the old cause. The downfall of the Third International sounds the call for the creation of the Fourth.

The teaching and practice of the leaders of the Russian Revolution and the Third International, brilliantly exemplified in the greatest victory the working class has ever known, retain all their validity today. To be true to these teachings and apply them—therein lies the task of the proletarian vanguard and the assurance of its victory. To that task we dedicate ourselves again on the 18th anniversary of the Russian revolution.

In order to go forward we must return to Lenin. We must raise again the banner of revolutionary internationalism. We must revive the concept of the Russian revolution as the beginning of the international revolution and dependent on it. That is the way, and the only way, to defend the Soviet Union, to fight the impending war of the imperialists and to prepare the way for the world October. All these tasks and problems which dominate and determine the fate of the working class and of all humanity are bound together today in a single slogan: THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL!

Toledo and Minneapolis

News-Bee editors would have their Minneapolis conferees believe—or it is necessary to refer them to their own back-files on the General Milk Drivers, FWRA, Chevrolet and a dozen of other militant battles.

The first wave of labor struggle in Toledo is ended, the flood that started two years ago with the "Battle of Chestnut Hill." Labor here is utilizing the present lull in strike activity, similar to that throughout the country, to entrench itself in its new won positions and to lay the groundwork for more and greater battles to come. The organization of the Labor Political Congress, while in itself an ineffective agency for genuine working class political action, is an indication of the breaking away of Toledo workers from old-line capitalist party loyalties and a desire for class action.

CELEBRATE EIGHTEEN YEARS OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

IRVING PLAZA
Irving Place and 16th St.
THURSDAY, NOV. 7th,
8 P.M.

WE DID IT ONCE... WE'LL DO IT AGAIN... NOW FOR 1000 SUBS

OUR Russian Revolution anniversary edition last week was a milestone in the history of the NEW MILITANT: for the first time since its inception our paper has appeared in eight pages.

On December 1 we'll do the trick again with another enlarged issue!

We are certain that those of you who have followed the NEW MILITANT from week to week, who have watched its struggle to keep its head above water, who have noted how woefully limited four pages are, must have been delighted in the last issue and wished that it could continue regularly.

Judging by the enthusiasm with which the anniversary number was greeted in New York someone ventured the idea that if enthusiasm alone were enough the eight-pager would be an accomplished fact. Unfortunately enthusiasm is not sufficient, but it can be the beginning of a drive that will yield real results.

For our part, from the editorial office, for the first time in years we felt that there was some real elbow room. It gave us an idea of the scope of events, the features, the educational, propaganda and polemical articles which might find their way into the NEW MILITANT with the additional space provided by four extra pages. It almost tempted us to brush the dust from the old plans so hopefully prepared when the eight-pager was first projected.

And although we cannot offer you another eight-page paper this week it was decided almost as soon as the November 7 edition came off the press to do the job again on December 1. December 1 marks one year of the Workers Party. We will celebrate it by another EIGHT-PAGE NEW MILITANT.

The December 1 issue, unlike the previous one, will deal almost exclusively with the American scene. If our plans pan out we promise you a humdinger of a paper.

You will then be able to take the two eight-page issues and get a cross section of what the enlarged paper will look like. But the big job is still ahead.

It's a swell idea to rent a new suit for a day every few months, but it's a much better one to own the suit outright.

That's precisely what we want to do. We want to sport the eight-pager every week and not merely every few months. And these must be your sentiments too.

After all our agitation and especially in view of the brilliant opportunities for the party there isn't any need for discussing how useful four additional pages would be in situations like Minneapolis, in the new progressive drift in the A. F. of L. in the unemployed movement and among Socialist and Stalinist workers.

It's no exaggeration to say that our paper can become the best ever in the history of the labor movement. With the talent and ability at our disposal the eight-pager can combine agitation for the uninitiated worker and education for the more advanced in such a way that will set a new high for labor journalism.

With the eight-page paper we can show the world that the working class doesn't need the gutter journalism of the People's Press recently born out of the cesspool of Stalinism.

The working class deserves the best and not the rottenest; it deserves the attitude not of masters to slaves but of comrades—it should get it.

The reasons are too numerous to mention and you can probably add more than we can think of.

Having perfect agreement, let's quit discussing and hoping. Let's get down to business and put the thing over.

What's needed is push, drive and energy. Everybody must do his part, do it quickly and enthusiastically.

By the W. P. convention, Christmas week, we want 1,000 subs!

We want donations, pledges and good American coin in any form it can be gotten!

And it can!

Let's get the will-to-the-eight-pager, the determination to see the task through and the work it takes to make it a fact. If we have all of these the goal is in sight and the EIGHT-PAGE NEW MILITANT is here to stay.

To work!

Hundreds Turn Out for Shachtman Meetings

Chicago, Detroit and Northwest High Points on Tour

DETROIT: Close to a hundred workers gathered on comparatively short notice at the Wayne County Socialist Hall to hear Max Shachtman present the position of the Workers Party on the Italo-Ethiopian conflict. The analysis of the position adopted by the Social Democrats and the Stalinists with regard to the British and League of Nations policy on sanctions, as contrasted to the revolutionary anti-war position of the Workers Party, was followed with keen interest by the workers present. The local branch of the Workers Party promises to experience a considerable growth in the immediate future, especially in view of the fact that it is well connected in the trade unions, above all with the leading forces in the automobile industry. Here as in every other locality visited by Shachtman during the tour, the local comrades are vociferous in their request for experienced organizers to take advantage of the excellent opportunities the party has for growth.

CHICAGO: More than 200 workers packed the large hall of the Capitol Building at the mass meeting organized by the local organization of the Workers Party to hear the position of the W.P. on the coming world war and the present conflict in Africa. Shachtman, now on a national coast-to-coast tour for the Workers Party, was the principal speaker, and he effectively ridiculed the social-patriotic position of the two official "labor" parties—S. P. and C. P.—on the working class attitude towards imperialist war. Despite repeated challenges by the chairman, Norman Saffir, for representatives of the C. P. or S. P. to take the floor in defense of their official position, nobody in the audience ventured to speak in their behalf. In his concluding remarks, Shachtman revealed the reactionary sectarian position of the United Workers Party which was defended by its principal spokesman, Mattick, who, characteristic of all ultra-Leftist sectarians, denounced the Workers Party and Leninism for their defense of the right of self-determination of Ethiopia.

Eight of the leading trade union leaders of Cuba were seized last week by government agents in Havana, taken before the so-called "Emergency Tribunal," sentenced to six months each in the dreaded El Principe fortress-prison, and are daily being tortured, according to information received today by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Lasalle, General Secretary of the Havana Federation of Labor; Vilas, secretary of the National Federation of Labor, and six others were seized. Four delegates each from the Havana Federation and the other organization, which are not affiliated with each other, were conferring together on proposals for joint action when secret service men burst in and arrested them.

C. P. Votes For McLevy

S. P. Faker Gets in with Aid of Republican and 'Solid' Citizens

By Connecticut Correspondent
NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 5.—The Socialist mayor Jasper McLevy of Bridgeport was returned to office today with a clear majority of 5,000 votes over all his opponents. Nearest to McLevy's 24,000 votes was Republican Wilson with 10,000. The Democrats suffered terrific losses as compared with the last election. The Socialists won in every ward.

The big issues of the campaign were honest, economical government and Communism. The latter issue became hot when the Communist Party after getting 500 names on a petition, enough to put candidates on the ballot, decided to withdraw in order to support Jasper (with mental reservations) Jasper, "the sales-tax Socialist." The withdrawal was not allowed, but the C. P. shouted all the louder in support of the Socialists. Earl Browder came to town and addressed an audience of 1,000, who were attracted by Republican and Democratic cries that McLevy was getting support straight from Moscow. Browder frowned on Comrade McLevy but pleaded the need for working class unity at any cost. This was the case all over the world, he said, including Bridgeport.

The high point of the campaign was a radio statement during a Socialist program on the eve of the election by a commissioner of the Park Board: "I am personally a national and state Republican. In voting for Jasper you are voting for honest home government."

French C. P. Gets First Payment

Radicals Elect Cachin In Gratitude For Services

By H. F. ROBERTS

On October 21, the day after the French senatorial elections, l'Humanite, organ of the C. P., appeared with a banner headline: "Victory of the People's Front." Under the masthead was the proud legend: "Director—Marcel Cachin, Senator from the Seine." Modestly, the new dignitary in a front page article admitted that "for the first time a Communist has penetrated into the French Senate."

The significance of this world-shaking event is described by Paul Vaillant-Couturier as "a parry to the threats of the Fascist leagues against bread, liberty and peace. The country remains firmly attached to the traditions willed to it by the glorious French revolution." (l'Humanite, Oct. 21.)

Social Patriot Comes Into His Own
France has proved itself true to its revolutionary traditions. It has elected Marcel Cachin, social-patriot of 1914 and of 1935, to the Senate! The day is saved. Our beloved leader, Joseph—pardon me—Marcel Cachin is the hero of the hour. His election, cries the Central Committee of the French Stalinist party, shaken with emotion, "is a symbol of the unswerving attachment to the Communist International, to the victory of the Front Populaire of peace, bread and liberty."

It is worthwhile stopping briefly to examine this "victory" of the Front Populaire. [The elections in (Continued on Page 2)]

700 at New York Meeting Back French Bolsheviks

In one of the biggest meetings held by the Workers Party in New York since its first days, more than 700 people jammed the Victoria Hall of Irving Plaza to hear James P. Cannon develop the program of the Fourth International on the turbulent events in France.

A true demonstration of international solidarity!

Not since the first days after Hitler's seizure of power has there been an American meeting which by its numbers, its spirit and its deeds rivaled this one of a week ago.

The enthusiastic reception accorded the work of the French Bolshevik-Leninists, who alone carry the banner of revolutionary internationalism, was converted into substantial solidarity.

$150 was collected with great speed and great enthusiasm to help the work of our French comrades. A facsimile of the check dispatched appears above.

After a brief survey of the background of the situation in France, comrade Muste, acting as chairman, introduced, Cannon the speaker of the evening.

He opened his remarks with an analysis of the instability of world capitalism which seeks a solution either in socialism or reaction. France, he continued, held the key to the outcome of this struggle for Europe and ultimately for all the world.

The Laval government, Cannon explained, very closely resembled the type of governments which preceded Hitler in Germany. Balance themselves on the armed Fascist bands of the Croix de Feu, on the one hand, and on the so-called People's Front on the other, it is holding the working class at bay as the day for the final test arrives.

MPLS. W. P. SHOWS TRUE ROLE OF F-L PARTY

Statement of the Minneapolis branch, Workers Party of the U. S., on the Farmer-Labor Party.

OUR PRE-ELECTION STATEMENT

In the last municipal election campaign, the Minneapolis branch of the Workers Party of the United States issued a campaign leaflet in which we urged all workers to support the Farmer-Labor candidates, in order to break the stranglehold of the Citizens Alliance on the local city government.

"While the Workers Party urges the defeat of Bainbridge by the election of Farmer-Labor candidates, it declares that the Farmer-Labor officials will not and cannot give the working class any real lasting benefits—these will have to be won by the workers themselves through their fighting organizations: the UNIONS, UNEMPLOYED ORGANIZATIONS and REVOLUTIONARY WORKERS PARTY."

"Workers of Minneapolis: Elect the Farmer-Laborites to office but WATCH THEIR EVERY MOVE. DO NOT TRUST THEM. They will serve the workers' movement only if the workers' organizations force them to do so."

So we said in our leaflet. Today we see less reason than ever to withdraw our declaration and our warning.

THREE MONTHS OF FARMER-LABOR RULE IN MINNEAPOLIS

The Farmer-Labor Party campaigned on pledges not to use the police in industrial disputes, and to fight for more liberal unemployment relief. What has been the record of the Farmer-Labor administration—acting through its elected mayor and aldermen—since it took over political power in Minneapolis?

1. Reactionary officials, including Swanson, were not ousted but were retained in office.

2. The relief administrator, Klorfau, was not ousted but was retained in office.

3. Such a gross mismanagement of strikes and of the police that satire itself stands disarmed. It is enough to recall Mayor Latimer's phony investigation to determine if the Flour City strike was "just." It is enough to quote the Minneapolis Journal: "Mayor Helps Reopen Plant—Latimer Directs Police Detail Guarding workers at Iron Works—The mayor with 50 policemen gave help to all employees (?) who desired to enter the plant..." Incidentally, Latimer or the Farmer-Labor Party has never to this day explained this strike-breaking act. The incidents at Strutwear and the murderous police charges at Flour City are alone enough to damn a party forever in the eyes of honest working men and women. But Latimer does not stop here. He whitewashes the police. And when the Citizens Alliance-dominated grand jury hells for (Continued on Page 4)

Issue Challenge to Nation's Militants to Hit Green Drive

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 2.—Blazing front-page headlines in the local press for three consecutive days have bannered the fact that William Green is mobilizing the whole machinery of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy to "open war on reds here." Green announces that Minneapolis is to be made "the center of a U. S. drive on communism."

Meyer Lewis, a Green agent, has been working under cover in this city for five weeks now, quietly gathering together the forces of reaction in an attempt to smash the militant local union movement. The Minneapolis Journal quotes the 4-point plan of the "labor leaders," as follows:

1. Contacting all employers who have been victims of communist aggression in labor disputes.

2. Conference with the heads of all unions in the city, including those under suspicion of communist direction, to learn their desires.

3. A general campaign among all unions of the city to educate the membership to the menace of communist leadership to the cause of labor.

4. An effort to have union members who have been encouraged to follow communist leadership to repudiate the radicals.

Lewis, Green's personal representative, elaborates on his master's despicable plan. "The American Federation of Labor, in beginning its national campaign to fight communism, will make Minneapolis its headquarters..." We propose to establish a worthwhile organization whose function will be to contact women's organizations, churches, veteran organizations, fraternal groups and civic bodies in order to combine the efforts of all these in one stupendous drive, which will concentrate on the one objective of eliminating those extremists outside the labor movement who are encouraging the promulgation of these undesirable radical principles.

... It is of the utmost importance that the citizens of Minneapolis, regardless of class or creed, regardless of financial status and regardless of belief shall co-operate 100 percent to see that the troubled waters of the industrial situation be clarified, and that the uppermost thought of the A. F. of L., the Minnesota Federation of Labor and the entire citizenry be combined under one common banner to completely purge the city of communism, and set the industrial wheels of activity in motion along the right trail, that being a complete and underlying peace for business men."

This morning's Minneapolis Tribune announces that work of contacting business, civic and other organizations to secure their active aid in the war on Communism is well under way. "The anti-Red activity will be in full swing next week. The Federation will then have established headquarters in downtown Minneapolis and officials of several international labor unions, whom Mr. Green is to send to Minneapolis, will be on the job."

Citizens Alliance Glee!
To Green's splitting proposals, the bosses, the Citizens Alliance, the American Legion, the business men's lunch clubs, etc. are of course responding enthusiastically. So do various officials of the State Federation of Labor. So does Farmer-Labor Mayor Thomas ("Tear Gas") Latimer.

The Citizens Alliance-led officials of the Strutwear Knitting Company, where a strike of 1,200 hosiery workers has been in progress for two months, have issued a statement damning the "reds."

Front, Cannon dwelled especially with the Communist Party, whose treacherous policies have made it the most reactionary force in the labor movement. The quotations he read from the Stalinist press of France left the audience gaping in amazement, so unbelievable has the degeneracy of the party of Lenin become.

From there the speaker went over to the crisis in the social democracy, the conditions that brought about the entrance of the Bolshevik-Leninists, their intransigent fight for revolutionary ideas and program. He concluded with an exposition of their program and an appeal for support.

Then came the discussion and the intervention of the nuisance groups whose chief reason for existence is their putrid criticisms of the 4th International. One after another, L. E. Weisford, Field and Oehler cliques fulminated against "Trotsky the traitor." "Trotsky the capitulator," they whined that "everything was lost in France," they bitterly protested at Cannon's failure to make distinctions between them, etc., etc.; but they didn't get a rise out of the audience which greeted their remarks with derision and remained 100 percent for the W.P., the Fourth International and comrade Trotsky to the last moment of the meeting.

In his summary Cannon gave the crushing reply to these splitters, pointing to their reactionary role in attacking the Bolshevik-Leninists of France precisely at the time they were under attack from the bureaucracy of the S. P., the Stalinists and the police—the role of strikebreakers. To their cries about the suppression of democracy in the W.P. he showed the audience the internal bulletins of the party filled with the opinions of the minority, which walked out of the organization despite the democracy proffered them by the party. The hearty applause from the audience showed its complete solidarity with the actions of the W.P.

The meeting ended with a lusty singing of the Internationale.

French C. P. Gets First Payment

the Seine were for the purpose of filling ten vacancies in the Senate, to be selected by the vote of the electors, corresponding to the municipal councilors and other local officials and deputies. A majority was required for election. The electors totaled 1,246. The results gave eight seats to the ticket of the Front Populaire—but also elected Pierre Laval and his confere, Flanquette.

This came about in an exceedingly curious manner. Seven Front Populaire candidates received the requisite majority (624 or more votes). Only Cachin failed! What had happened? Leon Blum himself tells us on the front page of Populaire, organ of the S.P. (Oct. 21) that "about 100 delegates of the Front Populaire did not vote for Cachin on the first ballot."

People's Front Votes for Laval

Where did those votes go? No less than 90 of them, says Blum, went to Laval—who was also elected on the first ballot—polling 647 votes. The unbreakable front of the Front Populaire cracked to let Laval into the Senate as representative of the Seine!

Grinding its teeth at this humiliation, l'Humanite charges Doriot with responsibility. Doriot, it seems, betrayed the Front Populaire by preventing the St. Denis delegates from voting for his old friend Cachin. Populaire brightly suggests that not a few delegates, selected from all colors in the front, were bought over.

Give the Dog His Bone

At any rate, this defection caused alarms and excursions. Between the first and second ballots (additional ballots were required to fill the two seats still vacant) the victorious Radicals and Socialists agreed that "the Communists had loyally voted. It is an essential duty to vote for them." Give the dog his bone. He's earned it. Hasn't he forewarned Communist independence? And wouldn't the workers be following a real lead from an organization with such resources? By all means, give the dog his bone.

So to the second ballot. This time 619 were needed to win. A desperate yank pulled Cachin across, a winner with 620—only two votes ahead of Flanquette. A close shave for our Marcel!

Let us examine the ballot counts more carefully. In the first count the candidates for the Front Populaire lined up as follows:

Mounie, Radical Socialist... 801
Seltzer, S.F.L.O. 737
Fleuret, Rep. Socialist... 730
Stoeg, Radical Socialist... 696
Auray, French Socialist... 671
Bachelot, Pupist... 638
Morisset, S.F.L.O. 638

Cachin, C. P. 590
Clamamus, C.P. 579
Pignier, C.P. 577

On the Laval list, the premier himself came in, elected, with 647 votes. Flanquette polled 675 with the other candidates trailing. Thus the first seven on the Front Populaire list and Laval were elected.

"The Deserving Cachin"

Note that no less than 211 votes separated Cachin from the Radical Socialist at the top of the list. In the second ballot, which brought Cachin in only two votes ahead of Flanquette, his 620 votes were still 181 votes from the Mounie total. This gives some suggestion as to the position of the Stalinists in this bloc of classes, in which the Mounies, the Seltzers, the Fleurets, the Stoegs—"passionately devoted to the national defense"—are leading the French version of the Kuomintang—and in which Cachin who "knows no enemies in the French people" (l'Humanite, Oct. 6), is symbolically in its place at the tail end.

"Better discipline in the Front Populaire would have brought more decisive results," said l'Humanite on Oct. 22. "Our Communist Party could point to the sacrifices it has made in the Seine to give satisfaction to all the groups in the Front Populaire... but it shall not stop for useless recriminations." And this was under the heading "More Than Ever—Front Populaire!"

Class and party independence have been entirely surrendered by the French Stalinists—for a seat in the Senate. For a seat in the government tomorrow they—and their reformist bureaucratic blood brothers, Blum, Faure, Zyromski and Co.—will deliver up the workers to the Fascists, to the cannon of imperialist war.

A. J. Muste, National Secretary of the Workers Party, will speak in Newark Sunday, Nov. 17, at 8 P.M. on "Which Party for the American Worker?" The meeting will take place at St. Regis Hall, 34 Park Place, opposite the Hudson Tubes Terminal.

W.P. Main Butt of Attack at I. L. G. Progressives Meet

Lovestoneite Easy on Labor Fakers; No Mention of 574

Announcement of the early publication of an English-Jewish progressive paper and an attack on the Workers Party were the chief features of a general membership meeting held by the Progressive Needle Trades Center of New York last Saturday. This is the first meeting held since the center was formally organized early last June. The announced purpose of this meeting was to hear reports on the A. F. of L. convention by progressive official I.L.G.W.U. delegates.

The chair was occupied by Louis Levy, manager of Local 1 of the Cloakmakers and a "progressive" of sorts. In his local, 150 "left-wingers" who joined the local in 1933 are kept as semi-septs, paying dues but having no say on union affairs. He is that sort of a progressive. Reports were given by Reuben Zuckerman, chairman of the Joint Board of the Cloakmakers (a well-known "progressive" organization) and by Nathan Margolis, assistant manager of Local 22 who is also playing with the Progressives this season.

The reports, which were in Jewish, were generally factual, dealing with matters already covered in our press. In addition, Zuckerman gave an interesting account of the personal characteristics, age, etc., of the delegates to the congress.

Following the reports came what was really the main event. The speech of Charles Zimmerman, manager of Local 22 and leader of the Progressive Center. Zimmerman was well-primed for the occasion. The press had just carried reports of the vicious red-baiting union-wrecking campaign started by William Green's representative, Meyer Lewis, against the militant section of the Minneapolis labor movement. Like all informed people, Zimmerman knew that this attack was directed against the leaders of a real progressive movement in Minneapolis and the northwest, many of whom are close to the Workers Party. Any progressive leader speaking to a meeting of progressives at such a time should have used the occasion to rally the progressive forces present in solidarity with the hard-pressed militants in Minneapolis.

Not so, Zimmerman. He had other fish to fry. With garbled quotations from the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Zimmerman launched into an attack not on Green, nor his representative, but on the Workers Party, charging that the W.P. had taken over the discarded "third period" policies of the Communist Party. The workers present were surprised. Why this attack on the Workers Party? Is the Workers Party a powerful force in local 22, and what forces it has have supported the Progressive Group? Was the attack then just an expression of solidarity with Green's union-wrecking campaign in Minneapolis? No, we do not, for a moment, believe that was the intention, though the speech did serve that purpose.

Rally Aid For 574

persistent solicitation to induce any large number of our employees to join the Hosiery Workers union, the business agent of the Central Labor Union, Roy Weir, assisted by these imported outside organizers of the Hosiery Workers Union, solicited the active assistance of the communist leaders, the General Drivers Union, Local 574, its relief workers' auxiliary, and the leaders of the Workers Party of the United States. This group responded on August 16 by mobilizing a hostile mob which appeared at our plant and, by illegal mass and mob activities, forcibly prevented our employees from going to work and compelled us to close our plant. Again on Aug. 19 when we sought to reopen our plant and resume operations, a still larger and more violent mob recruited from these same organizations was again permitted to unlawfully assemble at our factory. We were again forced to close and have remained closed ever since."

The Strutwear statement closes with the usual threat to put a postage stamp on the factory and mail it out of town. "It would be doing an injustice to our customers to try to continue business in Minneapolis."

All Progressive Thought Threatened

Meyer Lewis has already divulged the wide scope of his plan, which, if successful, would once again place upon Minneapolis the stigma of being an open-shop town, as happened in 1924 when the last A. F. of L. "purge" occurred. "This work cannot be limited to a communist purge. When we get started it must be a fight also against those who are furnishing the ammunition and weapons to those trouble makers. . . . Minneapolis is only the starting place. . . . The campaign is to be nation-wide."

Here, in black and white, is a warning to all progressive thought in the American labor movement. This means that the mildest progressive will not be spared in this latest drive. If Bill Green has his way, no person who does not agree with the narrow and backward views of Green, Woll, and the Citizens Alliance will be free from persecution at the hands of these shameful and contemptible wretches.

Progressives Organize for Defense

On Wednesday night, a few hours after the first rocket was sent up by William Green, a conference of fifteen A. F. of L. locals, led by Local 574, met in the machinists' headquarters. The unions present included the Public Building Service Employees, the Laundry Workers, the Painters, the Station Attendants, the Lathers, the Machinists, the Building Laborers, the City and Sanitary Drivers, the Carpenters, the Upholsterers, and the General Drivers. This conference of progressives adopted a resolution smashing back at Green's statement, charging "It is a continuation of the subversive propaganda initiated by the Citizens Alliance and carried forward by Mayor La Follette through his star chamber conferences and his employer-employee board. The purpose of the vicious statement is to direct broad attack against the progressive unions which have carried the banner of industrial unionism in Minneapolis. Frightened by the strong support mobilized by the industrial unionists, the bureaucrats of the craft unions, headed by Green, are casting all union principle to the winds and seeking to rouse a lynch spirit against the progressive unions under the guise of the red scare. Directed as they are against all progressive tendencies in the labor movement, these provocative statements can only serve to destroy rather than create industrial peace. All sane thinking persons should condemn these tactics as an unscrupulous attempt by a clique of self-seeking individuals to gain their own selfish ends at the expense of the democratic rights of all organized workers."

Lewis' only reply to these statements was to say "they were to be expected. The Minneapolis drive is not a flash in the pan; neither has it been hastily conceived, but, on the contrary, has been very carefully considered."

A Clarion Battle Cry to the Nation's Progressives

Now for the explanation of this whole malignant cancer which is trying to gain root in Minneapolis, in order later to squirm its branches and tentacles throughout the vitals of America. It is just a few weeks ago, at the Atlantic City A. F. of L. convention, that the corrupt Green machine was repelled in its fight against all progressive ideas in the American trade union movement. The fight between honest and buggy unionism and industrial unionism is now not only out in the open, but practically settled in so far as there is not the slightest doubt but that the rank and file is overwhelmingly with the progressives. What was significant about the official vote was not that the industrial union resolution was defeated by 18,025 to 10,924, but that 90 percent of the delegates from city and state labor bodies voted in favor of the industrial form of organization.

Green, Woll and Co. see the handwriting on the wall. They see that their rotten policies that have undermined the trade union movement for many, many years are now no longer acceptable to trade unionists to whom these depression years have begun to teach the lessons that must be learned. Like a cornered rat, Green is desperately staging a last ditch battle in defense of his tottering throne. He and his bureaucratic entourage witness with wide-eyed dismay their grip upon the working-class begin to slip. With that grip also goes their princely salaries. The odds that are gathering about the factory chimneys of Minneapolis are the stench that arise from a corpse in the initial stages of decomposition: the corpse of class collaboration, impotent craft-unionism.

The real reason for this strange attack on the Workers Party at a progressive meeting can be found in the political needs of the Lovestone group. It is a needle trades addition to Lovestone's anti-Trotskyist articles. It has two purposes. One to show the Communist Party that the Lovestone group is one with them in their efforts to isolate the Workers Party from any participation in the mass movement. Two, to attempt to discredit the Workers Party in the eyes of the Socialist workers, as part of Lovestone's effort to act as marriage broker between the Stalinists and the S.P.

Easy on Dubinsky

At the meeting which founded the Progressive Center in June, Zimmerman also attacked the Workers Party, but on that occasion, in addition he had a few words of criticism for Sidney Hillman and other officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union. Today, even the latter was lacking. The "progressiveism" of the Needle Trades Center if we may judge by the speeches of Zimmerman, is being rapidly watered down to the point where it will be acceptable to Dubinsky.

At the conclusion of Zimmerman's speech, and as the audience was streaming from the hall, Sam Baron, of the B.S. & A.U., an S.P. "Militant" was given the floor. With the limited time at his disposal, and under the circumstances, Baron made as effective a report on the Minneapolis situation as possible, announcing his solidarity with those under attack. The speech of the Socialist, Sam Baron, was in striking contrast with that of the "Communist," Zimmerman.

About 500 workers attended the meeting, the first membership meeting of the Progressives. At no time during the meeting were the members given an opportunity to take the floor.

But even a corpse can give off a deadly poison. It is becoming crystal-clear that Green, and local editions of himself, are violently resolved to use any and all weapons, to utilize the worst sort of criminal and Black Hundred elements, in their almost-hopeless struggle to resuscitate themselves.

It is a tribute to the militants of Minneapolis—those militants who have led and are leading such magnificent working class battles against the forces of oppression—that Green should have spotlighted this city of all cities, should have directed his first fusillade against our comrades.

The Green challenge is accepted! The fight to the finish is on.

It is a fight of progress against reaction—of the oppressed against their oppressors—of all that seeks to drive humanity forward, against those who seek to drag it back. In this fight, we in Minneapolis expect to receive the complete backing of all that is good and healthy in the American labor movement. We stand with braced feet beyond the front-line trenches, waiting to receive on our shoulders the brunt of the opening attack. We fully anticipate that every single progressive in the entire country will support us with all strength in the battle that approaches, against all the vile weapons that William Green, the Citizens Alliance, the Farmer-Labor Mayor, the police and other scoundrels will bring into play. When the smoke has cleared away, when the battle is won, we will find that the American labor movement has made immense strides forward.

The bugles are calling! On to battle!

W.P. Issues Paper in Akron

AKRON, O., Nov. 4.—In an intensified effort to give a correct program to the rubber workers in their current crisis because of hour lengthening and wage cutting by the companies, the Akron branch of the Workers Party has published its first issue of the GUM-MINER (local idiom for rubber worker), a four-page paper.

"What the United Rubber Workers of America Must Fight For," is the featured article. A clear revolutionary position on the war question is presented in another article. Cartoons and a "Dear Emily" column are used to enliven the issue.

Special attention is given to the fight of local 574 of Minneapolis against another "red drive" by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats and the unions are urged to support the local, in the final article. The paper is scheduled to appear every three weeks, 250 copies per issue.

Another Strikebreaking 'Labor' Mayor

(By a Worker Correspondent)

BEAUMONT, Texas.—Mayor P. E. Renfro, of this city, has proven an apt side-kick for Lathier, the "labor mayor" of Minneapolis. Tired of strike-breaking and terrorism, the labor unions of this town were instrumental in defeating the former city administration and electing Renfro and his colleagues, last spring. Before the election, the politicians, running on the labor ticket spoke with tears in their eyes of friendship for the working man.

Scabs protected by police constitute the redemption of Renfro's pledges. Members of the International Longshoremen's Association confidently expected that the Beaumont city administration would pursue a hands-off policy during the current strike. Instead, the subsidized Lone Star Dock Workers Association has been permitted to furnish scabs in unlimited quantities.

The union petitioned the city council to close the port during the period of the strike. But the members of that labor-elected body hid out in order not to take action. Mayor Renfro feebly excuses his sell-out by saying that the port is partly under the jurisdiction of the Federal government.

The backward rural sections of this state have been scourged for scab labor which has been shipped in by the carload. Frank Hammer, notorious ex-state ranger, has been hired by the hired by the companies to command their private force of thugs, stool-pigeons and strong arm boys. Widespread sympathy for the striking workers has prevented, thus far, the calling out of the National Guard.

Stalinists 'Vote Socialist' in Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Communist Party bookshop and offices here display large signs saying "Vote Socialist" and announcing local Socialist Party radio broadcasts. Lacking sufficient signatures under the County Commissioner's rules, the Communist Party has failed to get on the ballot. Although Stalinist support was not solicited by the right wing controlled Socialist Party here, nor is there a pretense at a "United Labor Ticket," and it is not a matter of actually electing S. P. candidates against a reactionary clique, the Stalinists are giving unserved support to the S. P., making no criticism of them, presenting no independent position.

In former years when a small party lacked sufficient forces to be placed on the ballot, a vigorous sticker and "write-in" campaign was conducted. Today, the C. P., without any embarrassment gives unstinting support to the reformists.

Next year there will be a ticket representing the revolutionary position for workers of Philadelphia to support—the ticket of the Workers Party.

Sugar Workers Strike For Reconition

TRACY, Cal., Oct. 30.—Forced to strike because of continued firing of union members, the Sugar Workers Union is conducting a strike for union recognition.

The Holly Sugar Corporation is determined that no union shall exist in any of its several large plants. The strikers are more than determined that the right of the workers to organize for decent wages, for sanitation, for seniority and for safety devices shall be maintained.

The busy or "campaign" season is on, and as a number of the men are skilled, the company's hand is being forced. Some men have already been asked to come back by Holly Sugar Corporation.

Aid is being sought from the various unions in the locality. The San Joaquin Labor Council has promised support. Since the teamsters and the Tug-boat men bring in the sugar beets, they are being contacted in an effort to get them to declare Holly Sugar Corporation beets and sugar "hot cargo." It is essential to get the support of these two unions. However, difficulties stand in the way of securing this cooperation—reactionary bureaucrats in both the teamsters' and the tug-boat men's unions are stalling off representatives of the Sugar Workers Union.

Many of the men have never been in a trade union before but they are learning fast and having seen deputies herd the scabs, they can see who is on the side of labor and who is on the side of the industrialists. The fighting spirit is high. Picket lines are maintained 24 hours a day to get the scabs out and win the strike.

Bldg. Trades Fight Scabs in Calif.

STOCKTON, Cal., Oct. 31.—The attempt made by the Western Engineering Co. of Los Angeles to use scab labor on a building job for the Taylor Milling Company has been met by a picket line of the local Building Trades Council. Workers here remember the milltant strike of the warehouse men earlier this year. It is interesting to note that this selfsame Taylor Milling Company was one of the struck companies which finally "saw the light" and signed up. Workers of Stockton also will remember that it was in this previous strike that Ray Morency, militant I.L.A. warehouse men's leader met his death from a gun in the hands of the boss's son.

The Building Trades Council and the San Joaquin Labor Council have both placed the Western Building Company and the Taylor Milling Company on the "We don't patronize" list.

However, what is needed is not merely passive resistance and platonic "promises of support" but militant action. First, only 15 or 20 scabs are working, a mass picket line could easily prevent the scabs from continuing. Second, the warehouse men working in the mill should walk off in sympathy. Already they have helped in picketing when not busy handling loads.

This paradoxical situation of Building Trades men striking the part of the mill that is being constructed, while warehouse men handle grain in another part must be ended, and a lesson in union solidarity taught to the gentlemen of the Taylor Milling Company as well as a real example of cooperation shown to the rest of Stockton labor.

NEW PAMPHLETS

We are now embarking on a new program of pamphlet publication to be issued and distributed by the NEW MILITANT business office. The first pamphlet to be published under this arrangement deals with the burning question of war, written by John West. It is already in the printers' hands and should be out within a couple of weeks.

In its forty-eight pages is crammed a thorough Marxian analysis of imperialist wars. It is entirely up-to-date, dealing with the issues involved in the war in Ethiopia and the present conflicting imperialist interests that threaten to expand this war into a general world conflagration. The role of the League of Nations, the role of social-patriotism and the agents of social-patriotism in the present war situation is thoroughly dealt with.

In this pamphlet by comrade West we have a veritable arsenal of unassailable Marxist arguments. In sum and substance it plants the banner of revolutionary Marxism right in the teeth of the imperialist war mongers.

This pamphlet will retail at 10 cents and party branches should send in their orders right away. Better yet, any orders paid in advance will speed the actual appearance of this pamphlet. The wholesale price is 7 cents per copy for 10 copies or more, with special arrangements for special sized orders; but credit will be given only to a limited extent.

It is important to remember, however, that the distribution of this pamphlet is considered a very important part of the party's campaign against war. It must therefore be given the widest possible circulation. Branches would do well by assigning to themselves a definite quota of pamphlets to distribute and set to work without delay.

Other pamphlets are on the schedule and will follow in short order. From comrade Trotsky we receive a promise of manuscript for a pamphlet on the Seventh Comintern Congress. A pamphlet on the A. F. of L. by Arne Swaback is also in preparation. Others will be announced subsequently.

THE MANAGER'S CORNER

One thousand new subscribers and a corresponding increase in bundle sales by the time of the second Workers Party convention on December 26. This is our next aim. It is modest enough, in fact we have been deliberate in setting such a modest aim in order to make sure that it will be reached.

Reaching this aim will also mean that the funds necessary to launch the eight-page weekly will be at hand. The eight-page weekly will be assured, and it will start out with a larger circulation. These two propositions are tied together in the general objective of a stronger and more effective press.

It is necessary to remember at all times that the press is our main instrument. But just now, with the war clouds thickening everywhere, there is a special occasion to devote extraordinary efforts to build up the press and lay the foundation for a stronger party.

Each party branch has been asked to accept a definite quota of new subscriptions to be obtained during the period set. But this does not preclude the assistance of others. On the contrary, we welcome every reader as an active participant in this job. Similarly, we still welcome outright contributions for the eight-page weekly and we shall render a report from time to time as we continue to advance toward its realization.

But the central point is now the drive to gain the one thousand new subscribers and a corresponding increase in bundle sales. Let all comrades go to work without delay.

We print below the quotas for the branches. Let's pull together—100 subs by Convention time.

Japanese Military Seizes North China Province

Nanking and as such might have drawn the fire of a desperate man who wanted somehow to express his opposition to Nanking's betrayal of the country. Information has been too scanty to say, but the shooting might equally as well have been part of the foul political intrigues always in progress inside the Kuomintang camp. None of us would have mourned Stalin's friend Wang, but the would-be assassin was a bum shot and Wang is recovering.

Sowing Up the North

Japan has meanwhile blotted out the last vestiges of even nominal Chinese authority in North China, has taken over the policing of Tientsin and Peiping, compelled the resignation of the mayors of those two cities and the liquidation of the Peiping Military Council, the organ of Chiang Kai-shek's authority in the North.

One key to understanding what is going on is the fact that the Japanese have decided to get rid of Chiang. He has grown stronger than they like any one general to be. The defeats he inflicted upon the Red Armies, his conquests of the western provinces, his acquisition of the rich opium revenues at their source in Szechwan and Kweichow placed Chiang and the government he dominates in a position of authority greater than they have ever had.

Moreover, Chiang, while selling out to the Japanese at every juncture, has always played a wild game, keeping himself out in the hinterland and dealing with the Japanese only through underlings, like Wang Ching-wei or Huang Pu. The Japanese have tired of this game. They want the Nanking government to sign over its recognition of Manchukuo and of Japan's dominant position in China, politically and economically, and they want it done directly and formally by the Central government.

Britain's Maneuver

It is into this situation, Japanese imperialism aggressive, Nanking submitting but truculently and with an ill-grace, that British imperialism has edged its hand. The sudden announcement came on Nov. 4 that China had devaluated her currency, ordered nationalization of the country's silver stocks and in effect pegged a new Chinese paper dollar to sterling. These steps, long heralded by the disastrous flow of silver from the country (due in part to China's inordinately heavy adverse trade balance, the price she pays for imperialist patronage, and in part to America's silver buying which only accelerated the flow of silver outward) were taken at the advice of Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, a British Treasury official now attached to Nanking as a financial adviser.

That Nanking took this step apparently without previously consulting Japan, is alone sufficient to show that a certain amount of definite British backing had been promised. Talk was current of a $50,000,000 (U.S. currency) loan which was denied but which remains in the air. The War Office and Foreign Office in Tokyo were openly furious over this development and the Japanese banks in Shanghai will probably try to sabotage the effort at nationalization by refusing to surrender their silver stocks. Meanwhile the Japanese press has started fulminating at both Britain and Nanking. The currency reform is called a "return of the pro-European or pro-American clique" (T. V. Soong and Co.) and dire threats of military action have been resumed.

Seeking New Markets

What these developments mean is simply this: Chiang Kai-shek, aware that the Japanese mean to smash him whether he crawls to them or not, has decided to give as much to the Japanese as he has to, but at the same time to seek other imperialist aid to bolster his position against the Japanese. He started doing this as early as last June when he sent W. W. Yen on a tour of European capitals and had Alfred Sze make a definite appeal for help in Washington. The latter appeal went unheeded because Roosevelt considered his silver-purchasing program of more immediate importance. But in London steps were taken which resulted in the sending of Frederick Leith-Ross to China and ever since then talk of a British loan has been in the air.

Another important current must be watched: press reports, mostly Japanese-inspired, to be sure, say Nanking is looking once more to Moscow for an entente. These reports are probably not true at the moment—but it is not impossible that they may become true if Nanking actually tries trailing for a while behind British imperialism instead of Japan. If the policies of Baldwin and Laval can "collide" with Moscow's "peace policy" why not those of Chiang Kai-shek? For the time being, however, Nanking will surrender to Japan with one hand, hold on to Britain with the other. The result, as always, will be paid for by the Chinese masses, for whom devaluation, with its consequent rise in prices and financial chaos (where already there was anarchy) means the utmost hardships increased a hundredfold.

WHAT ARE SANCTIONS?

"Collective Effort for Peace" or Imperialist Battle for Empire?

By ARNE SWABECK

Fifty-two nations, including the Soviet Union, have voted to enforce sanctions, under the League of Nations covenant, against Fascist Italy. Liberals, pacifists and labor organizations, with but few exceptions throughout the world, support sanctions. A similar position is taken by the Second and the Third Internationals. In union, both of these Internationals have become aggressive supporters of sanctions ever since this ingenious device was invented by the capitalist statesmen at Geneva.

The fateful days of 1914 had for their rallying cry the "defense of the fatherland." Is history now repeating itself? Are not issues of similarly fateful consequences to the future of the whole of humanity joined up in this rallying cry of 1935—the cry of sanctions?

What will sanctions mean when actually enforced? Are they to be purely financial and economic or are they to be military? Is it true that the sanctions to be invoked by the League of Nations represent the collective efforts of these nations to punish an aggressor and to stop war, or do they mean the extension of the war in Ethiopia on a far more colossal scale. This is the first and most essential question that confronts the working class.

For an answer it is necessary to examine at least the most outstanding factors involved.

The Causes of War

It has been said—and correctly so—that war is the continuation of politics by military means. Imperialist wars arise from the constant struggle between the powers for increased markets in world economy. All imperialist powers today feel the consequences of the economic crisis. The vast expansion of their productive forces presses them onward inexorably and irresistibly in the struggle for new markets and new colonial fields where they can tap the sources of raw materials, invest surplus capital and extract new and greater profits. On every continent they are openly advancing for new conquests. Owing to the severe defeats which the workers have suffered under Fascist onslaughts, the imperialist gamblers feel free to engage in a continuation of the conflict for increased economic returns by military means.

It is, of course, not the particular aggressor attitude of one or the other of these powers that produces war. This merely expresses a readiness to strike out for new territories. Fascist Italy has embarked on its course of expansion at the expense of the last of the independent African states. But in a world already divided into colonies and spheres of influence such a course must inevitably become a struggle for redivision of markets, involving in the first instance those powers having the greatest possessions. And so, in this case, Fascist Italy came into direct conflict with the British Empire.

Britain and Italy

These two imperialist powers, Britain and Italy, are the major adversaries in the present war situation and in no case can the clash be considered a conflict of democracy versus dictatorship, as it is presented today. They are typical of a power pressing forward in the struggle for expansion and a power seeking to maintain its present possessions. On the one side is Fascist Italy, caught in its inability to stem the tide of its own internal economic and political contradictions, desperately seeking an outlet through the restoration of Caesar's empire. On the other side is the existing British Empire on which the sun never sets.

Britain had centuries to consolidate her position. Tapping vast resources all over the world, deriving countless profits from the sweat and blood of millions of subjected peoples, she enjoyed a privileged imperialist position and could not tolerate any rivals. Her diplomats scored easy victories—with the British navy standing by. Now she is hard pressed throughout the world; the diplomatic victories have become questionable; elements of decay are apparent and expressed even in the reactionary attitude of the bureaucratic leaders of her official labor movement in support of sanctions, not merely out of pacifist motivations, but in solidarity with the continued oppression of the millions of colonial peoples by the imperialist masters. 7,287,937 square miles containing a population of 446,191,000 is the extent of these possessions, dominion and colonial, that touch every continent. What is popularly called the imperial life line, begins at Gibraltar and extends through the Suez Canal, the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden to the Indian Ocean. All along this line the British navy must remain supreme if the imperial possessions are to be retained unchallenged.

Not Ethiopia—the British Empire

The British rulers are not concerned with the independence of Ethiopia. Only too often have they proceeded with fire and sword to crush the independence of other native peoples. No, their sole concern is the preservation of their own far flung colonial empire. That Ethiopia's independence could be sacrificed easily enough was shown by the action of the League of Nations Council last summer. By a unanimous vote of all of its members, including the Soviet Union, a resolution was adopted to dismember Ethiopia on the basis of the robber treaty of 1906 between Italy, Britain and France. But Mussolini truculently rejected this offer inasmuch as he wanted possession of Ethiopia for Fascist Italy alone.

Indirectly this spells danger to the British Empire through the prospects of uprisings by the millions of peoples it now holds in subjection. But much more directly, this threatens to cut the imperial life line. Fascist Italy is building fortifications in Eritrea, on the coast of the Red Sea, and it is aiming for naval and aerial supremacy in the Mediterranean. This is the most immediate issue around which the war clouds are thickening today and the main motivating force behind the swift action of Britain for sanctions against Geneva.

The Many-Sided Danger of War

Obviously the League of Nations has not in the least, and could not in the least, serve to remove, or even to diminish, the causes of imperialist war. Organized as an instrument to ensure the spoils of the victors in the last war, and to maintain their hegemony, its numerous disarmament conferences served as a screen behind which all the capitalist powers, without exception, managed to perfect their armaments. New issues of conflict between these victors were, of course, inevitable. Japan some time ago embarked on its conquest of Manchuria, to extend its domination over China, and is now a constant threat to the borders of the Soviet Union. Fascist Germany is rearming feverishly in preparation for the time when its cruel regime can no longer bridge the gap of its internal contradictions: it will endeavor to find an outlet by means of new conquests. The imperialists of the United States have proclaimed neutrality while engaging in ever more extensive naval maneuvers in the Pacific with an eye to a future establishment of a base in China, in order to raise the question of possession of India at the next historical stage.

On the battlefields of Ethiopia war has become a reality. The guns of the highly mechanized Fascist armies are spitting fire in the campaign to ravage and subjugate the native population. The capitalist powers in the League of Nations proclaim their peaceful intentions while all of them are arming to the teeth; some of them in order to use the first opportunity to spring to like conquests and others in order to defend their present possessions to the end. There may yet be an intermission before the general conflagration; but in any event the war that has already started in Ethiopia is only a prelude to the much greater catastrophe now in preparation under the rallying cry of sanctions.

"Good-Intentioned" Treachery

Only on this background can the question of sanctions be properly understood. And yet in this situation the Stalinist party, through the Daily Worker, informs us that: "The next step must be punishment of the guilty—sanctions." It exhorts: "All opponents of war and Fascism should support this policy and demand that the League of Nations bar all trade with Italy and close the Suez Canal."

In the thieves' jargon of diplomacy, sanctions, in their ultimate implication, mean war. Mussolini said so. Stanley Baldwin repeats it, although much less boldly, and with many disguising hypocritical trimmings. Nevertheless the leaders of the British Labor Party demand sanctions. And Harry Pollitt, the leader of the British Stalinist party, in a recent address before a London district conference of the party, formulated his demands upon the British government as follows: "But we also demand the closing of the Suez Canal, and the carrying out of the Covenant of the League of Nations, because we believe that all these measures can prevent Mussolini going to war, and we must utilize the present contradictions in the capitalist world, and force economic and military sanctions if necessary."

We may grant that Pollitt has other intentions than Stanley Baldwin, but the way to hell is paved with good intentions. Pollitt together with the leaders of the British Labor Party may criticize the National government, each in his own way, but this can only be incidental to the decisive issue of sanctions. And let it be noted, it is the League of Nations, and with it the British government, that are in this case called upon to close the Suez Canal and to enforce sanctions, "economic and military." Consequently the government is to be supported on this decisive issue. Behind this rallying cry of sanctions the British worker is being led into united support of the Tory government—the real enemy of the workers. To this enemy is to be entrusted the guarantee of peace.

Democracy Versus Dictatorship?

While at this time particularly the League of Nations should be exposed for what it is and the mask of hypocrisy torn off from the face of the imperialists, old illusions in the League are being strengthened and a new confidence of the workers in the Tory government is being built up. A new national union is being created with the connivance of Labor Party and Stalinist leaders.

for was: "The N.E.C. program provides the issues upon which we shall fight—Against the Roosevelt armament campaign; against war and imperialist tricks that lead to war!"

If the line taken toward the N.E.C. resolution is going to be the consistent line of the "Militant" leaders, then they must in all consistency prepare a new report on the Bauer-Zyromski thesis. If the N.E.C. resolution deserves the headline it got, then Bauer-Zyromski deserves a headline: "Left Wing Calls for World Revolution" (which the Bauer-Zyromski thesis does call for, just as much as the N.E.C. calls for a labor boycott, in both cases the "progressive" slogan being inextricably linked up with the reactionary program). If the N.E.C. resolution deserves the characterizations it receives from the Socialist Call, then the Bauer-Zyromski thesis should receive a new report, beginning: "Launching a worldwide campaign against war."

"Sounding anew the Socialist call for mass resistance," etc., etc.

What Socialist Workers Should Do

But to those Socialist workers who wish to be consistently revolutionary, we say: The answer to Bauer-Zyromski is a good beginning. It must not be permitted to remain an abstraction. Zyromski himself for years maintained, in bare words, the idea of renunciation of the defense of the fatherland. Because he was permitted to bring the idea out for special occasions but never applied it to the day by day problems, it is now possible for Zyromski, having gone over to the social-patriots, to drag along with him many of his followers in the left wing. Remember the fate of Zyromski's followers. Take, rather, the opposite road of Zyromski's co-leader of the French left wing, Marcel Piaton. He did not permit the idea of revolutionary struggle against war to remain an abstraction; he applied it; and today he stands in the forefront of the Revolutionary Left ers which, regardless of intentions, can lead only to war for the maintenance of the British imperial possessions.

Britain is today in the center of the war developments but it is not alone; nor is the position taken by the British Stalinists an exception. We are informed by the Daily Worker, for instance, that the C.P. of Czechoslovakia on October 7 cabled the League of Nations demanding "the immediate application of effective economic and military sanctions against Italy." Here is a voice from another "democratic" country which the Comintern has declared as its policy to defend against Fascism. But it is not the voice of the revolutionary workers. Can anyone conceive of Czechoslovakia, or Britain, or the United States, or any other capitalist democratic country, really going to war to defend the democratic rights of the people against Fascism? Need there be any doubt that the war they will wage will be for imperialist issues? And we might add, is it not more likely that when the war actually breaks out that serious efforts will be made by the capitalist rulers of these countries to transform them into Fascist states?

For the Stalinist parties the support of sanctions is not an accident; nor can it be regarded as just another mistake. It is a part of a whole system of policies which, once such a course is embarked upon, could lead to no other results. This system of policies proceeds consistently from reliance on pacts and treaties between the Soviet Union and the capitalist powers, instead of reliance on the proletarian revolution, to support of the League of Nations and to support of the capitalist governments in carrying out sanctions. In turn sanctions becomes the deceptive device for the mobilization of the masses for imperialist war.

Shall It Be 1914 Again?

What we have before us in this question is imperialist sanctions, for imperialist ends, and not working class action to prevent war. The two are not complementary, as the new-baked defenders of democracy would have us believe. These two are opposite poles. It is therefore necessary to emphasize that not only are issues, as fateful in their consequences to the future of the whole of humanity, joined up in this question of sanctions as was the case of the rallying cry of the "defense of the fatherland"; but also to add, that another historic betrayal is in preparation, and this time on a far more colossal scale. In 1914, national unity within the imperialist powers and the plunging of millions into the bloody battlefield was preceded by the treason of social democracy. Today the demand for sanctions can lead only to restoration of national unity behind the capitalist governments to plunge the masses into another and far more terrible conflagration—a repetition of the betrayal of 1914—this time, however, participated in by the social democrats and the Stalinists jointly.

Still it remains as true as ever that only working class action can prevent war. Liebknecht warned that the enemy is at home; and in this respect nothing has changed since. Therefore the duty of the revolutionists is clear. It is the irreconcilable struggle to overthrow capitalism as the only way to do away with imperialist war.

of the French Socialist Party, the group who are leading the way for the whole world proletariat in the struggle against war. Karl Liebknecht gave us the immortal slogan: "The main enemy is in our own country." The Socialist workers must apply that slogan even more close to home. The Socialist Party is infested with brazen chauvinists like Waldman and Oneal. It is confused and muddled by pacifists like Hoan, Thomas and Allen, whose dependence on capitalist instrumentalities and mythical methods for the struggle against war, block the way to the only road, the revolutionary struggle against war.

Socialist workers: "The main enemy is in your own party." The struggle against war is the struggle against every ideological aid to the war-makers: social-patriotism, pacifism, retreat from the struggle in the name of unity with social-patriots.

Read Lenin on war.

Note how sternly, ruthlessly, with what intellectual and moral integrity, he sharply differentiated the real opponents of war from the manifold varieties of sham opposition. See with what intransigence he fought off all attempts to gloss over differences on this fundamental question.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Newark branch of the Workers Party is running a theater party at the Civic Repertory theater on both Nov. 28, Thanksgiving day evening, and Nov. 30 matinee. The play is the Theater Union production of "Mother," based on the Gorki novel of that name.

Comrades wishing tickets can write to Lew Merritt, 545 Belmont Ave., Newark. Tickets sell for 30c, 45c, 60c, 75c and $1.00.

"Militant" Socialists and the Bauer-Dan-Zyromski Thesis

The NEW MILITANT of October 5 published a critique of the war program of the Militant Socialists, as embodied in their general program presented at the "Socialist Call" Institute this Fall. Last week we analyzed the war resolution adopted October 12 by the N.E.C. of the S. P. Further discussion of the Militant Socialist program on war is required by the publication in the "Socialist Call" of October 12 of the chauvinist Bauer-Zyromski thesis and a short answer to it signed by the "Call" editorial board and by the Socialist Call reception of the N. E. C. resolution.

The proverbial man from Mars would be able to reconcile the October 12 answer to Bauer-Zyromski with the October 26 editorial and news story on the N. E. C. resolution, only on the assumption that the two issues had been written by entirely different groups. The correct explanation is, however, much more simple: two utterly irreconcilable tendencies still exist side by side within the camp of the Militant Socialists; the weight of tradition and the relationship of forces within the Socialist Party favor the tendency which found expression in the issue of October 26; if there are revolutionary Socialists who naively believed that the advances in theory recorded in the October 12 answer to Bauer-Zyromski were permanently secured, they have been thoroughly disillusioned by the fawning reception accorded on October 26 to the N.E.C. war resolution.

Significance of Answer to Bauer-Zyromski

But if the answer to Bauer-Zyromski represents no permanently assured advance, it undoubtedly marks a new stage in the development of our discussion with Left wing Socialists on the vital questions of war. Hitherto, our discussion has been in terms of opposing to the pacifistic and utterly unrealistic war program of the Militants, the system of ideas on war developed by Lenin. We enter now a new stage because the answer to Bauer-Zyromski accepts a number of the fundamental Leninist ideas on war never previously accepted by the Militants. If, within two short weeks, they attempt to place side by side with these Leninist conceptions the totally different conceptions adopted by the N.E.C. of the S.P., we shall demonstrate to all Socialists who really seek the revolutionary road that the revolutionary struggle against war involves the repudiation of the N.E.C. resolution.

The October 12 answer to Bauer-Zyromski is particularly significant for the following ideas:

Develops Opposition to National Defense

1. As we pointed out in our criticism of the first "Militant" program, it was insufficient to merely say "against national defense"; this had to be implemented by explicit differentiation from the Bauer-Zyromski stripe of "left" chauvinists, by specific denunciation of the doctrine of defense of democracy against fascist countries, by refusal to support the American government in a military alliance with the Soviet Union. All this is now corrected in the answer to Bauer-Zyromski.

Repudiates All Capitalist Instruments

2. It provides the clearest statement ever made by Militant Socialists in repudiation of the League of Nations as necessarily a capitalist instrument. On this point it sharply criticizes the Bauer-Zyromski thesis: "Instead of rejecting the capitalist instruments whose imperialist character the thesis recognizes (League of Nations, democratic governments), the document urges their support . . . (and) completely fails to recognize the only alternative to these imperialist snares—reliance upon independent action of the working class."

For Real Internationalism

3. It sharply and clearly breaks with the Stalinist and social-chauvinist theory of "defending the Soviet Union" by pandering to the foreign diplomacy of the Stalinist bureaucracy. "Just as working class governments can be the only reliable allies of a working class revolution in Germany, so too only a working class government can be a reliable ally of the Soviet Union. Only a working class revolution in one or more capitalist countries can give real defense to the Soviet Union. But if the working class is called upon to 'do its duty' every time the imperialist powers fall out, such a proletarian revolution is permanently impossible . . . to give up rich opportunities for revolution outside of Russia in order to 'defend the Soviet Union' will in the long run mean the defeat both of the Soviet Union and the world revolution."

Drops General Strike Myth, Adopts Leninist Struggle Against War

4. Most important of all is the new conception of how to fight against war. Our analysis of the original "Militant" program particularly criticized their acceptance of the myth of the general strike as a realistic method of struggle; we pointed out that this slogan is alien to Lenin's teachings on war; that it is not complementary to, but a substitute for the Leninist program of turning the imperialist war into civil war. While not explicitly repudiating the theory of the general strike against war, the answer to Bauer-Zyromski actually throws it overboard and moves toward a Leninist position on this fundamental question. It says:

"To utilize a war crisis for proletarian revolution, the working class must from the very beginning of the war go into a position of opposition, must organize the natural resentment that must develop against the ravages of the war, must prepare an offensive against the government through strikes and demonstrations, must foment revolt in the army." And it concludes:

"The capitalist cry to imperialist war must be answered by the working class war of emancipation. Only the working class can, by its own power, overthrow fascism and defend the Soviet Union. The Socialist parties of the world must call upon the working class to answer the threat of war and of fascism with the seizure of power for Socialism."

Many of the questions raised in our original critique of the "Militant" war program remain unanswered. Here, however, we wish to concentrate on one main point: Contrast the principles enunciated by the "Militants" in their answer to Bauer-Zyromski, with the principles of the N.E.C. resolution. What the "Militants" said of the Bauer-Zyromski thesis applies equally to the N.E.C. resolution: "It is precisely because of this basic contradiction between revolutionary intentions (meaning phrases) and advocacy of reactionary practice that the thesis is dangerous unless it is subject to a thorough analysis." But thorough analysis is precisely what the "Militants" did not give the N.E.C. resolution. They whitewashed it instead.

Recall the main points of the N.E.C. resolution. Like the Bauer-Zyromski thesis it parades a "forthright" exposure of imperialist designs and calls for working class vigilance and activity, only to arrive at a reactionary program:

N.E.C. Supports Capitalist "Peace" Instruments

1. It commits the same crime as the Stalinists, the outright chauvinists, and the "left" chauvinists like Bauer-Zyromski, by calling upon the working class to put the struggle against war into the hands of the imperialists themselves, by calling upon the working class to depend on capitalist instruments for peace-making. The N.E.C. resolution does this by calling for the reform of the League of Nations, which is theoretically impossible under capitalism, and also by calling for neutrality legislation. We need not repeat here the critical analysis of this reactionary conception, which we published last week. We quote another paragraph from the N.E.C. resolution, which shows how identical with the chauvinist demand for governmental sanctions is the N.E.C. demand for American governmental action:

"Specifically, we ask the organized trade unions and the unorganized workers to unite in a nationwide effort to force through Congress, in the early days of the coming session, legislation which will assure American neutrality so far as official acts can do so. The present neutrality law should be revised and stiffened; more significantly, it should be extended to cover loans and credits, public or private, to any belligerent."

"Militant" leaders! What is the difference between this appeal to capitalist instruments and that of the European and Stalinist chauvinists?

2. The N.E.C. repeats its usual farrago of pacifist anti-war bunk . . . for a program of war resistance in a war emergency, including refusal to be conscripted for military service" . . . "nothing can finally prevent the waste and slaughter of another conflict save the combination of courageous war resistance by American youth and a united strike against war by organized labor, technicians and professional workers generally."

"Militant" leaders! What has this bombast in common with the doctrines you have signed your name to in your answer to Bauer-Zyromski? "Refusal to be conscripted" would mean, if actually carried out, the slaughter and isolation in concentration camps of the small number who, ready to fight against war on the day it breaks out, should be sent into the army to foment the revolt which the answer to Bauer-Zyromski rightly calls for. The "united strike" against war is the vicious myth of the general strike which blinds workers to the hard, uphill struggle which begins, not with mythical and impossible political strikes against war but with the elementary task of carrying on economic strikes and anti-war propaganda until the ravages of war shall have created the necessary preconditions for raising this struggle to the level of preparation for civil war.

How did the Socialist Call greet this vicious combination of "anti-war" struggle by way of governmental instruments and pacifist "resistance"?

"Militants" Cover Up N.E.C.

It greeted it with a three-bank headline covering half its front page: "Socialists Urge Labor Boycott of Italian Goods." It greeted it with a news-story which characterized the document in these terms: "Launching a nationwide campaign against war and preparations for war." "Sounding anew the Socialist call for mass resistance and opposition to all war"—with not a word in the news-story about the N.E.C. proposals for reforming the League of Nations, seeking neutrality legislation, refusal of conscription and "united strike"! And to finish off, the "Socialist Call" carried an editorial, saying: "Congratulations to the national executive committee of the Socialist Party for a fine job at its quarterly meeting last week-end." Among the things it congratulated the N.E.C.

Mpls. W. P. on Role Of FarmerLaborParty

200 more police, Latimer callously assents.

4. On July 24, Mayor Latimer convenes a secret conference of trade union reactionaries in his reception room, and calls for—what? For higher wages, for full support of the workers in their struggles? NO, he calls for industrial peace!

5. A 35 percent relief increase was taken from the unemployed by the Farmer-Labor administration. Riot squads were twice (Sept. 13, Sept. 27) used against unemployed demonstrations.

6. Latimer proposed 1,200 traffic police, to be taken from the relief rolls. Everyone knows that these 1,200 police would be used as strike-breakers.

Such, in brief, is the record of the Farmer-Labor administration in its first three months of rule—a criminal record of betrayals to its campaign pledges.

SOME SERIOUS QUESTIONS

Arrogant acts such as these FORCE every worker in Minneapolis—and in the state—to ask some serious questions about the whole idea of a Farmer-Labor party, and whether or not its actions will always be directly opposed to its avowed aims.

What, for instance, is the Farmer-Labor policy towards the trade unions? The truth is that the only F.-L. policy is—to get votes from trade unionists!

Whom does the F.-L. party support in the trade union movement? Does it support the progressives who have made real gains for the workers in the past two years? NO! In every instance, the F.-L. party bases itself upon the most reactionary right-wingers—the Cunninghams, the Boscoses, the Lawsons, and all the other Starkeys. This fact has an unmistakable significance for every thinking worker.

What would a real workers' party have done had it, instead of the Farmer-Labor party, been elected to office. A real workers' party would have ousted all reactionaries from appointive offices. A real workers' party would have shaken up the relief administration, put in progressives, retained the 35 percent in relief, and fought for further increases! A real workers' party would refuse to give police protection to union-hating employers, to all such social parasites. Instead, it would have used the police to shut down the plants and keep them shut down until such employers would concede the demands of the trade unions. A real workers' party would never tolerate such butchers as Forester, Ohman and Goergan on the police department. And if the business men objected? A real workers' party would still fearlessly proceed in the above manner, and if necessary, he forced out of office rather than betray the workers into the hands of their mortal enemies, the employers.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

Yes, you working men and women of Minneapolis will say, "That is what we want, that is what we expected the Farmer-Labor party would give us when we elected it to office against the combined efforts of the boss parties. We admit we have been hideously betrayed—but what shall we do?"

On the basis of the betrayals suffered by you at the hands of the Farmer-Labor party, you must withdraw from that party and join the Workers Party of the United States—the only party today that, work for which they are unfitted. Anita Brenner, chairman of the Committee on Cuba of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, will speak on the Cuban terror at a meeting of the N.P.L.D., November 13, at the headquarters of Local 48, I.L.G. W.U., 231 West 14th Street.

At the request of the National Committee for Amnesty, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense is rallying American labor organizations to the support of the Cuban working class organizations, which can now exist only illegally. Not a single political or trade union headquarters is permitted to open in Cuba.

The newly organized Labor and Socialist Defense Committee, of which Norman Thomas is chairman, in response to information forwarded to them by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, has sent letters of protest to President Mendieta of Cuba, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and American Ambassador Jefferson Caffery, and has asked the Non-Partisan Labor Defense to convey to the Cuban Amnesty Committee, "our warmest fraternal greetings and sincere hope that success will soon come to our united efforts."

The Cuban Amnesty Committee has asked the Non-Partisan Labor Defense to initiate a broad united front movement of American labor organizations to aid the Cuban workers.

both in theory and practice, shows that it can answer your needs and your demands. If you are not yet convinced of the necessity for this action, we say: Stay in the Farmer-Labor party and seriously and conscientiously work within its ranks to make it function for the workers. It is our studied opinion that such work is hopeless, is doomed to failure. All history mocks at the idea of a reformist party winning any permanent gains for the workers. But if you still feel the need of attempting such a fight, make the attempt. The Workers Party of the U. S. will aid you in every possible way.

THE DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES of the Workers Party of the United States has this to say about the Farmer-Labor Party and all such reformist parties:

"In the period of capitalist decline, so-called reformist parties cannot pretend to the progressive role they have played decades ago. Political and economic concessions can now be wrested from the capitalist class only by means of the most resolute and militant class struggle. Besides, any party which purports to represent two or more classes on an equal footing, or to direct its appeals to 'all classes' is essentially a middle class party doomed to irresolution and surrender to the big capitalists in every decisive test."

Another dangerous aspect of middle class reform movements, in the present period, is the fact that they easily fall prey to those demagogic appeals, chavivistic slogans and reactionary ideas of class harmony which are the hallmark of the fascist movement. The revolutionary party will grow by theory and historical example, and above all by its own activities that the actual consequences of the policies of reform movements, here as in all other countries, are directly opposed to their avowed aims, that they act to preserve capitalism, and hence are inimical to the interests of the workers."

BUILD THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

There are several other parties and individuals currying political favor among the workers in Minneapolis. For the most part, they play, and have played a sorry role. The absolutely unprincipled Communist Party (Stalinists) deserves contempt. Our party literature has already dealt fully and adequately with the fundamental errors and the history of this group. It is enough to remind serious workers that the Stalinists have led the workers in China, England, Germany, and Spain to defeats, not to victories. Today they are pursuing a fatal policy in France. In Minneapolis during the last election campaign, this group attacked everyone indiscriminately, including the editor of the New Internationalist, was scheduled to speak, were frustrated by the organized campaign of intimidation which the Chamber of Commerce and its satellites have organized against the Workers Party in Davenport. Significantly enough, neither the Socialist Party nor the Communist Party find any particular difficulty in securing public halls for their meetings. The Workers Party, on the contrary, due particularly to its revolutionary activity among the unemployed in the past, has been put on the reactionary blacklist. Plans were laid at a branch meeting attended by Shachtman for a campaign, to extend beyond Davenport if necessary, to force the local authorities and other reactionary forces to back down from their position and make it possible for the W.P. to enjoy the same facilities now freely at the disposal of other organizations.

ALBERT LEA, Minn.: A splendid meeting of almost 100 workers was Farmer-Labor party. Today it has made a right-about-face and meekly seeks admission into the—Farmer-Labor party! Further than that, it would seek to give us a national Farmer-Labor party. Instead of one Latimer, it would give the workers in the United States a hundred such betrayers. Actually today the Stalinists stand on many points at the RIGHT of the Farmer-Labor and the Socialist parties.

The Socialist party, both here and on an international plane, carries out on a large scale all the fundamental errors of the Farmer-Labor party. It advocates class collaboration, betrays colonial revolts, supports imperialist war, suppresses revolutionary struggles of the workers, and conducts no struggle against the reactionaries in the trade union movement. Even more recently than the Farmer-Labor betrayal at the Flour City plant, the Socialist-led city government of Milwaukee has used the police to attack strikers and to arrest strike leaders.

It is a hopeless task to remove the unscrupulous bureaucracies controlling the Socialist and Communist parties in all countries. We call upon the present supporters of these parties to re-study the recent history of the world Stalinist and Socialist regimes in the light of the writings of Marx and Lenin, and to come over to the only revolutionary international group in this country, the Workers Party of the United States.

We say again, as we said in our pre-election statement:

Minneapolis workers, in joint and common action with the workers in the rest of the state and nation, must build their own revolutionary party. The Workers Party of the United States submits (in pamphlet form) the PROGRAM AND PRINCIPLES, AND WHICH PARTY FOR THE AMERICAN WORKERS) its program to all working men and women, and to the working class youth. We are confident that it fits the needs of the working class. It can be made a living thing and reach fulfillment only through militant struggle.

held in this small community with comrade Max Shachtman speaking on the Italo-Ethiopian war and the threat of a world war. The audience, intensely interested throughout the lecture and the question period, met in the hall of the Independent Union of All Workers, and at the end contributed generously to the Workers Party fund. It is also gratifying to report that the County Committee of the Farmer-Labor party postponed its regular meeting downstairs to attend the Shachtman meeting in a body. The local W.P. is composed of the most militant and leading elements of the union in whose hall, generously donated for the occasion, the meeting was held. Southern Minnesota promises to become one of the W.P.'s strongest positions.

AUSTIN, Minn.: Under the chairmanship of one of the leaders of the famous strike against the Hormel packing plant, several dozen workers gathered in Firemen's Hall to hear Max Shachtman present the position of the Workers Party on the danger of a new world war. The party branch here is composed mainly of packing house workers and leading union militants, with every prospect of increasing its already substantial strength in the immediate future.

Comintern Prepares Dissolution of Y. C. L.; To Change It into Innocuous Organization

By JOSEPH CARTER

The Young Communist International has decided to dissolve itself! Such is the meaning of the report of the Sixth Congress of the Y.C.I. recently held in Moscow given by Gil Green, national secretary of the Young Communist League of the United States and member of the Executive Committee of the Comintern.

The Daily Worker (Nov. 2, 1935) informs us:

"Asked what new developments in the life of the Young Communist League would result from the Sixth Congress, Comrade Green stated:

"In the first place, the Congress established a new policy which proposes the reconstruction of the present Y.C.L. into a non-party mass organization which while clearly supporting a socialist goal will not take a position on how socialism is to be concretely accomplished, thus opening the way for organic unity with the Young People's Socialist League in all countries."

Reconstruction? Organizational! It means a fusion of the Y.C.L. and its innumerable youth clubs with the Y.P.S.L. and the countless liberal and semi-radical youth organizations which favor "a new social order" but are "vague" on how it can "be concretely accomplished." In a word, the conversion of the American Youth Congress into a membership organization—an "American Youth League!"

Politically, it signifies capitulation to the right centrist wing of social democracy, an explicit disavowal of the conception of a revolutionary youth movement established by the early congresses of the Comintern and Y.C.I. and an admission of failure and bankruptcy.

However, this "new policy"—as all organizational lines—results from basic political conceptions. In this case the politics underlying the new course were adopted by the Seventh Congress of the Comintern. In all essentials the decisions of the congress are identical with the position of the right centrists of the Second International. Theodore Dan of the Russian Menshevik party, Otto Bauer of the Austrian Social Democratic Party, Jean Zyromski and Amedeo Dunois of the French Socialist Party. (Compare their theses on "Socialism and the War Danger"—Socialist Call, Oct. 12, 1935—with the decisions of the Seventh Congress. It is worth noting that the October issue of the "Communist," official organ of the American C.P., reprints these theses.)

Social Patriotic Organic Unity

Given this basic agreement between the social-patriots, is it not logical that the same congress should decide in favor of "organic unity"? And now, in order to hasten this process, the Y.C.I. proposes organic unity with the Young Socialist International; and prepares itself by "reconstruction": abandonment in theory what it long ago deserted in practice, the revolutionary road to socialism.

What will this new organization offer as the solution of imperialist war, of Fascism, of capitalism? Not the revolutionary struggle for socialism, but a medley of pacifist and social-patriotic claptrap!

This at a time when large sections of the Young Socialist International are taking the road of revolutionary Marxism! As they move to the left, away from reformism and social-patriotism, the Stalinists openly accept basic social democratic conceptions and offer organic unity on a program which omits the quintessential of Marxism: the road to socialism.

In France they have prepared the road for organic unity by directing the expulsion of the revolutionary Socialists of the Seine district who fought against social-patriotism. (Two leaders of the Y.C.I. were mission!)

sent to France with that as their

In Belgium, among the Young Socialist Guard, they failed to make any impression. The leader of the Revolutionary Socialist Action group, which is very influential in the organization of young Socialists, has recently through its secretary, Walter Dauge, openly pledged solidarity with the expelled French youth in their struggle against social-patriotism.

In the United States the Young People's Socialist League, particularly on the question of war, is far to the left, that is, closer to revolutionary Marxism, than the Young Communist League. At the American Youth Congress held early this year in Detroit, the Y.P.S.L. together with the Spartacus Youth League fought against the Stalinist youth (Y.C.L. and N.S.L.) in favor of a resolution opposing the United States government in any war that it may undertake. (The Stalinists were against this resolution because of its meaning in case of a military alliance between the United States and the Soviet Union!)

Far more striking is the manifesto issued by the national office of the Y.P.S.L. for International Socialist Youth Week, October 1 to

Used as Bait to Lure Yipsels into Social-Patriotic Organic Unity

7 (Socialist Call, Sept. 21, 1935.)

The manifesto scores pacifism, the social-patriotism of the Communist International and, what is of special significance, the "social patriotism" wherever it exists in the Socialist movement." Though not a clear statement of revolutionary, it marks a great stride forward in that direction.

Manifesto of Yipsels

To quote the salient points: "Pacifists who hold out the prospect of peace through arbitration or disarmament confuse and weaken the fight of the working class against war. Only the struggle of the workers of each country against their own war-making capitalist class can delay the impending conflict. Only the conquest of power by the working masses, and the destruction of capitalism can bring permanent peace to the world."

"At this most critical time, when a brief period for the mobilization of the labor movement against all capitalist war yet remains, we witness the spectacle of the Communist International holding its seventh congress and adopting a position identical with that of the social-patriots of 1914. To support 'democratic' governments against fascist governments, to refuse to take part in the revolutionary struggle against those imperialists who happen to be allied with the Soviet Union, to speak of 'progressive' wars fought by the capitalist governments in this day of imperialism is to desert even the pretense of being a revolutionary movement.

"We oppose all imperialist war. We agree with the St. Louis Declaration of the Socialist Party in 1917 that the only war that justifies the workers taking up arms is to free the working class from the chains of capitalism."

"Our task is to educate the entire membership of the League to understand the Socialist position on war and to train them to better carry on our anti-war activity. As part of such education and training must be a merciless criticism of pacifism and social-patriotism wherever it exists in the Socialist movement."

This is new language for the young Socialists. The Y.P.S.L. however, has never defined what it means by "conquest of power." A major task in the education of the young Socialists is precisely in the significance and form of the revolutionary road to socialism. On the question of war, it is essential that simultaneous with the clarifications of the general problems which it poses, the immediate practical issues be understood and coped with. These include the support of colonial and semi-colonial peoples in their war against imperialism (as in the case of Ethiopia today), the question of sanctions, "neutrality," and what constitutes a platform for the united front against war. In practice this will lead to a closer collaboration of the Y.P.S.L. and the S.Y.L.

The new course of the Young Communist League will not be welcomed by the militant young Socialists: except as another proof of Stalinist bankruptcy!

How will it be met by the members of the Y.C.L. who were never consulted prior to the adoption of the policy and are now presented with an accomplished fact—and asked "to discuss"? In so far as they have trained at all it has been the barracks training of soldiers receiving orders from above. Most of the young workers who enter the Y.C.L. to participate in the revolutionary labor movement reply to these orders by, after a few months stay, leaving the Y.C.L. Others remain "faithful" soldiers. Still others raise questions or dissent from the order and are expelled, usually for "Trotskyism."

However, the abrupt turn of the Young Communist International will undoubtedly awaken many of the young Stalinists out of their uncritical position. They will be compelled to re-evaluate the program they formerly accepted and be more receptive to revolutionary Marxism, the program of the Workers Party and the Spartacus Youth League.

The growing desire among the youth for revolutionary unity which is being distorted by the Young Communist International must be utilized for the genuine revolutionary movement. The turn to the right of the Y.C.I. as well as the turn to the left of the Y.P.S.L. present the Spartacus Youth League with exceptionally favorable conditions for presenting its program of revolutionary Marxism as the basis for the regroupment and unity of the militant youth in the struggle against imperialist war, Fascism and capitalism and for working class emancipation.

A Stalinist Adventure in Gutter Journalism In the Footsteps of Hearst

The stench of the Chicago stockyards is notorious. Now an even more malodorous institution is issuing its products from there. We refer to the "People's Press," the tabloid journal that made its debut last week.

This "new jazzy tab," as it so glibly dubs itself, is the latest propaganda sheet emanating from the Stalinist camp. Its financial backing is reported to have come from sources and sympathizers. In any case, its editorial board headed by Frank Palmer of the Federated Press, long a Stalinist stooge, and including Carl Haessler, Harvey O'Connor, Arthur Kallet and James Waterman Wise is thoroughly Stalinized.

The People's Press is designed to be a national weekly for the masses. Its avowed editorial policy is "to out-Hearst Hearst." Having failed to win any masses anywhere by its caricature of proletarian policy during the adventurous course of the late unlamented third period, the Stalinists and their agents are now trying to seduce the masses by imitating the worst features of bourgeois journalism.

New Low for Gutter Journalism

The reasoning behind such a policy is clear. The Daily Worker has failed to gain mass support. Hearst, however, has built up tremendous mass circulations by pandering to the most backward prejudices and depraved tastes of the people. If we want to reach the masses and win them away from Hearst, we must compete with him on his own level, beat him at his own game. While "the people" consume columns of scandal, we, like Hearst, will feed them propaganda. A different kind, no doubt, but in the same manner.

The result is a rag which takes its place among the worst in gutter journalism. The first issue of the People's Press is littered with all the filth of the decadent bourgeois press from the scandal shops of the Broadway columnists to the slanderous slops of Hearst's Sunday supplements. Only people with strong stomachs or already depraved appetites will be able to digest it without revulsion.

Paranoiac Analysis

The topmost of four photographs on the front cover illustrates the lead story captioned: "Il Duce Diseased, Insane." Turning to page 3 for details, we learn that Mussolini contracted syphilis in his youth and twenty years later developed parais and delusions of grandeur. These paranoiac dreams drove him to imitate Caesar; to become dictator of Italy; and to attempt the conquest of Ethiopia. According to this theory of history, Il Duce is presumably bringing "syphilisation" to the Ethiopians.

Such a story can only make one impression upon the mind of an unenlightened person: namely, that the Ethiopian adventure is not the inevitable outcome of imperialist policy, but the wild dream of a madman. If Mussolini had never had syphilis (if indeed he has it), the course of Italian history would have been totally different. There would have been no Fascist dictatorship and no Ethiopian war.

Even more. If Mussolini alone is responsible for the Ethiopian war, what need is there for organized mass action against him? The quickest and easiest way to stop the war and overthrow Fascism would be to assassinate Mussolini. Such are the fruits of political opportunism and adventurism.

That is by no means the lowest level to which the Mussolini story descends. A headline alongside a picture of Duce's little daughter asks if she also is "Tainted?..." Even the vilest tabloid would think twice before dragging a baby into so filthy a mess. But these pen-prostitutes are ready for anything.

Bathing Beauties, Scandals, Filth

The second photograph on the first page shows a mother with her third set of identical twins. May we suggest that these identical twins be called "Fascism" and "social-fascism" in honor of Stalin, who also, we have recently been informed, loves his mother.

The third set of photographs copies Hearst with his paramour, Marion Davies. On page 2, no less a personage than editor Palmer himself discusses the question: "Is W. R. Hearst coming back to the Missus?" Surely, a vital question to the jobless, poverty-stricken, disoriented people of the United States.

And so it goes throughout the pages of this sheet. A tribute to that sterling champion of "the people," Senator Norris, on his retirement; photos of Jimmy Walker and his consort, bathing beauties, movie stars, and even a 16-year-old girl who wishes to sell herself to a middle-aged man. Sandwiched in between are miscellaneous items on the depression, on the lack of relief, and inevitably an article by Anna Louise Strong from Moscow on how "The Reds Conquer the Arctic." Not a word, however, yet about the Eskimo soviets.

The Daily Worker Applauds

What does the Daily Worker, the official organ of the Communist party of the U. S. have to say about this rag? We quote verbatim and in its entirety its editorial greeting the appearance of its esteemed contemporary.

"POSSIBILITIES"

"Much comment has been caused by the appearance of the first issue of a weekly tabloid, the People's Press."

"There is great need for the kind of paper the group publishing it seems to be striving to produce. With Frank Palmer, Arthur Kallet, James Waterman Wise, Corliss Lamont, Harvey O'Connor and other able staff members, they should be able to produce just what they want."

"We view this publication as a friendly paper. The announcement, however, that the People's Press is to be 'non-party and non-labor' leaves a question unanswered. Failure to state its position sharply for a Labor Party is a weakness, which we submit should be corrected."

"Meanwhile, giving a helping hand where we can, we welcome this newcomer into the publishing field."

The Daily Worker has one single criticism of the "People's Press." It does not come out for a Labor Party!

What should be said of the editors of so foul a paper? They are people without conscience, without shame, and without scruples, who have no respect for themselves and even less for the people for whom they publish their paper. What brazen contempt for the working men and women of this country does such a sheet exhibit! Instead of undertaking the task of enlightening the masses, who are today dependent upon the capitalist press for their sources of information, these cynical gentlemen feed them the same garbage as Hearst and MacFadden. They evidently look upon "the people" as unreasoning brutes who cannot be told the truth about the society they live in straightforwardly and simply, but must be dragged first and then given injections of propaganda on the sly.

Truly a Stinking Corpse

What about a party that gives such a sheet its blessing? We have said time and again: the Stalinist party is nothing but a stinking corpse, which spreads poison throughout the labor movement. The People's Press, the offspring of its new policy, is another evidence of Stalinist degeneration. The pestilential source of corruption must be removed from the ranks of the working class. Let every self-respecting worker and intellectual raise his voice in protest against this infamous sheet.

We do not share the contempt of the editors of the People's Press and their Stalinist supporters for the working men and women of the United States. We believe that they want to know the truth about the world they inhabit, can hear it, understand it, and assimilate it without benefit of the worst vices of bourgeois journalism. We further believe that they are healthy-minded enough to detect the odor of decay which issues from this package of filth and will throw it into the gutter where it belongs.

BULLETIN

Five members of the Lenin Club of South Africa, adherents of the Fourth International, have been arrested and are now facing trial. They spoke on the question of the Native Bills. The charges have not yet been enunciated. Since the meeting was orderly, it appears they may be tried for sedition.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa.—The Italo-Abyssinian conflict continues to be the most important issue facing the South African proletariat. Because of our situation we are directly affected by any conflict on the African continent. All our propaganda at present is therefore centered around this question.

Undoubtedly the South African workers and especially the native and colored workers are prepared in a militant fashion to demonstrate their solidarity with the Ethiopian people. Recently the Stevedores and Dock Workers Union of Cape Town passed a resolution to refuse to handle any goods destined for Italian East Africa. The Communist League immediately issued a special edition of the Workers Voice in support of the dock workers. A thousand of these were distributed free in the working class areas. Ours was the first organization to come out in support of the dockers' action.

The workers of Luderitz took similar action and refused to load any Italian vessel. The police immediately offered them the alternative of going back to work or arrest. The majority of the workers went back but a number preferred to go to prison. The Communist League sent the following telegram to the Luderitz workers:

"Communist League congratulates you on magnificent stand. Condemn police action."

We are preparing for an organized protest against the terrorist action of the police.

Sabotage Workers Action

In face of the militant mood of the workers, the stand taken by the so-called working class parties is indicative of the demoralizing influence which these parties have on the South African workers' movement. The South African Labor Party has not uttered one word on the matter. The Communist Party, like the Stalinists everywhere, is preparing to lead the workers on the road of social-patriotism. Recently the Stalinist controlled League Against War and Fascism, held a

French C.P. Pleads with Laval to Jail the Fascists

Stalinists Outraged by Fascist Insistence on "Right of Insurrection"; See Salvation in "Purification of Police Force"

By H. F. ROBERTS

"Let no one try to intimidate us. At the present time it is insurrection which is legal."

"Insurrection is the most sacred duty!"

The voices speaking are those of French Fascists. In the mouths of revolutionary workers what meaning these words could have! But how do the French Stalinists react to these lines?

L'Humanite quotes them (Oct. 24) and adds:

"As incredible as it seems, this declaration has not been made a case for the courts."

Incredible as it seems! Here is another Fascist quotation:

"The best way of succeeding is through violence. We will mobilize the tractors and use them as tanks."

Does L'Humanite remark, perchance, that the only thing wrong with these words is that they come from a Fascist instead of from the leaders of the French proletariat?

No, friends, that would be outright counter-revolution. "Laval did not see in it (the Fascist declaration) a plot against the state. No prosecution took place."

Demand "Arrest" of Fascist!

The Stalinists want Laval to arrest de La Rocque. They want him to bring these naughty Fascists plotting against the state into the courts of the French bourgeoisie. And why not? Pick up another copy of L'Humanite. It is the issue of Oct. 23. Once again on the menace of a Fascist coup d'etat. What has Vaillant-Couturier to say?

"Once again our party, in the face of this plot against the safety of the state, conceived by M. Laval, declares itself ready to throw all its forces alongside of those, ALL THOSE (emphasis in original—H.F.R.) who are determined to repulse this plot and maintain order."

A little further on: "Mass action must obtain the liquidation of the Fascist League and the arrest of their leaders."

How?

"Vigilance. Coolness. Discipline. Union of all those who wish to defend the Republic!"

Such are the Stalinist slogans. Let the incredulous pick up any current issue of the leading Stalinist organ outside of Moscow and any day he can read the same kind of fool drivel.

Decree Laws—Against Workers

On Oct. 23 Laval issued a series of decree laws, already dealt with in a previous article in these columns, ostensibly aimed at the Fascist leagues. These decrees were aimed at and will be used against the workers. They were issued on that particular date because Laval had to give Herriot something with which to come before the Radical Socialist party congress. This was (Continued on Page 2)

CONFIRMED!

Times Reporter Says News- men Get No News at All

Harold Denny, New York Times correspondent in Harar, Ethiopia, has indirectly confirmed the statement in the NEW MILITANT two weeks ago that all news from Ethiopia is censored, tampered with, inspired and even directly written by Mussolini's agents.

After speaking about a wholesale exodus of "disappointed" war correspondents and camera men from Ethiopia, Denny said: "one of the greatest and most expensive flops in journalistic and newsreel history," Denny states the reasons for their departure in the New York Times, Sunday, Nov. 10:

"The reason is the almost complete absence of reliable news within the country and the inability to get even near the scene of fighting."

"The causes of this situation are first, the congenital distrust of whites, partly due to the fear that the whites might eventually dominate the country like the rest of Africa and due to the shady character of many of those from the Near East who have come here in times past seeking fortunes. United with all this is the fear of spies and we all are suspect."

"Second . . . the great anxiety that foreigners might be killed."

"In Harar, which is the nearest place to the front we are now allowed to penetrate, the activities of correspondents and camera men are rigorously circumscribed. The latter are not even permitted to take the most innocent pictures—and Harar is 200 miles from the nearest fighting, if any."

"So . . .," Denny concludes, "treated very courteously by all classes except for an infrequent scowl or epithet or even a rare stone thrown at our auto—we sit waiting for the big story which may never happen and which we probably will not be permitted to see if it does."

Here we have it from a reliable correspondent by obvious implication that news from the Ethiopian side is either the brain-child of some impatient, ambitious reporter or cooked up in the headquarters of the Italian General Staff.

It seems in Ethiopia too, no news is good news.

Overflow Meeting Backs 574

Biggest 'Peacetime' Gathering Roars Complete Solidarity

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—The overflow of the old-line, reactionary craft-union A. F. of L. bureaucrats against the progressive, militant leadership of the general drivers union, Local 574, was met this evening by a mass meeting in which the machinations of Meyer Lewis, personal representative of William Green were exposed. The mass meeting, held in Local 574's hall, was attended by almost four thousand workers—accommodated on two floors and outside of the hall by means of a loud speaker—and was addressed by numerous leaders in the labor labor movement.

Bill Brown Chairman

The chairman of the meeting, Bill Brown, president of the union, opened the meeting by declaring that Green-Lewis and Company had formed a "united front with the Citizens Alliance in order to break up everything 574 had gained for its members. Lewis says that Minneapolis is the worst spot in the United States. It is—for Citizens Alliance. But it is now the best place for the workers. Before 574 went on strike in 1934, Minneapolis was the worst place for the workers. 574 changed the picture. Now, whom do the workers go to when they are in trouble? Only one place, to 574. To whom do the Citizens Alliance go to when they are in trouble? Why to the corrupt and reactionary leadership of the A. F. of L."

Brown then introduced Ruben Latz, business agent of the Dry Cleaners Union. Lewis had announced the day before that this union had been purged of its Communist leadership. The next day, Lewis announced that the federal charter of the Dry Cleaners Union had been revoked.

Speech of Ruben Latz

"We have the honor to be purged," Latz began. "We told Lewis that his methods were not correct. He came to our executive committee and threatened to revoke our charter unless we severed all relations with 574. We said to him, 'We have no authority to do the things you demand. We represent the workers in our union, and we carry out their decisions. We will gladly permit you to appear before the members. They will decide, and we shall abide by their decisions.' But, no, Lewis would not appear before the workers. He threatened us in many ways, and said, 'I bring to you a mandate by virtue of the authority vested in me by the workers.'"

Latest Facts on Mpls.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 10.—Following are the important developments of the week:

Three representatives of International unions have arrived and joined forces with Lewis.

The Laundry Workers Local charter has been revoked; the Laundry Workers have issued an appeal to labor to back 574.

Lewis has appeared before a number of business men's clubs, and various open-shop groups seeking support for his campaign.

William Green issued a statement in Washington denying that the Minneapolis "red purge" was part of a national drive to rid the federation of "reds." "The drive possesses only local significance," he said.

The Minnesota Leader (state organ of the Farmer-Labor party) came out with a front-page article denouncing Lewis' tactics and linking Lewis with an attempt on the part of the two old capitalist parties to break up the third-party movement in Minnesota.

The Minneapolis Labor Review (organ of the Central Labor Union) completely ignored Lewis' presence in town, saying not one word about him or his campaign.

T. E. Cunningham, president of the State federation of labor, denied that he knew anything of the plans of Lewis, and that he himself would disapprove any attempt to oust progressive trade unionists fighting for industrial unionism.

Denial by six members of the Teamster's Joint Council (which unions in Minneapolis, held Friday night at Local 574's hall, pledged solidarity against the splitting tactics of Meyer Lewis, Green and Tobin.

A great overflow mass meeting of the members of the progressive unions in Minneapolis, held Friday night at Local 574's hall, pledged solidarity against the splitting tactics of Meyer Lewis, Green and Tobin.

V. Dunne Lashes Fakerdom Before Mpls. Mass Meeting

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—As workers are divided into small, weak craft unions. The workers, sensing this fact, have entered into the A. F. of L. hoping that it would provide them with the industrial form of organization. They found that the craft structure of the A. F. of L. stood in the way. Ten to fifteen million workers stand ready to be organized—but they want industrial unions so they can strike back effectively at their exploiters.

Drive for Industrial Unionism

"Now some union leaders have felt this pressure coming from the workers—John L. Lewis, Dubinsky, etc. These men understand that the workers are determined to drive forward to real industrial unionism. Therefore they have brought the issue into the open because they are interested in maintaining their positions in the unions. This split has loomed up, like a death bell, the fate of Green, Hutchison, and other arch-reactionary craft-union fakers. They understand that their life in the organized labor movement is limited to months unless they can tear the unions apart, terrorize the workers, and strike fear into all of those who are making the drive for industrial unionism."

"At the last convention they decided that they would have to strike and strike fast. They decided to throw their whole resources into the battle. They decided, also, that they had to make a spectacular start—to begin with a bang. They had to write in letters of fire across the sky that it meant death to any worker who dared raise his voice against them."

F.-L. Paper Trenches Bill Green

Laundry Workers Solid Despite Revocation of Charter

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 10.—Almost two weeks have passed since William Green's representative, Meyer Lewis, began to the accompaniment of newspaper headlines his Holy War against the progressives in the Minneapolis trade union movement. To date, Lewis can record a discouraging lack of progress in his efforts to "purge" the labor movement. Accompanied only by the applause of the Citizens Alliance and the boss press, the representative of Mr. Green announced late yesterday that his plans for advancing the campaign against "communist leadership in Minneapolis trade unions" would be taken up with leaders of the State Federation of Labor. He said he expected the A. F. of L. to send other representatives to Minneapolis to take part in the drive.

Reasons for Drive Clear

The main reasons behind this latest vile attempt to split up and cripple the local trade union movement are becoming increasingly clear to the members of Minneapolis trade unions. At 574's mass meeting, these reasons were driven home by speaker after speaker.

First, the Minneapolis labor movement hasn't lost a strike in two years, since Local 574 first came on the scene. This is the only large city in the country with such a clean and magnificent record of labor victories. The dramatic struggles waged in this section have captured the imagination of the masses of American workers, and they are demanding that their unions follow out the same militant class-struggle policies that have proved so successful here. This drive against militant leadership in unions is planned by the Greens to save their jobs.

Secondly, Minnesota is the only state that has broken politically with the two old boss parties and has built up an independent political party. The mass base for the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party lies in the trade union movement, and especially in the Minneapolis unions. It has been pointed out that William Green is a Republican wheel-horse working together with Daniel Tobin and other Democratic politicians on the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. to make a drive on Minnesota on behalf of the old capitalist parties for the coming elections. They know that the best way to do this is to split the labor movement, to weaken it by driving from its ranks the most militant and devoted fighters.

Laundry Workers Stick to 574

On Thursday, Lewis revoked the charter of the Dry Cleaners Local No. 18005, after he and H. A. Bradley, president of the national council of petroleum workers had earlier given a clean bill of health to the Gasoline Station Operators Local No. 18902, which has just negotiated a contract with local employers.

Ruben Latz, business agent of the dry cleaners locals No. 18005 and No. 183 of the Cleaners and Dyers, stated that "we are not communists. The reason for this action is our friendship with 574." Norman Carle, chairman of the executive board of the Laundry Workers, issued a vigorous statement denouncing Lewis, saying:

"Lewis has demanded that we repudiate Local 574. This we flatly refused to do because 574 has been one of our most valuable friends and allies. We consider that they have contributed mightily to organized labor in Minneapolis, and that they are deserving of full support in their effort to win reinstatement in the A. F. of L. We believe that the attack by Meyer Lewis upon 574 is absolutely unjustified and clearly detrimental to the interest of Minneapolis workers. We therefore refuse to become a party to any such disruptive program. Our union was organized under the A. F. of L. and it is our desire to remain a part of that body, but we will not permit ourselves to be stripped of all union principles to do so."

According to Latz, the Laundry Workers Union will continue to (Continued on Page 4)

To the Soldiers and Youth of Italy!

MANIFESTO OF THE ITALIAN BOLSHEVIK-LENINISTS

Many of you have fallen in Africa; many more will suffer the same fate. You were told this was no war but merely an expedition, an excursion, that would lead to land, glory, and prosperity. What lies!

Forty years ago they told your fathers the same lies. They repeated them during the Tripolitan war in 1911, and during the World War of 1915-1918, which cost Italy 600,000 men. After forty years of suffering, misery, privation, and martyrdom, the Italian ruling classes have nothing to offer you, our sons and brothers, but to send you to the equator to die of fever, sunstroke, and thirst; to send you against a people who have done you no harm; a people who are themselves struggling to wrest a living from their barren lands.

Don't answer as the Fascists have taught you, "Me no frogo" (I don't give a damn). Your masters and exploiters who have sent you to die in Africa don't give a damn for your lives; they are only worried about their profits. Is it really necessary to kill one another for the profit of these gentlemen back home who are flaunting the fortunes they have amassed at your expense, at our expense?

The band of demagogues, swindlers and murderers, who alone stand to gain by this war that is killing you, say that Italy is too small for our people, that she must have a place in the sun. But we are not poor because our sun is poor, or because our land is poor. Take the largest empire in the world, England, of which you hear so much these days. What is the fate of the peasants of this empire? What is the fate of our brothers, the English workers? They are as exploited and poverty stricken as we. Just the other day the Welsh miners went on a hunger strike in the bottom of their mine, risking their lives for a little wage increase. The cause of our misery is this system of robbery and exploitation founded on profits, the capitalist system. Even "Il Duce," that unscrupulous old demagogue, capable of any deceit, is forced to proclaim that the cause of our poverty is the capitalist system. But what then?

Why do we have Fascism? The capitalist system is based upon robbery, upon exploitation of the workers, upon private property. It is to defend this system of robbery and exploitation that Mussolini lends his support to your exploiters, the manufacturers, the landowners, the bankers, those who are now sending you to die in Africa. You have been deceived with talk of collaboration and equality between those who work and those who live by the work of others. The Fascist corporations are a lie. There is not and cannot be equality or collaboration between exploiters and exploited. The Fascist state is an exploiters' state. The Socialists and Communists, those whom Mussolini has killed, whom "Il Duce" has persecuted, imprisoned and tortured, fight for the workers' state.

Enough of Division Among the Workers. Let Us Unite, Unite Yourselves with All Peoples Who Suffer and Toil.

You have been given arms to kill Negroes who are as poor and miserable as we. Don't give up your arms! Judgment day has sounded for the real enemies of the Italian people. These enemies are not three thousand miles away in the middle of Africa, they are not the Ethiopian people; these enemies are at home, in Italy; they are the wealthy men, the big landowners, the bankers, the manufacturers, all those who live by our sweat, the Fascist leaders, Il Duce and his band of swindlers and crooks; all the profiteers of the royal and military circles. In Italy, not in Abyssinia, there is work to be done, a rotten system to be cleaned up!

Mussolini has told his bandit rivals that he isn't "collecting debts." And we? Are we to collect Ethiopian bullets for the Italian capitalists? We want a "place in the sun," but that place is not in Africa; it is in Italy that we must win it.

Instead of going to your death in the arid mountains of Africa we say: Look for your land at home, in Italy. Don't take the land from the poor Ethiopians—and may they keep it from being taken. Take the land from the nobles, counts and dukes and landowners of Italy; the land that you and your fathers worked so that these nobles could lead a merry life in the cities.

Before trying to liberate the Abyssinian slaves we must abolish our own slave system. Don't you know that the Ethiopian slaves, those that still exist, are far better off than you? The Ethiopian slave is kept and fed by his master. And we? We belong to our masters, who can just as well decide our fate. But when we are no longer any use to them in making profits they throw us out in the street; they throw us away like old clothes. They are sending you to people the Ethiopian deserts with corpses in order to get rid of you. That is "the place in the sun" you are offered.

No, we cannot bring civilization and liberty to others as long as we tolerate this barbarous slave system, the capitalist system and its watchdog Fascism, among ourselves.

Throw the de Bonos, Cianos, and the Grazianis, that whole bloody band into the sea; fraternize with the Abyssinian soldiers; return from Africa and don't give up your arms.

There is another, a far fairer and more glorious war to fight, the only just war, the war of the working people against their tyrants, against their exploiters, the war of liberation of the Italian people from capitalist tyranny and for the new society, the workers' state, the socialist society.

Soldiers and youth of Piedmont, of Lombardy, of Apulia, of the Isles, follow the example of the Abyssinian people, these people whom they call "savages." Yes, they have shown you they know how to fight "savagely" for their liberty, their land, their independence. Learn from these "savages"; fight for your liberty; turn your guns against your oppressors, fight for your land and your bread; liberate Italy by liberating yourselves from capitalism.

Enough of singing "Glovezza," this song of slavery and death. Learn "Bandiera Rossa," the song of your fathers, the song that makes your exploiters, your real enemies, the generals, the manufacturers and the big landowners tremble with fright.

With "Bandiera Rossa" you will conquer, you, working class Italy, will conquer.

In Italy you will seize the land. In Italy you will take the factories. Where your fathers and brothers died in 1920 through weakness, ignorance and through treacherous leaders, you will succeed.

Do you believe that you will not be able to govern alone? Form your committees of workers and peasants, your soldiers committees. A government of workers, peasants and soldiers committees will know better how to govern than a state composed of Fascist degenerates living on the working people and guarding the capitalist system.

Down with Fascism, the exploiters' state!

Down with Mussolini, traitor to socialism and to the Italian people; the lackey of the bankers; the oppressor of the workers and poor peasants!

Down with the monarchy and its camarilla!

Down with the Imperialist War in Africa; Long Live the Civil War in Italy! Long Live the Republic of Workers, Peasants and Soldiers! Councils of Italy!

The Liberty League's committee of corporation lawyers offers: "It and when any American citizen, however humble, is without means to defend his constitutional rights in a court of justice, one or more of these lawyers will, without compensation from any source, defend the right of the individual, and in this way carry out, in the most effective way, their oath to support maintain and defend the Constitution." . . . Shachtman Gets Rousing Reception In Minneapolis, Plentywood Meetings

MINNEAPOLIS

During comrade Shachtman's stop here, the Minneapolis branch held two of the most successful affairs the party has ever presented here. On Friday night, Nov. 1, comrade Shachtman spoke on the war question to an overflow crowd at the Pythian Hall. On Saturday a very successful party was held in honor of the touring comrades at the Minneapolis branch headquarters, with card playing, dancing, movies and refreshments. Over $100 was raised to carry on the work of the Workers Party.

Plentywood, Montana

PLENTYWOOD, Mont.—The Producers News reports a large, enthusiastic and highly interested audience turned out to hear Max Shachtman, editor of the New Internationalist, in the Farmer-Labor Temple here.

With Charles Taylor, editor of the Producers News, official organ of the Farm Holiday Association of Montana, in the chair, Shachtman explained the causes and the forces making for imperialist war and the international conflicts arising out of the present colonial struggle in Ethiopia.

A Stalinist in the audience, who was so bold as to defend the social-patriotism of the Communist Party, was neatly demolished by the speaker.

The Producers News for Nov. 8 features a debate in its columns between a Stalinist, Harry Smith of Council Bluffs, Iowa, which takes the form of a letter to the paper and an answer by comrade Shachtman. In his letter Smith defends the Soviet Union's foreign policy, its shipment of foodstuffs, etc. to Italy and a general apology for socialism in one country. Shachtman takes issue with his remarks from the revolutionary viewpoint, showing step by step the betrayal of Stalinism.

Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY.—When comrade Shachtman spoke in Salt Lake City a year and a half ago, his meeting was broken up by Stalinists under the leadership of their organizer, Paul Crouch. His scheduled meeting on November 9 was broken up by a slight mountain blizzard which blocked the highways to Salt Lake, prevented a large crowd from appearing at the hall (despite the fine sale of tickets) and trapped the speaker at Preston, Idaho, a town not particularly hospitable toward revolutionists, as the mayor, far from offering Shachtman the key to the city, did not even offer to repair his windshield wiper. And at Salt Lake, the comrades wiped away the slow sweat of waiting for Shachtman and accepted the kind offer of a liberal club that he speak before them the following night, Sunday.

More than fifty students and workers listened raptly to Shachtman's vivid portrayal of the approaching war and the crass betrayal of the Second and Third Internationals—their support of sanctions and of "good" capitalists—fights against "bad" capitalists—their turning of the workers' guns upon each other instead of upon the capitalist governments.

The large collection that was taken proved the appreciation and interest of the crowd, even the Stalinists present contributing generously.

"What If a Foreign Army Invaded Our Country?" Stalinist Jingoists Ask

By SAM POLLOCK and ART PREIS

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 4. — "We can't be against government sanctions. What would we do if an invading army attacked our homes?" This was not the statement of the Liberty League, nor an appeal by "Stinker" Hearst against the Red and Yellow perils, nor even a quotation from the constitution of the National Civil Federation. It was the full-blown wisdom donated to the Northwest District Conference of the American League Against War and Fascism, November 2-3, by a leading Detroit member of the Communist Party.

Fearful lest his party comrades might not make the position of the C.P. on imperialist sanctions sufficiently clear, Francis Murphy, local secretary and organizer of the American League, stated, "The American League is not concerned with League of Nations sanctions. The U. S. is not a member of the League. Therefore, we are not concerned about the actions of the League of Nations." Reinforcements were brought from the rear to support Murphy, when Sam Spensler, New America organizer, emphatically stated, "The American League is against all wars."

These were the arguments used to "prove" that a resolution against imperialist sanctions, submitted by Sam Pollock, a W.P. member who represented the Lucas County Unemployed League, was "pacifist." The resolution, which was undoubtedly the most important submitted and the only one even discussed or disputed, was permitted only six minutes of debate (two speakers from each side, limited to three minutes apiece) by the mechanical control of the C. P. and its stooges. The resolution, which exposed the entire jingoistic Stalinist structure of the American League, is here quoted in its entirety:

"I. Resolved: That this conference goes on record against any war engaged in by American imperialism; and be it further

"2. Resolved: That this conference does not recognize any idea that justifies support of one's imperialist country during war, because that country has an allegedly democratic form of government, against a country in which fascism or reaction are in power. Any such war would still be an imperialist war, a war of despoliation and conquest and would not be and could not be in the interests of the overwhelming majority of the peoples; and be it further

"3. Resolved: That this conference is against extending any support to any sanctions that the U. S. government may apply to Italy in the present controversy; such sanctions being only a prelude to a new imperialist war and a world-wide slaughter of the masses of the world; and be it further

"4. Resolved: That this conference support only working-class sanctions against Italy, in the form of strikes, refusal to handle Italian goods, etc., etc.

Lucas County Unemployed League."

The conference had its auspicious start Saturday, Nov. 2, at a luncheon meeting ($1.00 per plate) at Ritz, Jim-Crow Commodore Perry Hotel, held in honor of Dr. Harry E. Ward, titular national head of the American League. This was followed in the evening by a "monster," "gigantic" "People's" rally against war at the huge Civic Auditorium (seating capacity 5,600). After titanic preparations, 300 of the masses were lured into the echoing desolation of the auditorium to hear Dr. Ward and such other fighters against war and fascism as Charles Hoover, vice-mayor of Toledo and an official of the Auto-Lite Co.

Resolutions were finally submitted to the evening session, which started late and from which a great share of the delegates were absent. Prior to the report of the resolutions committee, the C. P. majority bloc took the precautions to limit the debate to two delegates for either side of an issue with three minutes apiece. In its report, the resolutions committee "overlooked" the Unemployed League resolution against sanctions. When attention was called to this omission, the chairman hastily reported non-concurrence by the committee, but refused to give the reason for this position.

Trade Unionists Balk

When the recorded vote on the resolution was taken, of the 36 delegates present, 26 delegates, all of Stalinist or New America connections, voted as a bloc against it. Three delegates, including 2 bona-fide representatives of large trade union groups, endorsed the resolution. The remainder of the delegates, representing unions and other genuine mass groups, abstained from voting. Several of the abstainers later stated to Sam

Pollock, "What was the use of voting? he meeting was stacked."

Besides Sam Pollock, a militant trade unionist, representing a local of over 1,500 members, took the floor in support of the resolution, emphasizing in brief and straightforward terms, "Here the government is preparing 24 hours a day for a new war, with most of the money coming from relief funds in one form or another. This is the government which clubs us and jails us, and do you want us workers to support the sanctions of such a government?"

The only resolutions passed on the question of war were on a boycott of Italy and Germany and a protest to Japan. The whole question of sanctions was deliberately avoided.

While this farcical "conference" was dragging out its fruitless end, another meeting was being held a short distance away at the Toledo Workers School Hall, the regular Open Forum of the local W. P. Comrade Burke Cochran gave a splendid and eagerly attended talk on the 55th Convention of the A. F. of L. before a full audience of workers, the largest share of whom were active trade union progressives. There was no gag-rule at this meeting, for the floor was given over to an hour and a half of free and open discussion, with members of the auto union and other A. F. of L. groups and the M.E.S.A. participating.

100 Hear Cannon in Allentown Meeting

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Nov. 9.—A crowd of about 100 workers turned out to hear comrade James P. Cannon, editor of the NEW MILITANT, present the Workers Party position on the war danger at the Silk Workers Hall last night. The meeting, one of many being conducted as part of the W.P.'s anti-war campaign, was held under the auspices of the Allentown branch.

Andrew J. Budimas, First Vice-President of the Pennsylvania Unemployed League, acted as chairman and introduced the speaker to the local workers. Comrade Cannon's subject was "War and the Workers."

In the course of his speech he demonstrated the inevitability of war under capitalism and imperialist rivalry and exposed the treacherous character of the pacifist "peace marches" dished up by the rabbis, the preachers, the social reformists and the so-called "Communists" as substitutes for the genuine struggle against war. He once more proclaimed the slogan of Lenin and Liebknecht: "The enemy is in our own country" as the guiding line for anti-war action on the part of the working class.

The speech was very well received by the audience. In the question and discussion period, several Stalinists (members of the so-called "Communist Party") took the floor in a pitiable attempt to defend the betrayal policy of the Communist International. Comrade Cannon made short shrift of the Stalinist blunkeys and publicly challenged them to an open debate, with equal time for both sides, before the workers of Allentown. The Stalinists swallowed hard, but to date they have not yet replied to the challenge.

A good number of NEW MILITANT and party pamphlets were sold at the door upon the conclusion of the meeting.

Nazi Strikebreakers Used in Bakery Strike

NEW YORK.—Use of Nazi agents to break the general strike of Cushman-Purity bakeries was charged today by Herman Gund, Secretary of Bakery Workers Union, Local 50, an industrial union affiliated to the Bakery International and the A. F. of L.

"The Cushman officials deliberately hired active Nazis as foremen in the 165th Street and Park Ave. plant, and in other plants which employed workers of German descent. Germans were given special privileges in order to enable them to take part in Nazi exercises and activities. As a result," declared Gund, "the majority of the strikebreakers in these plants are Germans under the leadership of these Nazi foremen."

"Some of these Nazis have openly stated to strikers that they are scabbing on the strike because the American Federation of Labor has declared a boycott of Nazi goods. Under the influence of the Nazi foremen, German workers were induced to drop out of the union and are now acting as scabs."

"This is a direct challenge to the American Federation of Labor. It is not merely a question of winning this particular strike. It is a question of smashing for good the use by the bosses of Fascist organizations against strikers."

Over 1,200 Cushman workers are out for the third week. An army of company "guards" have been harassing the strikers, their homes are visited and their wives and children terrorized by threats.

"Guards" visited one of the strike headquarters and manhandled strikers. Instead of arresting the thugs, the police arrested three workers.

In spite of terror, the strike is solid. Formerly an independent union, Bakery Local 50 secured a charter from the Bakery International which provides an industrial structure. All workers connected with Cushmans, including bakers, drivers and store salesmen, belong to the one union. Bakery Local 50 is also organizing other mass-production bakery factories. Trustification is well advanced in the industry, three firms—Cushman, Ward and Continental being giant trusts extending throughout the country.

Workers are asked to boycott Cushman stores.

Hold First Forum on N.W. Side, Chicago

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—The Northwest Side branch of the Workers Party held its first open meeting of the season last night at its headquarters at 1237 California Avenue. In conjunction with the proposed anti-war campaign, this meeting was devoted to a discussion on the impending world war and the position and attitude of the different working class organizations. Comrade Albert Grotzer traced the threads which tied the imperialist powers and forced them into a new war and then discussed the methods of combating war.

In a discussion of the latest turn of the Stalinist International he explained to the audience how because of the false conceptions of the Stalinists with regard to building socialism in a single country the working class movement had suffered defeat after defeat in all of the capitalist countries and in the Soviet Union itself; that now the Stalinists have adopted a completely social-patriotic attitude towards war, pledging themselves at their last Congress to support the bourgeoisie of the democratic countries against the Fascist countries.

The Northwest Side branch of the W. P. intends holding such meetings every two weeks. At this first meeting some fifty workers were present and the future meetings promise to be even larger.

THE MANAGER'S CORNER

We have made a beginning in our campaign for 1,000 new subscribers. But it is only a small beginning and there is a little less than a month and a half left to do the job. Speed is now essential.

By December 1 we will have another special eight-page issue. What can our branches and bundle agents do toward a special stimulation of the campaign? Special supplies of this issue should be ordered right away and careful plans made for distribution. A follow-up by subscriptions should net actual results.

The main point now is to get busy and build up a march larger circulation for the NEW MILITANT. As we have said before, 1,000 new subscribers by the time of the second party convention, Christmas week, will mark the first step toward accomplishing this aim. Moreover, it will net the funds necessary to start the regular eight-page weekly.

Below we give the quotas of new subscriptions assigned to the various branches together with the new subs turned in so far.

A couple of friends in New York

French C.P. Begs Laval

derisively pointed out by the Fascists themselves who received the decrees not with shudders of mortal fear but with jeers. Laval issued them, said Echo de Paris on Oct. 23 "to calm Herriot and the Radicals."

How about the Stalinists? "Decree laws against the Fascists? They have been taken," writes 'Humanite', "but they are already violated." They are insufficient and ineffective. "It is necessary to disarm and dissolve the Fascist leagues." ('Humanite', Oct. 25.) There's our anti-Fascist program! And oh yes, there's another fault that has to be rectified, says 'Humanite'.

"Purify the Police Force!"

"The decrees threaten to be ineffective. . . . these decrees are useless unless they are accompanied by a serious purification of the police." The police chiefs, it seems are Fascist, but the "great majority of the police are of republican tendencies." That is why the chiefs, it seems, are withholding some extra ammunition from the cops. L'Humanite won't stand for seeing the cops go short of bullets.

"It was only after the campaign conducted by 'Humanite' that Guehard (high police official) finally consented to give nine new cartridges to his guardians of the peace—in order to face Fascists armed to the teeth!"

The police must be better armed and above all—purified. For this purification, "demanded by the policemen themselves—is an essential condition for the security of the French people."

These are only some of the vile lengths to which the degeneration of Stalinism has led. Columns could be given over here to quotations, nothing but quotations from the columns of 'Humanite' which are enough to make any honest Communist want to spit upon everything he's ever been taught at the feet of the Great Leader, Stalin the Great, or Stalin the Little, alias Browder, Cachin or Pollitt.

City have each made a good contribution toward the campaign for the regular eight-page weekly. This is for the particular information of the comrades who may think that we do not want any further contributions for this purpose. We do. PARTY AT WORK

MISSISSIPPI

The Mississippi section of the party, after a period of severe persecution, is adding new members, and incidentally, making an advance subscription to the NEW MILITANT a first demand upon every applicant for membership. The campaign against "reds" is carried on with excessive rigor in this and other Southern states by the A. F. of L. trade union bureaucrats at the top and the lesser bureaucrats. In spite of this the militants are indispensable in carrying on effective organization work in strikes and the rank and file of the unions constantly turn to them for help.

NEWARK, N. J.

The rapid growth of the Newark branch of the W. P. and the Spartacus Youth League has permeated the entire membership with such tremendous enthusiasm and energy, that recruiting quotas are smashed right and left—a bright augury for the vitalization of the dormant Newark labor movement. Branch meetings and educational meetings are attended by 100 percent of the membership. Eighteen of the comrades are active in the splendid work of the Newark Unemployed League. Others are active in the trade unions (this is just starting), in educational and other activities. Among the new members that have joined the party in the last couple of weeks are three Negroes, a member of the longshoreman's union, a couple of automobile workers, a couple of painters and other industrial workers. Forums are to get under way soon and all signs indicate a very successful season. The new members are all intelligent, energetic and active, and for the most part are workers in basic industries.

The Spartacus youth have also had a rapid growth and are very active with classes, social, sports and other activities. A basketball team has been organized and so has a Junior Spartacus group consisting of youngsters between the ages of 12 and 15 and numbering 15 members already. Between 25 and 30 Spartacans are actively engaged in youth work and the Juniors too, have successful meetings. Both party and youth members gather together about three times a week after meetings or other activities for discussions and plans.

The Newark branch of the Workers Party is running a theater party at the Civic Repertory theater on both Nov. 23, Thanksgiving day evening, and Nov. 30 matinee. The play is the Theater Union production of "Mother," based on the Gorki novel of that name.

Comrades wishing tickets can write to Lew Merritt, 545 Belmont Ave., Newark. Tickets sell for 30c, 45c, 60c, 75c and $1.00.

MINNEAPOLIS

On Thursday, Nov. 7, the Minneapolis branch held an open meeting to commemorate the 18th anniversary of the Russian Bolshevik revolution. Aside from the regular party comrades, numerous sympathizers attended and honored with us the memory and the great lessons of October.

The entertainment committee of the Minneapolis branch has scheduled three parties for the remainder of the year, all to take place at the branch headquarters, 631 Third Avenue South. The parties will be held on Saturday evenings—Nov. 23, Dec. 7, and Dec. 23. All friends and sympathizers are to consider this notice their cordial invitation to attend these affairs.

Cannon Speaks at Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—James P. Cannon addressed a mass meeting Sunday night, Nov. 10 under the auspices of the Philadelphia branch in the campaign of the Workers Party on the war question.

Comrade Cannon drove home the Leninist teaching on the workers' attitude toward capitalist war and tore to shreds the perfidious attitude of the Second and Third Internationals. He showed that the policy of supporting government sanctions and the fraud of "good" and "bad" capitalist governments is simply the preparation to deliver the masses helpless to another imperialist slaughter as in 1914.

The question and discussion period brought out numerous angles of the proletarian attitude toward war. The lecture was received with enthusiasm and helped to strengthen the influence of the Workers Party in Philadelphia.

By JACK WEBER

BATTLE OF THE CURRENCIES

Nothing illustrates so well the fact that capitalist production and consumption rest not on national but on world foundations than does the world-wide battle of currencies. The world is divided into well-defined areas politically and economically under the control of one or the other of the great capitalist powers. The signposts over these areas denoting such control are, respectively, the yen in the world manner as a token of world dominion. It is this battle of the currencies, each symptom of the gigantic struggle underneath for outright colonial control, that is being witnessed at the moment in China. Control of Chinese currency and Chinese foreign exchange would go a long way in aiding one or the other of the imperialists to control the larger share of Chinese foreign trade. One of the infamous twenty-one demands made on China by Japan was that the Japanese be given control over the chaotic Chinese currency, and that Japan be allowed to set up a gold backing for Chinese currency in the Bank of Japan at Tokyo. Leith-Ross, agent of British imperialism, is now engaged in the effort to tie the Chinese silver currency to the pound sterling. He would do this partly through the aid of an "international loan" to Chiang Kai-Shek. Japan has already signified her intransigent opposition to this scheme. The United States has played no small part in bringing about the present situation.

AMERICAN SILVER POLICY

The policy of increasing the price of silver pursued by the Roosevelt administration had, among other things, the aim of counteracting the gains made by Japan in Chinese trade due to depreciation of the yen. Japanese goods became cheaper for China as for the rest of the world, since Japanese prices did not rise much and other currencies could therefore secure more in goods in Japan. American gold policy—depreciating the dollar in terms of gold—did not affect the Far East as greatly because there silver rather than gold was the basis of currency and money. Hence Roosevelt hoped to secure a greater share of Chinese trade by depreciating the dollar in terms of silver. Since the silver would pour out of the Chinese hoards to secure the profit offered in terms of the American dollar it was hoped that the silver would be exchanged for American goods. This policy has been only partially successful in restoring American trade. Meantime silver has been smuggled out of China at a tremendous rate despite the attempt to prevent this by means of an equalization export duty. The rise in prices of Chinese goods has now reached the point where inflation threatens. The result of American policy has been to lower the standard of living of the Chinese masses even beyond the starvation level already existing, something that does not concern in the least American capitalism in its mad search for profits.

Now the Chinese government has finally taken the step, under the advice and encouragement of English imperialism, of going off the silver standard. This step is in line with the policies of capitalist nations all over the world of establishing managed (manipulated) currencies to protect the interests of the home bourgeoisie. It is not taken, needless to say, to restore a stable currency that would be for the benefit of the Chinese masses. They do not enter into consideration at all. Besides being concerned over their share of trade, the British are also looking out for their vast investments that are threatened by the instability of Chinese money and the strong possibilities of inflation. China is now the battleground of the nations and the battle is for the moment confined to money. But the fight for control of Chinese money is only part of the conflict to seize and subjugate China as a colony. At any moment the diplomatic and economic conflict threatens to turn to other means, the use of bullets instead of coin. The intervention of America and England in the monetary sphere is only notice given to Japan that her seizure of Chinese territory will sooner or later have to meet the test of force on the international arena. The big powers, England in particular, are giving notice to Japan that not all their attention is devoted to the Ethiopian situation, that they are giving close attention to events in the Far East as well.

That the Japanese will nevertheless apply pressure on the corrupt Chinese government to prevent China becoming a sterling area goes without saying. The Japanese army will intervene, first by threats, then by further action to strangle China. How far they will go depends also on the international "balance of power," on the combinations among the imperialists. As one power moves to gain more control at the expense of the others, the latter combine against the immediate menace, only to fall apart again the moment a new situation arises. The basic law of capitalism at all times, but particularly in the period of decay, is the law of its instability.

head for any progressive idea. "But why did they choose Minneapolis as the place at which to strike the first blow? For two very good reasons. Minnesota is like an island that is looked upon by the workers of the rest of the country, struggling for their rights. Whatever you may think of the Farmer-Labor Party, you must recognize that it represents a new course—the workers here have struck off upon the path of independent political action through the Farmer-Labor Party. Bill Green, the old Republican wheeler, and other craft unionists, closely allied with the two old capitalist parties, resent this political expression of the workers. And so they come here hoping to smash the Farmer-Labor Party. At the same time they intend to strike a blow at the industrial unionists. Tobin and Green understand that if they can make a spectacular and smashing blow at 574, they can smash the industrial union movement as a severe blow. It is pure business logic with them. They didn't come to Minneapolis simply to get after reds, radicals, and communists; they wish to blaze a trail here that will terrorize the workers all over the country.

The "Purge" of 1924
In 1924, Paul Smith, personal representative of Green, purged the unions here of reds. Between that time and 1934, when 574 came into the picture, not a single strike was won in Minneapolis. The Citizens Alliance succeeded in making Minneapolis an open shop town. Woe to the people who back red drives. They are only the bureaucrats of the labor movement, and the capitalist enemies of the workers.
"All of the newspapers here have taken up the cry of communism. . . These are the methods and tools of the capitalists. But this is not simply a flash in the pan—it is going to be a long drawn out, a bitter fight. Lewis can't move a single step forward—he has fired his best shots. Publicity and newspaper articles do not take over unions. Maybe we'll see fellows double up, and bend their heads before the onslaughts of the bureaucracy as if their heads were upon hinges. On the other hand, a young, new militant leadership will be thrown up in the process of the struggle.

"But let us be on our guard—watch out. Lewis plans deliberately to perpetrate some outrage. To frame somebody. That is the next card which they intend to play. We offer Meyer Lewis—they say he comes from Iowa—a passport back to where the tall corn grows. Let's send him back!"

South Africans Boycott Italy

"United front" conference in the Cathedral Hall. Neither the Communist League or the Lenin Club received invitations, but several individual comrades were invited to be present. Among organizations present were the Young Men's Christian Association and several churches. The speakers from the platform included a Bishop and several leading Stalinists. All the speakers were full of praise for the League of Nations, and called upon the capitalist government of South Africa—which one of the Stalinists referred to as "our" government—to instruct its representatives at Geneva to vote for sanctions against Italy. The lengthy resolution which was placed before the conference was pacifist to the core. When one of our comrades attempted to speak in order to expose the reformist nature of the resolution and to move a counter-resolution calling for an organized boycott of Fascist Italy, he was refused a hearing. Through a sympathetic trade union delegate, we succeeded in placing our resolution before the conference, but the chairman, when putting it to the vote coupled it with the Stalinist resolution, notwithstanding the protest of the mover.

The content of our resolution was as follows:
"That this conference pledges itself to organize an international boycott of Fascist Italy and will do everything in its power to prevent the handling of Italian goods or the loading of Italian boats. To this end, it will carry on propaganda among working class organizations and especially among the workers engaged in transport."

Our Revolutionary Heritage

Class War of the '70s

By Leighton Rigby

Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of articles on the revolutionary heritage of the American workers by comrade Rigby.

The early days of the American labor movement after the Civil War, like the heroic period of the Chartists in England, was marked by militant battles against the bourgeoisie and revolutionary spirit among the workers. One reason lies in the fact that the ruling capitalist class, and their agents in the ranks of organized labor had not yet consolidated their positions of power and perfected their subtle and open defense against the aroused workers.

Let us consider for the moment what took place in America fifty years ago. To tell what happened is to review stirring clashes, including the bloodiest two weeks in American labor history, when the capitalists fell to wondering if they had really won permanent power when they erased the menace of the planters. It is for us who carry on to keep alive the memory of those fighting, rank-and-file pioneers who left not only traditions but useful lessons.

In 1873 capitalism was on the upswing in the U. S. The fact that the inevitable excess profits could be safely converted into capital goods did not, however, prevent the piling up of surpluses of consumptive goods and the cyclical crisis, which was "the panic of 1873." The workers, as usual, took it on the chin, but not without swinging some very effective blows themselves.

The Molly Maguires

The first to strike back were the Molly Maguires, secret organizers of Pennsylvania coal miners. To appreciate the origin of the name, Molly Maguires, one must know that a society by that name, in Ireland, had accomplished much by way of preventing foreclosures and evictions. The members of the original Molly Maguires often disguised themselves as women when performing their missions. The purposes of the American group of 1874 matched those of its Irish pattern in many ways, but the feminine disguise was never worn.

Mining in the anthracite districts was greatly increased during the planters' revolution, in pace with the speeding up of industry generally. With the industrial breakthrough, the lot of the miners, already unbearable, became even worse. There was no miners' union, but the Molly Maguires fought fiercely.

Whole counties were covered by the Molly Maguires as they struck terror into the black hearts of their oppressors. Mine owners, bosses and police were beaten, and many were killed. Hell broke loose in the coal regions of Pennsylvania. It was class warfare! And it was not halted until James McParlan, the Judas of 1874 who turned out to be a defective, had won the confidence of the Molly Maguires and subsequently maneuvered the leaders into capitalist courts of "justice."

It is true that incidents of private grievances sifted into the plans of the Molly Maguires. But it is also true that their struggle was, above everything else, a manifestation of the revolutionary spirit of the American worker. Faced with starvation, the miners of Pennsylvania struck back.

Fierce Struggles of 1877

In the summer of 1877 a walkout of Baltimore and Ohio railroad workers heralded two weeks of fierce battles between thousands of workers in several industries and their sympathizers, on the one side, and police and both federal and state troops, on the other. Even the farmers entered the fight, furnishing food to the strikers and their families. The East was paralyzed as trains stood still, and the West was shaken by clashes between workers and vigilantes.

A dozen workers were mowed down by troops in Baltimore, and many others were killed in Buffalo and Reading. Nineteen were murdered and hundreds wounded by police in the day-long battle in Chicago. Pittsburgh was the scene of the most pronounced revolutionary spirit. There, the workers, armed mainly with bricks and clubs, fought advancing columns of soldiers as their comrades fell dead beside them. The station was burned at Pittsburgh, as were roundhouses and hundreds of boxcars.

The railroad strike was broken at last by the military power of the state of Pennsylvania. Whole trainloads of troops piled between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, offering to shoot down or lop off the ears of any who attempted to impede their progress. In the end, the workers won nothing for themselves. But they helped the cause of organized labor, while showing clearly the power of working class solidarity if it be followed to the end.

What occurred in 1877 was brought about by the rank and file. Enthusiastically and almost automatically responding to the spirit of their comrades, the workers spread the strike from city to city. All that was needed for victory was co-ordinating and interpretive leadership, which failed to come from the officials of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The failure of the leaders to lead became tradition in the high command, not being broken by Gompers who, with Strasser, brought about the formation of the A. F. of L. in 1886. When the membership of the Federation became formidable, bankers and industrialists invited Gompers to lunch. The latter gladly "walked with kings," but he "lost the common touch."

And the "kings" have carried the flattery to the point where today Green and Co. not only betray their murmuring followers at every conference table, but they deliberately shout out their intention to whip the rank and file into silence. The only "common touch" they retain is the one that affects the workers' pocketbooks. Their fight against ignorance and Marxism are founded upon the proposition that there is none so blind as he who will not see.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

M. Z. NEWARK—

Question: Is there any difference between supporting sanctions "only to the extent required by British imperialism" and sanctions "forced upon these imperialist governments who want them only as a threat, and carried out over the head of the capitalist state apparatus, by independent unfettered class actions (strikes, demonstrations, active boycotts, picketing, etc.)"? The Daily Worker (see Harry Gannes' column) of Oct. 16, 1935, makes this distinction.

Answer: Just as they distinguish between the nations of peace-loving, democratic and of war-seeking, fascist capitalisms; between fake and genuine labor parties; so do the Stalinists now attempt to cover their crimes, this time on the war question. There are, if you please, had sanctions, i.e., those which the imperialists wish to apply, and good sanctions, i.e., those which the Stalinists would "force" them to apply.

If British imperialism wants sanctions "only as a threat" against Italy, whereas the worthies of the Third International would "force" His Majesty to take more drastic action, then it is quite clear that the Stalinists, even though they motivate their course by claiming a desire to defend Ethiopia, are demanding an IMMEDIATE imperialist war at the same time that they credit British imperialism with wanting peace. Unfortunately for the Stalinist contention, however, British imperialism is already FORCED to strike an effective blow at the Italian bandits in order to prevent the latter from taking the rich Ethiopian empire and exploiting it for the benefit of Italy. Instead of English, finance-capital; in order to prevent Mussolini from reducing Great Britain to the place of a third rate power. If England confines itself, for the present, to economic sanctions, it is because she has everything to gain by delaying military operations. The deeper the Italian army penetrates Ethiopia, the more difficult does the situation become for Mussolini; it is even possible that the Ethiopians may score military victories. Time permits Great Britain to strengthen her armaments in the Mediterranean and some thing which the British Admiralty has neglected to do, develop a naval strategy for these waters. The delay which the British are utilizing, therefore, is as much a part of military and naval strategy as the correct allocation of battle-ships, so that the sanctions of Stanley Baldwin are quite as effective as any which Harry Gannes and Co. would, if they could, "force" on him. Downing Street, it appears is not quite as illogical in its methods of defending the interests of British imperialism as are the Stalinists.

Stupid as the latter's policy may be, however, they call on the workers to "force" it on the imperialists by strikes, etc. "over the head of the capitalist state apparatus." Stupidity is here multiplied by insanity. Will the British workers be called to strike against the handling of goods destined for Italy when such goods are not being shipped because of orders from the British government? Will the Stalinists call on the British workers to boycott goods which are not being sold, such sale being already forbidden? How is it possible, except on the pages of the Daily Worker, to support sanctions by calling political strikes against the government of military? Sanctions are of a military, as well as of an economic character. For the British workers to enforce military sanctions "over the head of the capitalist state apparatus," power must have first passed into the hands of the proletariat. How is it possible for the proletariat to have the state power and at the same time be "putting pressure" on the imperialists to apply sanctions? Only God, he he in heaven, or in the Kremlin can solve the insane riddles and contradictions which the scribes of the Daily Worker generate in justification of their betrayals.

The essence of the whole matter, of course, is that there is no difference between the sanctions of Stanley Baldwin and those which the Stalinists would "enforce." Stalin has subordinated the policies of the Communist parties to the Stalin-Laval pact, i.e., to the interests of French imperialism. The latter supports sanctions so the Stalinists internationally are doing the same.

that here they have honest people to deal with—people they do not know how to approach, how to talk with, how to deal with. They have dealt with gangsters too long. "But do not think this is going to be an easy battle. They will continue to fight the union, and they will fight bitterly to the finish. They are determined to crush 574—because they are showing the country how militant industrial unions can effectively protect the rights of the workers."

Overflow Crowd Cheers Speakers

me to disassociate yourselves from local 574." We said, "We can never do that. Not until 574 came into the picture did our union amount to anything. They helped us in every possible way. They attended the negotiations with the employers, and helped us to get a settlement with the bosses for the first time in the history of the industry here. We would be traitors to 574, to ourselves, and to our workers, if we now turned against it. It is the only union that helped us at all times. We never got such help from the Central Labor Union. We are going to go along the line with 574 one hundred percent." 574 has shown the incompetency, the uselessness of the old-line reactionary leaders who stayed in their offices, smoking cigars, and doing nothing for their workers but collecting dues from them. These old-line leaders are afraid the workers will wake up and understand. That is why they are fighting 574 which is showing the workers the meaning of real, honest, sincere unionism."

Latz also announced that Rabbi Gordon, who had served as impartial chairman of the committee which had drawn up the settlement between the union and the employers had called him that evening and assured that the agreement still stood, and that he would have nothing to do with the union split.

Power Union

Next there was introduced Brother Kotarsky of the Northern States Pottery Union Local 160, A. F. of L. He said that the members of his union had been rendered speechless by the actions of Lewis. While he is not much of a speaker, he would read a letter drawn up by his union. "We take deep concern in this matter both from the standpoint of the union and from that of our obligations toward 574. It was due entirely to the struggle of 574 that our own union was able to form. On many occasions the officers and men of 574 have helped us, and we know from numerous reports in the C.L.U. that, in spite of their expulsion from the A. F. of L. they have helped other A. F. of L. unions. The industrial union fight will bring increasing gains to the workers."

Musicians

Ace Brewer, representative of the Musicians Union (of which Lewis claims to be a member) assured the meeting that the Musicians were 100 percent for 574.

Bergstrom, the president of local 1313, the ornamental iron workers union which has just come out of a victorious struggle against the most notorious open-shop bosses, spoke next. "The ironworkers," he said, "are 100 percent behind 574. 574 gave us the kind of help hard to get anywhere else. 574 never turned down the iron workers. We didn't know anywhere one could go and get a better reception. There was little or no organization among the drivers before 574 came on the scene. This was too much for the boss class. That also goes for the A. F. of L. bureaucracy. They don't want organization the moment a union really begins to function in the interests of the workers. They only look upon the unions as a collection agency for getting dues from the workers. That is why they ousted 574 from the A. F. of L. The reputation of a union depends upon its action during a strike. Workers will always respond to a union like 574. That is why it is not going to be easy to tear 574 down. Leaders in industry and the top leaders in the ranks of labor, want to frighten the workers by calling the leaders of 574 reds. Well Abraham Lincoln said that the radicals of today are the conservatives of tomorrow. But it does show that all ideas when they are first introduced look radical. But tomorrow they will be accepted as the ordinary thing. Is it any wonder that the old-line leaders oppose any new ideas? The last A. F. of L. convention shows the trend of all over the country. It was the first convention which didn't work like a steam roller. A large proportion of the delegates voted for industrial organization—the only method by which the workers can be organized effectively. The failure of the A. F. of L. has failed to organize the workers. The employers have organized right along. The small success of the A. F. of L. is revealed in the small number of workers which it has organized. The A. F. of L. has not performed its work well in having so many unorganized workers outside its ranks. But only the workers can organize themselves. And when they set out to do this, they are branded as reds. What of it? We don't expect to please the opposition by what we are doing." Bergstrom declared his union 100 percent behind 574.

Earl Martin, business agent of the Iron workers Local 19, oldest union in Minneapolis, also praised 574, and declared that "before 574 came into the picture local building trades were hibernating and sucking their paws."

Resolution of Rank and File

Bill Brown read spontaneous resolutions, drawn up by the members of 574 and presented to the leaders declaring their complete support for the union and for its leaders. These resolutions came from the Yellow Cab men, a group which Tobin warned 574 not to try and organize because the Yellow Cab was "a national concern, and too powerful to organize," also from the Cameron Transfer, whose owner is one of the leaders of the Citizens Alliance; from the Pittsburg Coal Co. men, Gamble Robinson Company, and the Colonial Warehouse, where 574 recently won a strike.

Farmer-Labor Alderman

The radical Farmer-Labor alderman, H. G. Scott, declared that the Farmer-Labor group in the city council did not have the courage to come out openly for 574. "They try to shush everything. It is time they take a stand and get off the fence." He declared that he was always ready to be at the service of 574, and that 574 was the one bright spot in the industrial situation in Minneapolis. He watched that the whole nation was declaring 574. "There used to be a paper, the Minneapolis Labor Review, which was the official organ of the Minneapolis labor movement. But since The Organizer has been put out by 574, that has become the official organ."

Candy Workers

A mere youth, Paul Williams of the Candy Workers Union, was introduced. His union was the newest in town—only three weeks old. Three weeks ago the workers had been forced by bad conditions to go out on strike at the Powell Candy Company. They had no leadership, no knowledge, no resources. They didn't know what to do. So they came to 574. "It was the only place we knew where to go. They gave us leadership and advice. And in 24 hours they had an agreement with the Powell Candy Company. Now the entire industry has been signed up and is completely unionized. Well, I'm not a speaker, and I've told you how we stand on 574."

Farmer-Labor Legislator

Sam Bellman, Representative in the State House of Representatives, and a Farmer Laborite, spoke. "In my opinion 574 has been the mainspring and the motive that has brought the workers to the level where they now are. The 3rd Ward F. L. local last night endorsed the union. Its death will be the death blow to the liberal movement in Minneapolis. Only militant action will win. If the union is destroyed, Fascism will triumph in Minnesota and the liberal-workers' movement will fall by the wayside. I am willing to go down fighting with 574."

Speech of Miles Dunne

Miles Dunne was then introduced. His speech was as follows:

"Lewis announced over the radio that the men were leaving 574. The opposite is true. In the last two months the union has taken in more members than in any similar 60 day period. It has made better contracts than ever before—directly with the employers, this time, and not through any government board. 574 finds itself in a better position than ever before."

"In the winter of 1933 a group of people in the coal industry felt that wages were too low, that better conditions could be obtained, and that the workers were ripe for organization. In February of 1933 they were organized, and made their demands upon the employers. Those were refused and the men were forced on strike. It was a three-day strike; the elements were on the side of the union. It was bitter cold, and the demand for coal was extremely brisk. In three days the union won a victory and obtained a settlement. The union organizers did not rest upon their laurels. They went on and organized the general transport workers. There followed the May, June and July strikes. The struggle was a bitter one. The employers said they would never deal with 574. They allied the radio and the local press with paid advertisements in which they called for the removal of the 'Communist' leadership of 574 before they would deal with the union, and in which they claimed that 574 represented the edge of the revolution that was creeping into the United States. The workers never paid any attention to the radio and press statements of the employers, but fought right on to victory.

"Today 574 is one of the largest single local unions in the United States. A union is no good unless it produces results—unless it is something more than a mere dues-collection agency. 574 has produced results. It brought the standards of living of its members from 35c an hour for a 12-hour day—in the market place wages were as low as 12c per hour—up to 55c per hour. An increase of 25 percent and more in living standards. In addition there is going to be another five-cent increase in wages in 1936. Moreover, the union has recently negotiated contracts with the coal and transfer industries of Minneapolis whereby the workers in those industries will be paid one and one-third overtime for all hours they work over eight per day. After the A. F. of L. has talked for decades about the eight hour day, have written about it in their journals—574 has brought it into reality."

"During the strikes in which it engaged, 574 came into conflict with many obstructive forces within the labor movement. One of them was Daniel Tobin who almost caused the loss of the strike. He refused to pay the union any strike benefits, and continued his warfare with the union until he expelled it. The nominal reason was that 574 didn't pay its per capita tax. But that was not the real reason. 574 wanted to, and still desires to remain in the A. F. of L. But before it could pay its per capita tax to the international it had to meet its pressing obligations to the orphans and widows of the martyrs of its great strike struggles. It had to pay the doctor and other expenses of the many victims in those struggles. It had to pay the necessary expenses of keeping together its organization—after it had been forced to rely almost entirely upon its own resources in its struggles by the refusal of Tobin to pay it strike benefits. The members knew that the per capita tax had not been paid. The matter was discussed many times in the membership meetings. And the members all agreed that 574 must meet first of all its most vital obligations rather than pay tribute to Tobin and cripple the organization, so that he could take more trips to Ireland and what not. But Tobin thought otherwise. With him, Tobin came first; so he revoked the charter of the union. Did that make any difference? Of course not—what was that charter? Why, it was a framed piece of paper, signed by Tobin, which said 574 had a right to exist. 574 turned that picture, face to the wall—and went right on existing. This made Tobin jealous. He wondered how he could get 574 to continue to pay him a per capita tax."

"Now it is an open secret why Meyer Lewis is here. Dan Tobin, the most reactionary person in the A. F. of L., without exception, has thrown in his lot with Green. He has said to the latter, 'I'll give you unconditional support. That is why Meyer Lewis is here attacking 574. What will the A. F. of L. reactionaries try to do? We can judge what they will try to do by what they have done. They will attempt to discredit the leadership of the union, to hook it up with gangsters and with vice rags. They will go into the Central Labor Union and try to get the C.L.U. to refuse to recognize any drivers union except 500."

"In Chicago and Cleveland, Tobin and his henchmen sent in mobsters and gangsters to mop up on their rival racketeer unions. These are the only methods they know how to use. They don't know, however,

The Elections

THE day following the elections brought a sharp rise in the stock market. The rise was led by General Motors, Bethlehem Steel, U. S. Steel, N. Y. Central Railroad and Chrysler. The turnover was more than three million shares, the biggest since July, 1934, and in breadth of stocks dealt in etc. the session outdid anything since February, 1934.
In other words the U. S. finance-capitalists and big industrialists take the election to mean a swing to the right, pressure on the Roosevelt administration to give business a longer and deeper "breathing-spell," the probability that labor militancy will not interfere seriously with output and profits in the next period.
The facts cannot be said to cast serious doubts upon this estimate. The Republican Party on a platform of opposition to the New Deal and to social legislation, etc., demand for lower taxes and for letting business alone, made substantial though not phenomenal headway compared to the last election in the East. The N. Y. State Assembly is again Republican. Philadelphia elected a Republican mayor. Assuming that business continues to improve somewhat, there is no reason to think that last Tuesday's election results presage Roosevelt's defeat in 1936; but as already suggested, the pressure to let business alone will measurably increase.
The chances that Roosevelt will get the liberal and trade union vote next year have been if anything increased, since there are no convincing indications that any third-party—Labor, Farmer-Labor, Socialist, Communist—will gain a substantial national following. Liberals and the A. F. of L. will under the circumstances stick to Roosevelt rather than take the chance of seeing a reactionary Republican elected.
In places such as Reading and Bridgeport where the Socialist Party has had years to build a machine and is in any event essentially a left-wing New Deal party, and where there is a large working class population, the party rolled up a good vote. In New York City the Socialist vote was less than last year, the Communist somewhat greater, but the combined vote for both parties was 117,479 this year as against 136,522 last year—a drop of 19,043. There is no evidence that Communist support of Socialist candidates resulted in general increase in the vote for such candidates. In the case of Samuel DeWitt running in the Bronx as a Socialist, with no opposing Communist candidate, the vote dropped below the last election, which may perhaps be accounted for in large part by sabotage of DeWitt's campaign by Old Guard Socialists.

The Daily Worker is having a tough time also in supporting its Labor Party ballyhoo by actual cases of local Labor Party gains in the election, though there are a few such instances. It may be argued that the traditional oscillation between the Republican and the Democratic party still dominates among the American masses and that a swing to the right, with the temporary upturn in business, affects all labor activities. Such factors must not be underestimated. We may ask, however, whether there is not also a realization, partly conscious and partly unconscious, among the advanced workers that Socialist parties, Communist parties turning Social Democratic and projected labor parties born out of the wedlock of the two, do not provide the working class with an instrument to fight capitalism.
The focal point of the class struggle in the U. S. in this period is in the movement for organization in the heavy industries, the battle for genuine industrial unionism in the A. F. of L. the building of the left wing in the unions, support of such struggles against red-baiting reactionary trade union bureaucrats as the one now being waged in Minneapolis.

Support the Southern Miners
WE SUPPORT heartily the proposal advanced by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, to call out the 400,000 members of the union in a one-day demonstration strike and to ask the entire A. F. of L. to join in, if the murder of striking miners in Alabama and Tennessee does not stop and those who have perpetrated recent killings are not promptly prosecuted. Such a demonstration would do more than an ocean of words to put "the fear of God" into bourgeois coal operators. It would, moreover, give labor a feeling of its own strength which would have a tremendous effect upon organizing work and upon coming strike struggles in steel, automobiles and other industries.
The NEW MILITANT some weeks ago, however, pointed out that Lewis' own course in the "settlement" of the soft coal strike was exposing his membership in the South to precisely the vicious attack which they now encounter. If Lewis, when 400,000 miners were out solidly had expressed the real desire of the men and demanded settlements in the Southern fields—nation-wide recognition of the right of miners to organize—before any return to work, there would be no murdering of miners down there now.
Let all trade unionists regard the fight of the Southern miners as their own! Pass resolutions protesting against the reign of terror by the coal and steel companies! Call for a nation-wide one-day strike demonstration in support of unionization of the Southern coal fields!

Mpls. Labor Slams Union Busting Campaign

represent the workers, to enforce the contracts with the employers, and to fight for reinstatement in the A. F. of L. The courageous and clear-cut position maintained by the laundry workers was a bombshell to the Lewis camp, and contributed greatly to the mighty growth of organized opposition against the union breakers which has sprung up in the past few days.
Citizens Alliance Delighted
Needless to say, Lewis has found his strongest support from the labor-hating employers' organization, the notorious Minneapolis Citizens Alliance. The significance of this fact has served to make local workers even more suspicious against Lewis' protestations of "working for the good of the entire labor movement."
In a statement issued two days ago, the Citizens Alliance "notes with hope and encouragement that the American Federation of Labor, through a personal representative of William A. Green, its president, has announced the determination, even at this late date, to purge the local labor movement of communism and communistic leadership." The Alliance proceeds to bemoan the fact that "it was the leaders of certain local A. F. of L. unions who brought into the picture the forces of the General Drivers Union Local No. 574 and the Workers Party of the United States to forcibly close the ornamental iron plants and the Struwear Knitting Company," and ends up by pledging to "cooperate to the fullest extent in cleaning up the intolerable conditions existing here."
Nothing need be added to expose the truly monstrous nature of the game that Green-Lewis-Tobin are playing in Minneapolis today. The labor fakery has been smothered under this praise from labor's deadliest enemy, the Citizens Alliance, the main body responsible for the bloody attacks against the living standards of the working class.
Lewis has so far centered his drive against Local 574 and those teen progressive unions who have drawn together to fight for militant trade union policies and the reinstatement of 574 in the A. F. of L. The revocation of the Laundry Workers charter was an empty gesture, the charter having been previously suspended. He has been unable to make a dent in the iron ranks of the progressive unionists. Early this week Daniel Tobin's representative, Gillespie, came to town. Gillespie, the biggest faker that ever skidded off a Boston oyster dock, conferred with John Geary of St. Paul, an international official of the Teamsters Union, and then shook his head dolefully. He hurriedly left town, completely bewildered and very pessimistic over the chances of Lewis to succeed in his union-smashing efforts. The truth of the matter is that the opposition is becoming panic-stricken and doesn't know what to do. So far, every one of Lewis' shells has proved to be a dud. When he reads the following it will probably take the heart right out of him. All during the week a stream of unsolicited lists—long, wide and very short—have come in from the 574 shop stewards on the job. The lists were headed something like this:

"We don't believe our leaders are bad. We think they are good. We want them and we don't want any other leaders." Each list would be signed by every man on the job.
On Friday night the greatest "peace-time" meeting the Minneapolis labor movement has seen was held by the bloc of progressive unions in the headquarters of Local 574. The large third-floor auditorium was packed, the crowd overflowed to the second floor and spilled out in the streets, where a battery of loud speakers carried to them pledges of solidarity with 574 in the fight against the reactionaries. Among the speakers were V. R. Dunne, Bill Brown, Alderman J. C. Scott, Robin Latz, Ace Brewer, business agent of the Musicians; B. Katowski, of the Electrical Workers Local 160; Robert Bergstrom of the Ornamental Iron Workers 1313;

Earl Martin of the Structural Iron Workers; Representative Sam Bellman (F.L.); Pat Rogers of the Firemen and Oilers; Shorty DePew, Mick Dunne and Farrell Dobbs of the General Drivers; Joe Williams of the recently organized Candy Workers also spoke. This is the youngest union in town, having been born three weeks ago through the efforts of 574.
The meeting did not disband until after midnight, and was wildly enthusiastic throughout. When Miles Dunne gave the record of Local 574, each achievement was greeted with a storm of applause. And when Bill Brown, 574's president, asked for a rising vote of confidence, every worker for a block around jumped to his feet. A large collection was taken for the "Northwest Organizer." It was a thrilling demonstration that Green has taken on the toughest job of his career when he set out to lick the greatest labor movement Minneapolis has ever been able to build.
It is apparent that the fight is not in the bag for Green—not by a long way. The progressive unions haven't won yet, either, but with continued solidarity, this militant bloc of unions cannot be whipped.
The fight against Green and his allies in Minneapolis today is rightly considered to be of even greater significance than the great strike struggles of the Minneapolis drivers in 1934. A victory in Minneapolis will be a mighty blow to Green and all he stands for, and will bring forward in the struggle every progressive in the entire labor movement. 574 intends to carry on its uncompromising, unrelenting and bitter fight to drive Meyer Lewis out of town; it will resist every attempt to expel good, honest fighting union men from the labor organizations which they have helped to build up, and together with its brother progressive unions will seek to rally every force in the labor movement in an iron front of solidarity against those who are working to undermine and destroy labor's organization and to water down labor's fighting spirit!

NEW MILITANT

The Auto Union Amalgamation

By BURKE COCHRAN
TOLEDO, O., Nov. 5.—The fight for industrial unionism at the 55th convention of the A. F. of L. gave encouragement and hope to every trade union progressive for the establishment of a more aggressive and a more militant unionism in America in the future. But the decisions of the convention gave no immediate encouragement to unionism in the automobile industry. The industrial union struggle may give renewed courage to workers already inside the A. F. of L. by revealing to them the possibilities of cleansing the unions of the rotten and cowardly bureaucracy that today holds the leadership, but it is almost impossible to rouse the still unorganized workers with the promise of a better unionism in the future.

Workers Split Into Crafts
In Detroit, the shameful scene of the first constitutional convention of the United Automobile Workers is still fresh in the memory of the automobile workers. It is enough for them to know that the A. F. of L. has chopped up the automobile industry into half a dozen different crafts with half a dozen different unions, one overlapping on the other one, claiming jurisdiction. Because of the timid and cowardly policies of Dillon and Green, the situation has only become more confusing, more involved. Everywhere there is an element of uncertainty, of hesitation. Every move of the automobile International in Detroit bears a temporary, provisional character, as if Dillon himself realized that the last word has not yet been said in automobile unionism.

At Atlantic City there was expressed a certain concern over the recent excursion into the field of unionism on the part of the Sage of Port Royal, Father Coughlin. Today, Dillon, just returning from Atlantic City, has even greater cause for concern. His office has just informed him that three independent unions: the Mechanics Educational Society, the Associated Automobile Workers of America (Greer Union) and the Industrial Automobile Workers Union (Coughlin Union) have been conducting negotiations for amalgamation. These three bodies have agreed on a program and are shortly to conduct a referendum vote among their respective memberships for ratification. The program of the new union is understood to be substantially the old program of the M.E.S.A., which is based upon the recognition of a class struggle in modern society and the necessity for an aggressive, militant unionism.

Background of the M.E.S.A.
The Mechanics Educational Society of America is well known to all automobile workers in the Detroit area. It arose on the crest of the first strike wave at the inception of the NRA; tied up with mass picket lines all four Briggs plants in the Detroit area and held up prove an increasing sympathy for a duetion of the Ford model for over a month. Basing themselves upon the key men of the industry, the tool and dye makers, they led a series of daring and spectacular strikes which electrified the whole labor movement and provided the basis for the further organization of the automobile workers. The American Federation of Labor, quick to seize the opportunity, sent in organizers and granted federal charters with a liberal hand. After the first major betrayal of the automobile workers by Collins and Green on March 25 of last year, the M.E.S.A. proved too weak to act as an independent factor and suffered as heavily as the federal unions themselves. The M.E.S.A. soon realized that it could not survive in the industry if it was limited to tool and dye makers; it therefore broadened its jurisdiction to include all workers engaged in the metal industry at its second convention in Cleveland. Since then it has had a similar experience to that of the A. F. of L. unions. In the Detroit area the union membership sharply declined and the unions are stagnating. In Toledo and Cleveland comparatively strong locals have been built up and have recruited a considerable number of production workers.

Evaluation of the Associated
The Associated Automobile Workers of America has a novel history. It was first organized as a federal local of the A. F. of L. in the Hudson plant. There the workers, under the careful tutelage of Collins, were initiated into the mysteries of class collaboration. About a year ago the local succeeded from the A. F. of L. and formed the Associated Automobile Workers of America with a strong local in the Hudson plant and a base in several of the other Detroit plants. Under the guidance now of their president, Arthur E. Greer, they were carefully coached in the spirit of humility: grievances were to be adjusted by arbitration, etc. Greer finally got hooked up with Byrd, of the Automobile Labor Board, and tried to take the whole A.A.W.A. in tow with the company union. The workers refused to follow. And since then they have been feeling their own way along, step by step, and are cautiously moving to a realization that the only unionism worthy of the name must be based upon a clear-cut fighting policy predicated on the fact that a class struggle exists in modern society.

The Coughlin Union
The evolution of the Industrial Automobile Workers Union takes on an added importance from the recent events in Akron and the company union steel convention in Canton, Ohio. This union originated during the great days of "union building" of Wolman and the Automobile Labor Board. The Dodge workers elected their representatives to the collective bargaining board of the Dodge plant, as per instructions of the Automobile Labor Board. After a month of this "collective bargaining" they found that they could register their complaints and had the power to air their grievances before the management, but beyond getting a light bulb replaced or a water bubbler repaired, their power did not extend. So having passed through all of the devious mazes and windings of the New Deal merry-go-round, they found themselves in the same place where they started from: only more experienced, more hardened, more suspicious of the glib promises of employers and government officials. Today they

"Labor Party" Poor 3rd In S.F.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—Redfern Mason, candidate for mayor on the Communist Party-controlled United Labor ticket, ran a poor third in yesterday's municipal election that re-elected Angelo Rossi, strikebreaking incumbent.
Mason, innocuous head of the Northern California Newspaper Guild and ex-music critic for Hearst's Examiner, polled 14,267 votes out of a total 185,566 cast. Others on the United Labor ticket received approximately the same number of votes, with the exception of George Anderson, candidate for municipal judge. Anderson, active in defending victims of the "red" drive that followed the general strike last year, was the only candidate opposing the incumbent, and counted 37,673 votes as compared to his opponent's 102,904 ballots.

The United Labor Campaign Committee, claiming to represent a "united front" of more than 70 working class and liberal organizations with a total membership of more than 50,000, nominated a ticket and drew up a platform. The list of candidates included Utopians, Epics, Liberals, and just plain Democrats and C. P. members. The platform enumerated 22 demands of a reformist nature, ranging from the elimination of one-man streetcars to the payment of the bonus by Congress.
The United Labor party plans to maintain itself as a permanent organization. The basic program, announced as permanent objectives of the party, contains three major points:
1. For 100 percent unionization of San Francisco.
2. For defense of democratic rights, and against vigilante terror.
3. For lower taxes.
Continuing its policy of the past campaign, the United Labor party makes no mention of the ultimate aim of the working class: the attainment of socialism.

program of militancy, class struggle, a fighting determination to win, and a trade unionism based upon such principles.

Green Policy Repulses Independents
Under ordinary circumstances, independent unions in their natural evolution would gravitate towards the A. F. of L.; and unless insuperable obstacles were placed in the way of their joining, would become a part of the official family. The A. F. of L., by its size, its prestige, tradition and treasury, is naturally the main attractive force in the trade union field. The fact that these independent unions at Dodge and Hudson are looking instead to an amalgamation independent of the A. F. of L. is striking proof that Collins, Dillon and Green have in the course of a year and a half run through all of their accumulated credit and will now have to take the path of some real, old fashioned organizing in the automobile field or lose all standing in the Detroit area.

The emergence of a powerful, aggressive, fighting union in the automobile industry (it is estimated the amalgamated union would number 40,000) can have a highly salutary effect upon the automobile workers. First, it will clear the field of all the different small independent unions and will eliminate a considerable amount of the confusion. Second, and this is the more important reason, the pressure upon the treacherous bureaucracy of the A. F. of L. from within and without will become enormous. With the proper perspective and strategy, the possibility will emerge of forming a powerful, fighting union through an amalgamation of the independent union and the A. F. of L. International on the basis of a convention, democratically called, democratically selecting its own officers and commanding jurisdiction over all employees working in or around all automobile and auto parts plants.

Rubber Union In 2 Hr. Strike

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, Nov. 11.—A two-hour "strike" of all workers in the truck tire department at Goodyear protesting a wage cut gave further impetus to the organization drive of the United Rubber Workers of America this week.
A special meeting for the truck tire builders was held at the Goodyear local hall which resulted in additional members for the union a day after the "strike."
This was the third department in Goodyear which sat down at work while a delegation went to the management to demand a restoration of wage rates in the past few weeks.
Two well attended meetings for all Akron rubber workers were addressed by officials of the United Rubber workers union as each local prepared to resist any company attempts to follow Goodyear's policy as agreed.
Meanwhile the "Big Five" tire manufacturers made a temporary truce in the price war which means they'll reap more profits since they've reduced wages in some departments in the plants.
The Goodyear workers' "strikes" brought temporary withdrawal of the wage cuts but in each instance the company slyly reduced piece work rates individually in an effort to prevent wide-spread protest.
However, resentment continues to increase among the workers and the union obtains new members.
These developments indicate that the possibility of a strike in the rubber industry during this peak season gains weight since only through a well-planned strike can the United Rubber Workers resist the rubber barons' ruthless policies.

New Pamphlets

We are now embarking on a new program of pamphlet publication to be issued and distributed by the NEW MILITANT business office. The first pamphlet to be published under this arrangement deals with the burning question of war, written by John West. It is already in the printers' hands and should be out within a couple of weeks.
Into its forty-eight pages is crammed a thorough Marxian analysis of imperialist wars. It is entirely up-to-date, dealing with the issues involved in the war in Ethiopia and the present conflicting imperialist interests that threaten to expand this war into a general world conflagration. The role of the League of Nations, the role of social-patriotism and the agents of social-patriotism in the present war situation is thoroughly dealt with.
In this pamphlet by comrade West we have a veritable arsenal of unassailable Marxian arguments. In sum and substance it plants the banner of revolutionary Marxism right in the teeth of the imperialist war mongers.

This pamphlet will retail at 10 cents and party branches should send in their orders right away. Better yet, any orders paid in advance will speed the actual appearance of this pamphlet. The wholesale price is 7 cents per copy for 10 copies or more, with special arrangements for special sized orders; but credit will be given only to a limited extent.
It is important to remember, however, that the distribution of this pamphlet is considered a very important part of the party's campaign against war. It must therefore be given the widest possible circulation. Branches would do well by assigning to themselves a definite quota of pamphlets to distribute and set to work without delay.
Other pamphlets are on the schedule and will follow in short order. From comrade Trotsky we receive a promise of manuscript for a pamphlet on the Seventh Comintern Congress. A pamphlet on the A. F. of L., by Arno Swabeck is also in preparation. Others will be announced subsequently.

I. C. L. Resolution On Youth Bureau

On October 12, our comrade Held was expelled from the Stockholm Youth Bureau meeting in Oslo for refusal to obey the ultimatum demand of the majority of the Secretariat (S.A.P.; Mot Dag, Swedish Youth) that he dissociate himself from the criticism of the I.C.L. of the Youth Bureau.

The I.S. points out that simultaneously with the expulsion of the internationalist revolutionary wing of the Socialist Youth of France by the bureaucracy of the S.F.I.O. acting on orders of Stalin and Laval, the S.A.P. through its representative on the Youth Bureau makes an alliance against the I.C.L. with organizations (such as the Mot Dag of Norway) which defend Stalin and the union sacree: the I. S. characterizes this as a policy of betrayal.

Following the split the I. S. declines all responsibility for the policy of the Stockholm Youth Bureau and calls upon all organizations to protest vehemently against the attitude of the secretariat of the Youth Bureau and to refuse all collaboration with the majority of the secretariat. The I. S. wishes to make the observation to the youth organizations that this treacherous policy of the S.A.P. in the Youth Bureau is the result of its hostility toward the creation of the Fourth International, and calls upon all organizations affiliated to the Youth Bureau to rally to the Open Letter to all working class organizations in the world for the Fourth International and to set to work for the creation of the youth sections of the Fourth International.

A MESSAGE TO NEW MILITANT READERS

November 7th saw the first eight-page NEW MILITANT. Next week, the first anniversary of the Workers Party, the second will appear. The proof will then be conclusive of the infinite value added to the only revolutionary paper by its enlarged size. Our members are convinced; they are prepared for the final push to send the regular eight-page NEW MILITANT over the top. The entire machinery of the party is being geared up to high-speed for the attainment of this goal in the shortest possible time. 1,000 subs by Christmas will do the trick. Every branch has its quota and every member his assignment. But our party is small; the members will do their part, but more is needed. We need the help of every sympathizer and supporter of the party to fulfill the goal—and make the eight-pager ours. We need your help. You can get subs from your friends, shopmates and union members. Make your Christmas gift to the Workers Party—send in every sub you can lay hands on. And we will reciprocate with THE EIGHT-PAGE NEW MILITANT!

Fascists Grow Bolder in France after Recent Clash

By H. F. R.

At Limoges on November 17 some 30 French Socialist workers were wounded when members of the Croix de Feu opened fire. "The shooting definitely establishes beyond any possible doubt," says the Daily Worker, "that the Croix de Feu is well-armed for a Fascist coup."

It also proved that the workers were facing the well-armed Fascists with nothing but their bare hands.

Cachin, says the Daily Worker, wants to oust Laval because the government "has not yet made any arrests among the Fascist gunmen."

What is Cachin doing to do about it? Edouard Herriot, Radical co-minister of Laval, is the present beau ideal of the Stalinists for premier—or at least foreign minister.

But this week "Comrade" Herriot bluntly declared that he was "fully in accord" with Laval, that he would countenance no attempt to overthrow Laval, and that he, Herriot, would not take part in any cabinet designed to succeed Laval's.

Dutifully Leon Blum declared before the delegation of Radical-Socialist-Stalinist deputies that any attempt to overthrow the Laval government would be a "dangerous experiment."

The thing to do, said Blum, was to get Laval to dissolve the Fascist leagues, dissolve Parliament and call new elections.

Will Sacrifice "People's Front" Government

One or two Paris reports indicated that the Stalinists, who mortally hate and fear Laval's tendencies to toy with Hitler, are growing fearful. The latest L'Humanite to hand indicates that even the slogan of a "Front Populaire Government" has been forsaken. It is now a simple "government of the left" which the Stalinists demand. And what would this government of the "left" be? A government, writes Jacques Duclos, "which would give life to the resolutions of Wagram." (L'Humanite, Nov. 12.) In other words, the resolutions of the Radical Socialist Party congress which ended on the keynote appeal for "impassioned devotion to national defense!"

Such a government, which will apply, says Duclos, "a left policy," i.e., dissolution of the Fascist leagues—and passionate national defense—"will meet no difficulties from the Communists."

No, hardly. Vaillant Couturier, who marched on November 11 with uniformed, be-medalled war veterans, rhapsodically reported in the columns of L'Humanite that as they marched by, the unanimous electric cry was: "Long live the republican army! Long live the Republic!"

"The Unknown Soldier has once more found his comrades"—is the headline over the Armistice Day spread in L'Humanite. Tragically, it is true. The Cachins who handed over millions to unknown graves in 1914-18 are today preparing to hand the new generation over to the same fate symbolized by the Arc de Triomphe in Paris with the slab of cold marble beneath it.

Egypt Rises In Revolt

British Imperialism Casts Off Hypocritical Mask in Severe Repression

Britain's great show of defending the national rights of the Ethiopian people is not making such a hit since Britain's own national problem burst forth last week in the Waifist (nationalist) riots in Egypt. At the very moment when Sir Samuel Hoare, the British Foreign Secretary, is oozing righteous sympathy for the poor Ethiopians, and calling for a vastly enlarged navy, for the purposes of defending Ethiopia no doubt, six Egyptians are killed and more than a hundred wounded in riots of resentment against a speech on the Egyptian question by Sir Samuel Hoare.

Egypt stands to Britain much as our own Philippines stand to the United States, with the exception that Egypt has already been twice granted an independent constitution, once in 1923 and once in 1930, and twice had that constitution revoked, while the Philippines are just starting their career of so-called independence.

The riots are significant in a larger sense as an indication of the colonial unrest stimulated by the Ethiopian war. Britain at first tried to pass the riots off as the work of Italian agents, just as bosses always try to pass off strikes as the work of outside agitators. This explanation is absurd on the face of it, for the riots and the Egyptian people generally are more than friendly to the Ethiopians in their struggle with Mussolini.

Today there are reports of wider unrest in Egypt, more demonstrations, a deepening movement. "High Egyptian officials," says the "Times," "express fear that more serious troubles are ahead." Nohas Pasha, president of the Wafd movement, said that a protest had been sent to the League and that the Wafd were "seeking the world's sympathy in our struggle."

Nohas Pasha may seek the aid of the world at large through the League of Nations, but the Egyptian nationalist movement can only become a force when the Egyptian workers and poor farmers are enlisted, and when the Egyptian workers appeal not to the world at large, the capitalist world and its Robber League, but to the international working class for support. It is just this possible awakening of the Egyptian workers that causes "high officials" to fear serious troubles ahead.

Roosevelt's "Pacifism"

American financial and industrial interests greedily eyeing the rich plum that the huge Far Eastern market means for them, have a worthy servant in Franklin D. Roosevelt, the extent of whose "pacifist" comment is matched only by the extent of his naval program—the largest in recent history.

The present construction program extends from 1933 to 1938. It involves an outlay of over $650,000,000. There are 87 vessels now in process of construction—33 in eight private yards and 54 in eight navy yards. Present employment in naval construction is nearly 45,000 workers, 19,000 of whom work for private employers, the remainder for the government.

Lewis "Purge" Stopped Cold

574 Heads Confident Of Smashing Victory

Cannon, on the Scene, Reports Drivers Local Stronger than Ever and the Center of the Minneapolis Labor Movement

By JAMES P. CANNON

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 20.—One doesn't have to be here very long to learn that William Green picked the poorest spot in the country to begin his ill-fated campaign against radicalism and militancy in the A. F. of L. Meyer Lewis, the man selected by Green to do the job here, has made such a miserable showing that his early elimination from the scene is freely predicted on all sides. The stormy reception accorded him at the Central Labor Union the other night—his first appearance before a labor body after numerous speeches before employers' meetings, luncheons and teas—showed that he has ceased to inspire any fear even among the old-line labor leaders and has become a nuisance and a joke.

Meantime Local 574, the spearhead of progressivism and militancy, which met his red-baiting campaign with a savage counter-offensive, is still fighting, going stronger than ever and recruiting new members daily.

574 Demands Return of Charter

In a direct move to consolidate the struggle, the Central Labor Union has appointed a special committee, supplementary to its executive board and jointly with it, to negotiate with local 574. These negotiations are now in progress. In conference with the C.L.U. committee, and in a statement prepared today, the executive board of Local 574 reiterated its basic position that a fundamental settlement of the issue necessitates the restoration of its charter and the recognition of the jurisdictional rights obtaining prior to its revocation. Local 574, in its statement, showed from the record that it had not infringed on the jurisdiction of any other unions but, on the contrary, had cooperated with them in their struggles and helped to build them up. At the same time it asserted the firm determination to maintain the organization it has built at the cost of so much blood and sacrifice and to defend itself against attacks from any quarter, regardless of whether they come from the Citizens Alliance, Mayor Latimer's police, or misleaders sowing disruption in the labor movement.

Local 574 is well-equipped for the fight. Its leaders count on victory with a superb self-confidence. The magnificent organization which went through the great strikes of 1934 with such a shining record is not fighting with its back to the wall any more. The morale of its membership, tested and hardened in heroic battles, is on the heights. Job control is more secure than ever. The authority of the leadership is undisputed. The sympathy of the rank and file of organized labor is outspokenly on the side of local 574. Unless all signs fall progressive unionism will come out of the present conflict in Minneapolis with a smashing victory which will herald the collapse of the anti-Red campaign on a national scale.

Next week I will provide the readers of the NEW MILITANT with a first-hand account in some detail of the present situation of local 574 and the facts in the situation which justify every militant in the labor movement in looking to the outcome of the struggle here with enthusiasm and hope.

Jim-Crow Justice Keeps Angelo Herndon in Jail; Protest Now!

With hundreds of thousands of workers and sympathizers, white and black, anxiously awaiting news as to Angelo Herndon's fate, Judge Hugh M. Dorsey of Atlanta Superior Court on November 13 reserved decision in a suit brought by the International Labor Defense for a writ of habeas corpus. Through this suit, brought for the I.L.D. by Attorneys Seymour and Sutherland, the I.L.D. hopes to upset the sentence of 18 to 20 years on a chain gang.

Herndon, whose appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court was thrown out on the technical ground that it had not been properly prepared for in the lower courts, is today in Fulton Tower Jail in Atlanta. Should Judge Dorsey grant the writ, the prosecution would go over his head and appeal to the Georgia Supreme Court to order Herndon's rearrest. The fight will almost certainly go to the U. S. Supreme

EXPOSED!

Bradley, Lewis Aide Revealed as Swindler in Akron

By RICHARD FERGUSON

AKRON, O., Nov. 19.—Following hard on his activities with Meyer Lewis, representative of William Green, in attempting to purge the Minneapolis labor movement of all militant workers, H. A. Bradley, president of the national council of petroleum workers, is rapidly being exposed here as a corrupt swindler. Steps are being taken to oust him forever from the ranks of organized labor.

Although the exposure of Bradley has no connection with the Minneapolis affair, its importance is immediately evident. Without the trumped-up excuse of "driving out the reds," this time Bradley has been found guilty by Akron labor of busting up unions in other ways—by illegally suspending the charter of Stenographers, Typists, Bookkeepers and Assistants Local 19206, by completely wrecking a union with which he was connected in the past, and by alleged double-stealing in his own gas station attendants' union.

Already at least two international locals have sent sharp demands to their representatives on the A. F. of L. Executive Council that Bradley at once be driven from his office and expelled forever from the A. F. of L. Other international unions, including the United Rubber Workers of America, are expected to take action in similar manner in the near future.

Complete information on these latest moves is still lacking, but reliable sources have indicated that the above exposures will not only be further related, but that they may be extended to include those persons high up in the "leadership" of the A. F. of L. with whom Bradley must have been acting in full accord.

Once again the membership of the A. F. of L. is getting a chance to peer into the inner life of the labor bureaucracy. And what a stench comes forth! Here are the men who want weak, easily-dominated unions, unions in which the backbone of progressive and radical thought has been broken. Labor throughout the country must answer with a full-throated cry AGAINST their splitting policies.

Meyer Lewis Has to Catch Train--

After Students and 574 President Get Thru with Him

MINNEAPOLIS.—On Tuesday, Nov. 12, Meyer Lewis, the mighty union splitter, was scheduled to appear before the University of Minnesota Student Forum and tell how he was going to make the world safe for trade union bureaucracy.

Undoubtedly, Meyer considered this occasion as just another step in his program of rallying non-union support in his and Bill Green's campaign for the destruction of the living union movement. The subject of his talk, as it appeared on placards distributed all over the campus, was "The A. F. of L. Red Purge in Minneapolis." Meyer thought, unquestionably, that he was going to hold forth, this time also, before another boss club—a junior edition of the Citizens Alliance or of the Chamber of Commerce, perhaps. He thought, too, that it would be easy going; wouldn't the students, like any other boss organization, simply drink in every word he had to say and accept it as the gospel truth? Wouldn't they just adore his union-splitting tricks?

Meyer Meets Bill Brown

Meyer was sitting upon a settee in the room where the Forum meets, waiting for the meeting to begin and in the meantime basking in the glory of his anticipated victory. In a few minutes, as if by a dash of cold water, Meyer was rudely brought back to reality. Bill Brown, Ray Dunne and Grant Dunne walked in through the door of the Forum hall. A student at the university, sympathetic to 574, having learned of Lewis' scheduled appearance at the Forum, had invited the leaders of 574 to come down so that they could get the dope direct from Lewis' own lips. As the leaders of 574 walked through the door, they were greeted by "Hi, there, Bill. Do you know Meyer Lewis? Meet Bill Brown, president of 574." Bill Brown shook hands and said, "Meyer, do you know Ray and Grant Dunne?" This was the first time that Meyer had come face to face with the leaders of 574, whom he was trying to purge. It was a rude shock for him, indeed. But the leaders of 574 enjoyed it immensely; they obtained front row seats, right under Lewis' nose. You see, they didn't want to miss a word!

When Lewis got up to talk, he was not going to talk about the A. (Continued from Page 2)

Stormy C.L.U. Rally in Mpls. Voices Protest

Green Stooze Forced to Backwater on Hosiery Strike Despite Solidarity with 574; C.P. Plays Cowardly Role.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 18.—Meyer Lewis, despite the fact that he has the complete backing of William Green, Farmer-Labor Mayor Latimer, and the bosses—with the Communist Party helping in its own way—lost every round in last week's battle to split the strong Minneapolis labor movement and smash fighting Local 574.

The regular Tuesday noon business agents' luncheon openly opposed him, and had to be hurriedly adjourned.

At the Tuesday Student Forum at the University of Minnesota, where Lewis spoke, he was given the most brutal verbal wracking that a speaker there has ever received.

On Wednesday night the membership of the expelled Laundry Workers Local No. 18005 voted unanimously to support its executive board in repudiating Lewis and continuing friendly relations with Local 574. Lewis' appearance at the Central Labor Union meeting Wednesday night, the first time he has appeared there in his six weeks' stay in Minneapolis, was the signal for one of the stormiest sessions the C.L.U. has ever seen. Not one delegate took the floor to support Lewis.

Lewis has been forced to make an abrupt about-face and come out in open support of the Strutwear strikers.

A Planned Frame-up

Finally, in desperation, Lewis and the Latimer city administration began the use of gutter tactics and attempted a frame-up. On Wednesday night, Local 574 had planned a stag-show for its membership. Just before the show was about to go on before 700 workers, word came that the police were all set to raid 574 and arrest the leaders. Three hundred police, with patrol wagons and armored cars, were all set to make the raid, and provoke a fight. A dozen plain clothes men were in the audience. The newspapers actually had the whole story already set up and ready to run in Thursday's papers. The plan was to arrest a bunch of prostitutes in Minneapolis' red-light district and use them as a background against which to photograph the 574 leaders. But at the last minute the scheme leaked out, and the stag-show was called off and the money refunded. Seven hundred men left the hall with even less love for Meyer Lewis and Mayor Latimer who had suddenly taken such a fatherly interest in the morals of 574's membership.

This wasn't the only frame-up attempted that night. One of the 574 leaders, Harry DeBoer, was picked up the same night by the cops and thrown into jail, charged with disorderly conduct, an old charge growing out of the May, 1934, drivers' strike, and one that had been settled out of court over a year ago. DeBoer was released on $25 bail early the following morning, and the next day when his case came up in court, the judge was forced to postpone it for lack of evidence. The two incidents cited above show the growing bitterness of the current struggle in Minneapolis, and the lengths to which the reactionaries are willing to go in their fight against militant unionism. Readers of the NEW MILITANT should not be surprised if, in the near future, they hear that various militant trade unionists have been arrested on the most outrageous charges that can be conceived by the enemies of the working class.

574 Goes to College

At the Tuesday business agents' luncheon, one of the delegates rose and demanded point-blank that the group reach a decision on the Lewis-Green drive; as for himself, he was completely opposed to Lewis' fight on 574. Support immediately rallied to this suggestion, with the result that Pat Corcoran, chairman, had to hurriedly adjourn the meeting.

At about the same time, Mr. Lewis was making the fatal mistake of addressing a student forum at the University (reported elsewhere in this issue), and got the drubbing of his life.

The affair was a field-day for 574, a pleasant interlude in the bitter struggle that is taking place in Minneapolis today. Incidentally the Minnesota Daily, student newspaper, came out next day with a story and editorial attacking Lewis, and that night broadcast over the university radio station the story (Continued from Page 2)

Scottsboro Boys in Danger as Southern Bourbons Hint Deal

Two days after new indictments were returned against the Scottsboro boys by a grand jury, an authoritative spokesman of the Alabama authorities openly intimated they were prepared to let the Scottsboro boys off, if the International Labor Defense were prepared to make a deal.

If the Scottsboro case is turned over by the I.L.D. to non-labor elements and thus ceases to be identified with the cause of labor and oppressed minorities, an acquittal is implicitly promised by John Temple Graves, prominent Birmingham editor, whose editorial correspondence to the Sunday edition of the New York Times during the trials and appeals authoritatively expressed the policy which the Southern bourbons subsequently carried out.

The Bourbon Deal

"In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among the Southern Negroes," declares Graves in the New York Times of November 16. "These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the I.L.D. were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as 'outside interference in Alabama's affairs.' This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case."

Emptiness of Supreme Court Decision

In the same article, the Alabama editor boasts that the U.S. Supreme Court decision requiring placing of Negroes on jury rolls does not interfere with chauvinist exclusion of Negroes.

The dispatch with which the Southern rulers have rendered meaningless the legalistic requirements of the Supreme Court proves to the hilt that their "honor" does not exist where "white supremacy"—which is actually the policy of divide and rule—is involved. If the I.L.D. opportunistically turns the case over to "respectable people" and the necessary militant mass support of the labor movement is not built up, the Scottsboro boys are in greater danger than they were when the I.L.D. combusted a sectarian policy of adventurist stunts under the sole banner of the C. P. and the I.L.D. with trimmings in the form of Attorney Liebowitz's catering to Southern prejudices. Only evidence of the determination of the organized political and trade union forces of labor to support the Scottsboro fight will convince the Alabama bourbons that the Scottsboro boys must be freed.

Our Revolutionary Heritage:

Shays' Rebellion

By Leighton Rigby

Note: Hearst quotes Jefferson. But quotations, like statistics, can be so manipulated as to seemingly prove a black lie is a pious truth. Jerked from their true settings and placed in new ones, quotations often shine with false brilliance and fool the eye.

Yes, Hearst quotes Jefferson. But what about Thomas Jefferson's opinion of Shays' Rebellion? If it were not so horribly tragic, it would be amusing to watch the Hearstians as they avoid that opinion on tiptoe. "God forbid that we should ever be for twenty years without such a rebellion," and "The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of tyrants." That's the real Thomas Jefferson, the Jefferson who fought tyrants but was impeded by lack of a fundamental knowledge of class relations.

This article concerns Shays' Rebellion, the joy of the real Thomas Jefferson and a part of our revolutionary heritage.

When the "embattled farmers" stood by the rude bridge and "fired the shot heard 'round the world," they were inspired by dreams of freedom from tyranny. Because they were not aware of the inevitability of class dictatorships wherever classes exist, they had the right to hope indeed that victory for them would bring freedom. In the end, they succeeded only in driving out one group of tyrants to make room for another.

The new tyrants did not quickly establish themselves. It was not until the Articles of Confederation were scrapped in favor of the Constitution that the new batch of oppressors were able to make their dictatorship secure. But lack of complete control did not prevent the money leaders, speculators, commercialists and industrialists from making themselves known at once. And while they were engaged in gaining their selfish ends, there was an increasing determination on the part of the agrarian population that freedom should not ring out only to be immediately resubmerged.

In all fairness, we must take care not to magnify the size of the revolutionary group of 1776. Two-thirds of the population either opposed or showed no interest in the conflict. But those who actually fought to destroy tyranny meant to do exactly that, not to effect a mere transfer of rulers. It is probably true that no power could have altered the result; capitalism had something to put forward then besides stinking, decaying flesh. Be that as it may, the truth is that a militant minority sought to overthrow oppression, both the old and the new. Their spirit is our heritage.

Hamilton Safeguards the System

In a society of classes, there must be a ruling class. When the ruling class cannot rule, there is chaos. Such were the circumstances in America following the Declaration of Independence. The new high-and-mighty needed time to learn the art of subtle persuasion. It took Alexander Hamilton to give them their first lesson when he artfully saw to it that the likes of Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, Sam Adams and Tom Paine had no hand in framing the Constitution. That document eventually brought order, in addition to much comfort to shivering capitalists.

Shays' Rebellion was largely responsible for the urgency felt by the capitalists in the matter of drawing up a constitution more suited to their needs. That armed insurrection was the handwriting on the wall that told the new tyrants that to make themselves masters they were obliged to use the whip of artifice to retain democracy, yes, but only in name.

Foreclosures, Taxes, Oppression

In the state of Massachusetts, a group of capitalists (hardly a party)—among them merchants and money lenders—determined to solve their problem by jamming through a state constitution of their own making. Under this code, adopted in 1780, the makers and administrators of the laws were chosen on the basis of their sympathy for the capitalist cause. The immediate result was the hiking of taxes, with the secondary result that wholesale foreclosures and oustings were the order of the day.

As the pressure became daily more hard to bear, the farmers made no secret of their resentment. The spirit of revolt that had led them to boot out one gang of tyrants still smoldered, and each new stinging lash only served to fan higher the fire of indignation. Insurrection was inevitable. Had it not been conducted in 1786 by Daniel Shays, veteran of Bunker Hill, another would have led.

"The Common Property of All"

Congress appointed a committee. (Yes, even then!) In this case it was one man, General Knox, who was sent to Massachusetts to see what was what. His report on the followers of Shays is greatly to the point: "Their creed is that the property of the United States has been protected from the confiscation of Britain by the joint exertions of all, and therefore ought to be the common property of all, and he that attempts opposition to this creed is an enemy to equity and justice, and ought to be swept from off the face of the earth." Let the Hearstians try to explain that quotation away!

The general court of Massachusetts offered the olive branch in the form of questionable "redress," and the chief magistrate summoned the state militia. But Shays, with hundreds of militant followers, was determined that the supreme court should not meet. He was equally determined, moreover, that the ten thousand stand of arms in the continental storehouse should be distributed among the revolutionists. The supreme court of Massachusetts under the state constitution of 1780 would probably have disappeared indeed had Shays been able to gain possession of the too-well-guarded arms, thus augmenting the lean supply of the insurrectionists.

"A Strong" Government

There was quaking among the influential throughout the land. Fears of a general agrarian revolt led to talk of an outright military dictatorship. Colonel Humphreys held that "nothing but a good Providence can extricate us from the present convulsion," and he begged George Washington to again enter the arena. The latter was stunned by the events: "What, gracious God! is man, that there should be such inconsistency and perfidiousness in his conduct." But he was also moved to vigorously propose greater constitutional power for the federal government to suppress local revolts: "What stronger evidence can be given of the want of energy in our government than these disturbances?" And, make no mistake! the money lenders and commercialists were bent even more on making their position more secure.

In the end, the leaders of the revolt sought refuge in Canada, and Shays' revolutionists suffered disfranchisement at the hands of the Massachusetts legislators. The insurrection was put down, but not until the clash of arms had revealed the militancy of oppressed Americans.

The militant working class of today is the counterpart of the "embattled farmers" of yesterday. If they of 1776 believed democracy possible in spite of class antagonisms, the reason lies in their lack of experience. We have no will to brush their memory aside, nor do we intend to allow them to be clothed in the garments provided by capitalist apologists. Their example is our tradition, our heritage. The tree of liberty will again be refreshed with the blood of tyrants!

C.L.U. Raps Meyer Lewis

Bosess Plan to Open Strutwear

On Wednesday noon the Citizens Alliance held a meeting at the Radisson Hotel and outlined a plan to re-open Strutwear and break the 4-month strike—the bosses claimed their proposed action was on a "non-controversial basis." The Citizens Alliance had taken Lewis at his word (he had previously come out against the hosiers workers' strike) and thought they saw the chance to deliver a blow at the organized labor movement. Previously, Lewis had tried to get Alexander McKeown, first vice-president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, who is in Minneapolis, to come out with a statement denouncing 574. This McKeown refused to do, maintaining that it was 574 who had been the chief force in making the strike a success. This move of the bosses put Lewis right up against the gun, and he had to make a complete change of front, formally announcing that the A. F. of L. was standing behind the hosiers workers' strike to the fullest extent.

The C.L.U. Meeting

On Wednesday night Meyer Lewis went into the Central Labor Union meeting all primed to beat down opposition to his outrageous splitting program; for this purpose he was ready to wield the club of wholesale expulsion from the A. F. of L. An awful surprise was due him. In a heated four-hour session, not one delegate took the floor supporting his game. Instead, delegate after delegate arose in absolute opposition to the Green-Lewis drive, the fight on the floor being ably led by Sanders Genis of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Even T. E. Cunningham, president of the State Federation of Labor and chairman of the meeting, opposed Lewis.

The significance of this event can only be understood if one recalls the impressive showing of the industrial unionists at the Atlantic City A. F. of L. convention, plus the recent move of the John L. Lewis group to wage a nation-wide campaign on behalf of industrial unionism within the A. F. of L. through a "committee for industrial organization," in cooperation with Charles Howard, Sidney Hillman, Dubinsky, McMahon, Fleming, Zaritsky, Brophy, Thomas Brown and other A. F. of L. leaders. There can be little doubt that this committee had already contacted various Minneapolis locals. The fact that various reactionary labor leaders are already no longer willing to go along with Green in his fight would seem to indicate that Green's days are numbered, and that the policies he advocates are fast headed for oblivion—faster than was even suspected by the most optimistic of his opponents.

Stalinists Play Miserable Role
In closing, it is well to point out the role that the Communist Party has played locally in the Green drive on the progressives. It will be recalled that in the Daily Worker of November 6, the Communist Party took a good position on the Minneapolis "red hunt," saying editorially that "Meyer Lewis is trying to expel not only Communists, but all progressives from the unions. He is attacking the very teamsters who have led Minneapolis labor's most heroic struggles," and closing by appealing to labor to repudiate Lewis and drive him from Minneapolis.

We will only pause here for an instant to smile at the C. P.'s admission that Local 574 has led heroic struggles in Minneapolis, and to recall a certain no-longer available pamphlet entitled "Permanent Counter-Revolution in Minneapolis." The truth is that the local Stalinists have played exactly the same game in the Lewis-Green drive that they played in the truck strikes of 1934. The truth is that the actions of the local Stalinists is at complete variance with the position the C. P. puts forth in the Daily Worker. The truth is that the actions of the local Stalinists are so vile and anti-labor that they dare not tell their own supporters in the nation just exactly what they are doing in Minneapolis.

Let us observe them in action. Prior to the November 8 mass meeting in 574's auditorium, various Stalinists came to 574 and asked that the mass meeting be held under the auspices of the Conference of 15 Unions, a group of locals who had banded together to fight for progressive labor principles. 574 replied that the situation was too serious, that it was not ready to place its fate at that time in the hands of people who had not yet been tested in the fire. A few weeks' time would show who were the friends and who the enemies of labor in Minneapolis. The Stalinists were invited to send speakers to the mass meeting and assured they would be given the floor.

C. P. Funks on 574

Events quickly showed how correct 574's stand was. The night prior to the mass meeting the Auto Mechanics Local 382 (the very local for whom 574 has done most in assisting to fight the bosses) met and decided to withdraw from the conference of progressive unions, the Stalinists attacked the 574 leaders as "dishonest" and moved to send no speakers to the mass meeting. In short, the C. P. completely fumbled the fight and rolled over to Meyer Lewis in his "red drive." The C. P. did precisely what they did for their treacherous strikes, sided openly with the worst enemies of the working class against Local 574.

The Stalinists, in the last few days, have seen their mistake. Yesterday they sent a delegation to 574 to seek a reconciliation. It was pointed out to them that they had been the very first to go over to the enemy after the "brave" stand they had taken prior to the

F. of L. purge, as had been announced. His subject was to be "The Attitude of the A. F. of L. toward the Minneapolis Situation." He further revealed how disturbed he was by the presence of the leaders of 574 by giving a loose, rambling talk. He told how the depression had resulted in terrible conditions for the workers all over the nation; and how it was to be expected that there would be trouble (for the bosses, he meant) arising from such conditions. But in Minneapolis, labor troubles were not due to bad working conditions and low wages. They were due to "outside influences." There were two outside influences in Minneapolis—the "Communists," who are the same as the leaders of 574; and the Citizens Alliance—the extremists on the bosses' side of the picture. Now, Meyer said with some emphasis, the A. F. of L. is not opposed to the members of either the Citizens Alliance or of 574. The member in both organizations are all very fine. It is only opposed to the leaders; but particularly to the leaders of 574 who use intimidation and threats to force unwilling workers to accept better working conditions and raises in pay. The latter is entirely opposite to the methods of the A. F. of L., which Lewis proudly called "conservative." The methods of the A. F. of L. are "cautious, slow, and gradual." The A. F. of L. does not believe in strikes—and Lewis admitted that one of his main jobs in the past few years has been "flying from city to city and stopping strikes when we didn't think they were justified." The A. F. of L. believed that the rank and file of the bosses were few fellows at heart, and that if "outside influences" would stop stirring up trouble the bosses would fall over each other trying to make life sweet for the workers.

Reserves Right to Refuse to Reply
After having finished with this rubbish, Meyer announced that he "reserved the right to refuse to answer any questions not put in the proper spirit." But the students and faculty were not impressed by his high and mighty attitude. One professor jumped up, and made a point of order that it was not for the speaker to decide whether a question was proper or not but for the student chairman. This brought considerable applause from the audience, and showed immediately that the students were almost to a man hostile to Lewis and his malicious slanders and falsehoods. From that time on, Lewis did not have a comfortable moment. In the words of The Minnesota Daily, student organ, Lewis brought down upon himself "the scorn of the audience, which asked questions with a decided 'put him on the spot' intent."

One student asked Lewis why he had so far depended entirely upon publicity in the capitalist papers, and why he had not yet appeared before any unions? Lewis replied that in the six weeks that he had been here the C.L.U. had not met, but that he intended to appear before the C.L.U. the next day. Everyone in the audience knew he was lying, because the questioner pointed out that the C.L.U. met every other Wednesday, and had actually met. To many of the other questions, Lewis refused to reply directly, saying "You'd be surprised." He said this so many times that it became a joke, and Bill Brown dubbed him "You'd-be-surprised" Lewis.

Brown Shoots a Question

Then Bill Brown got up. "I'm Bill Brown, President of 574," he announced. All eyes turned upon him. Lewis became excited and shouted, "Before you ask your question, I'll tell you I won't answer it." Quick as a trigger, Bill flashed back, "I don't expect you to answer my question before I ask it." This witty retort brought down thunderous applause and laughter. Never had there been so riotous a Student Forum. When the applause and laughter subsided, Bill went on to say, "You say that Minneapolis has become the worst spot in the United States for labor troubles. Just what do you mean? Here the workers have taken control of their own economic and political organizations, and have succeeded in improving their conditions. Does that make it a bad spot for labor?" Lewis, forced to make a reply, said that he was against 574 because it was against the principles of the A. F. of L., the first of which is that Green is the only prophet of American labor, and there is no other. Lewis was forced to abandon all pretenses of defending democracy against communism, or American principles against the Reds. In almost so many words, he revealed that the present drive against "five-seventy-four" has at its basis a struggle for continued power on the part of the bureaucracy. Green, Lewis, Tobin and Co. demand the right to continue to slowly strangle the American labor movement to death. They are determined, Lewis admitted, to keep the A. F. of L. pure—that is, to expel any and all elements which threaten the control of the present masters of the A. F. of L. Any effort to agitate within the ranks of the A. F. of L. for the reform of the A. F. of L. is a "violation of the principles of the A. F. of L."—principles laid down by the bureaucracy in their own interests. Thus, willy-nilly, all of Lewis' pretensions were punctured, and he was forced to reveal his real purposes.

Lewis Has Enough and Scrams
When asked by a student why the members of 574 did not join local 500 if they were dissatisfied with their present leaders, Lewis replied, "How do you know they haven't joined?" This brought a loud laugh from the students; and the questioner, taking up the challenge, replied that more than 3,000 members of 574 and other trade unions had attended a mass meeting called by 574 the preceding Friday. "How do you know that the people present were members of 574?" Lewis asked. This brought a number of students to their feet, and one of them shouted that he had been there and had seen most of the people present wearing 574 buttons. "Well, you'll be surprised six months from now," was all Lewis could reply. By now, the hostility of the audience had begun to wear upon Lewis' hearty but obtuse frame. Casting a glance at his watch he announced that he would have to leave after the next question were asked. And thus did Meyer meet, instead of a warm welcome and sympathy, one of the most crushing defeats that any speaker at the Forum has ever experienced.

So dramatic was the appearance of Bill Brown at this meeting; so witty his remarks to Lewis; that the next evening the University of Minnesota "Daily" broadcasted the highlights of the Forum meeting as part of its regular newscast. The necessity for a genuine workers' paper in Minneapolis is revealed by the way in which the daily press covered up completely Lewis' defeat at the Forum. This is just another instance of how the daily papers serve as instruments of the employer-class. Build "The Organizer"! Push its sub-drive on to victory!

Shachtman Holds First Meeting In Fresno, Cal.

FRESNO, Cal., Nov. 14.—Max Shachtman spoke to a group of twenty people at a meeting under the auspices of the Fresno branch of the Workers Party tonight.

His talk on the subject of "War and the Working Class" was well received. Many questions were asked and answered to the satisfaction of an enthusiastic audience.

This was the first public meeting held by the Fresno branch since it was organized less than one month ago, and although the turnout was small it speaks well for a town which is considered by many to be reactionary and apathetic. The Workers Party branch of Fresno, however, feels that this town is misjudged, and that a strong working class movement will soon be established. —G.H.

Textile Barons Ready For War

"The outbreak of a war involving the United States would find the cotton textile industry well prepared for rapid mobilization of its resources, the United States Army Industrial College was assured today by George A. Sloan." (Daily News Record, Oct. 29, 1935.)

Mr. Sloan, who was formerly president of the Cotton Textile Institute, the One Big Union of the cotton mill magnates, told the Army college that the Institute "has developed a splendid technique for determining the facilities for manufacturing the various types of cotton products that the nation would need in time of war."

He referred to the preparations for war in the textile field that the War Department has been making in cooperation with mill owners. "Needless to say," he added, "the cotton manufacturers are always only too glad to cooperate with the War Department. . . . Such cooperation between the Government and industry cannot but help to pay dividends—so to speak—in the form of the most practical and efficient product for the purpose of which it is intended."

Support Italian Comrades In Their Struggle Against Fascism and War

MUSOLINI must go.

But with Mussolini, ITALIAN CAPITALISM must also go.

OUR ITALIAN COMRADES HAVE CONSTITUTED

a Coordination Committee for the Revolutionary Struggle in Italy. This Committee of Coordination has issued a manifesto to the Italian soldiers, to the youth, to the Italian mothers, to the workers and peasants that:

ONLY REVOLUTIONARY STRUGGLE

with the aim of overthrowing Italian capitalism can yield any results; that all CLASS COLLABORATION is a betrayal of the working class and that the path of the so-called "popular front" is nothing else than collaboration with the bourgeoisie.

The Coordination Committee needs funds:

Everywhere where there are Italians, REAL enemies of Italian Fascism; everywhere where there are revolutionists able to understand the extreme importance of an Italian revolution—everywhere they are asking for funds for the revolutionary struggle in Italy.

'Social Credit' Goes Begging

A terrible fate has overtaken the Social Credit movement—it has a chance to put its theories into practice.

In the last Canadian elections the Social Crediters swept the province of Alberta, Canada, under the leadership of Premier Aberhart, promising a social credit paradise of $25 per month to man, woman and child within eighteen months after election.

Today we find that Premier Aberhart has extended the time limit from eighteen months to two years, and hardly a few months gone since the election.

Twenty-five dollars a month is no fortune, in the United States there are many relief workers who receive the same miserable pittance, and that without any fancy social credit theories. Yet Mr. Aberhart has so far failed to provide even that. He has limited himself to economies, the last resort of every reform government. He has abolished several of the provincial departments, applied to the government for financial relief, and is planning to convert the provincial loan to a lower rate of interest. Not a very auspicious start for a movement that is supposed to rejuvenate the whole capitalist system.

The social creditors are already beginning to excuse themselves on the ground that the previous administration left them an empty treasury, an unbalanced budget, and a huge debt. Not a very original excuse.

The great social credit crusade has its lighter side: Major Douglas, the originator of the system, has so far refused to commit himself to the experiment.

"The major has told London newspaper correspondents that he has not been asked to come to Alberta. Mr. Aberhart's provincial secretary, Ernest Manning, has denied from the platform that there is any rift and that the major would not be needed until the foundations had been laid.

"Mr. Aberhart himself has declared that he is awaiting word from the Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, dean of Canterbury, who was asked to interview Douglas on Alberta's behalf."

It would seem that the major is somewhat reluctant to associate himself with the concrete application of the system he has been lecturing on for the last ten years. After all a lecture is one thing, a real government problem another. . . . and lectures are much easier.

THE MANAGER'S CORNER

The best results in the campaign to increase our circulation by 1,000 new subscribers at the time of the second Workers Party convention, to be held Dec. 26, have come so far from New York City. Even here, however, it is necessary to say that it is only a beginning. But a number of our very best subscribers from various parts of the country have informed us that their plans are ready and they are going to work.

In New York City the best record is held by Branch 1. Undoubtedly this is due to the fact that this branch has in comrade Ray Saunders an exceedingly active and efficient literature agent. The cooperation she receives from the membership flows essentially from her own careful attention and effective methods of organizing the drive. Branch 3 is also moving forward apparently in an effort to contest Branch 1 for first place.

Less than five weeks are still available for the various branches to work and make good on their quota of new subscriptions. Is it necessary to mention again that speed is essential?

Since our last report on the campaign we have received 29 new subscriptions and the standing of the branches is as listed below:

WORKMEN'S SICK AND DEATH BENEFIT FUND

51st JUBILEE CELEBRATION WITH BALL

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1935, 3:30 P.M.

ST. NICHOLAS PALACE, 66th St. and Columbus Ave.

- Concert - Varieties - Ball -

Guest Speaker: NORMAN THOMAS

Tickets: Advance 25c; at box office 40c.

The Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, for more than half a century a pioneer in the field of Fraternal Insurance and advocate of Social Insurance, will celebrate its 51st anniversary on Sunday, Nov. 24, at St. Nicholas Palace, 66th Street and Columbus Avenue, New York.

As at past occasions a program will be presented, that will mainly consist of the splendid achievements of our workers' cultural clubs. The performances of the Mass Chorus of the Workers Singing Societies, the New Theater Group, the modern dances of the Nature Friends and a 30-piece Philharmonic orchestra under the baton of the well-known conductor Franz Kaltenborn will find the approval of even the most fastidious audience. Norman Thomas, as guest speaker, will be another attraction.

The advance price for tickets is 25c, admission at box office 40c. The arrangements committee extends its invitation not only to members of this society, but also to the masses of progressive workers and to all friends of the Anti-Fascist movement. The program will start at 3:30 P.M. sharp.

By JACK WEBER

Scottsboro Case

Once more the Scottsboro boys are to face capitalist legal-lynch law of the South. This time just to satisfy those old fogies of the Supreme Court the farce has been enacted of placing one Negro on the grand jury rolls. Nobody has any illusions at all that this means a change in attitude towards the Negro or his "rights." On the contrary, the press treats the matter with utter cynicism, pointing out that of course no Negro will actually be allowed to serve on trial juries. The cynical gesture has exactly the same meaning as that of Hitler in inviting two Jews to participate in the Olympics. Nobody is taken in by the farce, but it permits the reactionaries to gloss over the realities and to state that the formal rules of the game have been satisfied. The ruling class would like nothing better than to have the Negro boys quietly convicted without too much public fuss. This the class-conscious workers will never permit. Mass pressure must be aroused once again to snatch these boys out of the hands of the lynchers and to ward off this act of terrorism against the oppressed Negroes of the U. S.

Egypt...

One of the reasons for British opposition to the Italian invasion of Ethiopia was the dread that the sympathies of every colonial people would be actively aroused and might take channels of revolt against the immediate oppressor. The fear of the English ruling class has already been justified by the events in Egypt. All that was required to get off the spark was the speech of Hoare, British Foreign Minister, giving clear evidence that the rulers of Egypt did not intend to carry out a previous promise to grant a new constitution. The first constitution of 1923 had been replaced by a new one in 1930. The latter had been abrogated in 1934 when the Wafdist movement became a threat to British rule. The reactionary speech of Hoare started student demonstrations and riots that were put down ruthlessly by troops. This is the beginning of a revived movement for independence in Egypt, one of the fruits of the Italian attack on Ethiopia. It would not require much to cause the spread of this movement for national liberation to the other colonies of Great Britain, particularly India. A widespread concerted movement of revolt of the colonial countries would be a blow not only at British imperialism but at all imperialism.

Shanghai...

An open anti-Japanese movement sprang up in Shanghai this week. The threat of the Japanese to take over the five northern provinces produced a feeling of desperation and the demand for a war against the invaders. The situation in Shanghai resulting from this agitation and some demonstrations against the Japanese, became so tense that the population of Shanghai, mindful of the previous brutality and slaughter in this district, flocked into the International Settlement by the tens and scores of thousands. The hatred and mistrust of the Japanese brigands is too great for the Chinese masses to believe the words of "reassurance" issued by the Japanese army representatives that no bombardment or invasion was intended. The Nippon imperialists have been laying the basis for some time for large scale operations designed to meet any resistance that might ensue when the seizure of the northern provinces was consummated.

Old Guard Reorganizes N.Y. Socialist Party

After weeks of conferences to decide upon a course of action, the Socialist Old Guard has decided to stay in the Socialist Party and capture control of the national apparatus by hook or crook.

The first important step in its campaign to get a majority at the national convention in May, 1936 was taken at the November 13 meeting of the New York City Central Committee when, by a vote of 69 to 47, the Old Guard vested dictatorial power in the all-Old Guard City Executive for a sweeping reorganization of the New York branches.

The resolution bluntly states that the purpose of the reorganization is "to put an end to factional organizations and disruptive activities, enforce the orders of the N.Y.C. and the State Committee concerning the ineligibility to party membership of those advocating violence, armed insurrection or dictatorship as a means of achieving socialism" and "pending the accomplishment of these purposes" by reorganization, puts all power in the hands of the City Executive.

With the City Central Committee thus dissolved, there exists now no official body through which the Norman Thomas and "Militant" minorities can act.

In a mass meeting of party members protesting the Old Guard action, held at Stuyvesant Casino Sunday afternoon, Norman Thomas and the "Militant" leaders declared they would not submit.

A meeting the same day of the Old Guard-controlled State Committee took two further steps in consolidating Old Guard forces for the coming convention.

The Old Guard meeting announced that early next month a two-day conference will be held in New York in which the state organizations of New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and Maryland would be officially represented, as well as minority delegations from New Jersey, Ohio, Michigan and other states. The Finnish and Jewish Federations will also be officially represented. The conference will determine the policy of the Old Guard at the May convention, including the drafting of a party platform and a new declaration of principles, decide on nominees for President and Vice-President, and plan the strategy of the convention struggle.

The State Committee also announced that it had decided to overrule the National Executive Committee which had disapproved of the expulsion of five Buffalo left-wingers.

At the protest mass meeting, which was called by a committee of fifty members of the dissolved City Central Committee, Thomas declared that he would refuse to appear before the City Executive to answer charges of breach of discipline for debating Browder. Resolutions were adopted branding the reorganization as "illegal" and an attempt "to split the party locally and nationally," and declaring the protestants determined to "resist the splitting move."

In recent weeks, since last month's Chicago meeting of the N.E.C. showed that the "peace pact" adopted three months previously had broken down, some of the Old Guard had counselled withdrawal from the national party. The policy that prevailed, however, is based on the conviction that the Old Guard can depend on Dan Hoan, Hoopes and other erstwhile allies of Thomas, particularly the municipal Socialists of Reading, Bridgeport and Milwaukee, to aid them in carrying the convention against the Thomas-"Militant" group.

With the aid of these elements, and powerful financial resources, the well-organized Old Guard faces a heterogeneous conglomerate of Thomasites and "Militants" who have little in common except hatred of the Old Guard. Only decisive steps to organize a left-wing on a revolutionary program can provide the necessary rallying center to oppose the Old Guard's machinations. With only five months to the convention, and only three months before delegates will be elected to the convention, the "Militants" have not yet published their program.

Lovestone Gets His Price

Herberg and Zimmerman Dicker or Entry into S.P., Lovestone in C.P.

The Lovestone-Brandler group, known as the Communist Party Opposition, notorious for six years for its opportunistic attempts to get back into the Communist International at any price, has at last had the price named. The Stalinist bureaucracy will welcome its repentant servants if they successfully act as brokers between the Stalinists and the Socialists.

The sudden cessation of criticism of the Lovestoneites in the Stalinist press; a lengthy interview with the Lovestoneite, Charles S. Zimmerman, in the Daily Worker, approvingly quoting him as favoring the Stalinist conception of a Labor Party; and, above all, the new line of the Lovestoneite "Workers Age," provide independent verification of information from a reliable source that Lovestone and Brandler have just negotiated with Comintern representatives an agreement to act as Stalinist agents in ballyhooing organic unity on an unprincipled basis.

It is understood that the agreement, so far as it concerns this country, provides that Lovestone, Bertram Wolfe and others are to be received into the Stalinist apparatus, while Zimmerman, Will Herberg and the main body of Lovestoneites enter the Socialist Party. We have definite information that Herberg and Zimmerman have been negotiating with leading Socialists for an understanding for their entrance into the S. P., under the pretense that the negotiations are being carried on without Lovestone's knowledge and that to enter the S. P. they are "splitting" with Lovestone.

Actually, the negotiations are under Lovestone's direction. The sending of the main body of Lovestoneites into the S. P. as Stalinist agents is an elaborate piece of trickery, of the type for which the Lovestoneites have long been notorious in the labor movement.

An Interlude of "Criticism"

Recent issues of the Lovestoneite Workers Age provide the "theoretical" foundation for this elaborate maneuver. The first few issues of the paper after the Seventh Congress of the C. I. had unfolded its social-patriotic and reformist policy reflected spontaneous shock and reaction against the Stalinist betrayal. "Shadows of 1914 Over the Comintern," "principled deviations from Bolshevism," "degeneration," were among the characterizations of the C. I. course. One section of the Lovestone group proposed a complete break with Stalinism. But six years of a false theoretical analysis of the Stalinist line had its effect; so long fed the Philistine doctrine that all that was wrong with the Comintern was its "ultra-leftism," the followers of Lovestone were driven into line by being fed the equally Philistine doctrine that the Seventh Congress was like a pendulum which had swung too far to the right and would eventually swing back to the correct place.

It is significant of the disastrous results of the theoretical miseducation of the Lovestone group that the irrelevant analogy from mechanics of a swinging pendulum was accepted by them. Lovestone, Wolfe and the other leaders, of course, no more believe this pap they feed their followers than they believe any of the scores of other fantastic excuses for Stalinism that they have brought forward during six years of degeneration of the Comintern. Having driven their followers into line, and arrived at an understanding with Herberg and Zimmerman to negotiate with the Socialists, the Lovestone leadership proceeded to develop the necessary "theoretical" line in their press:

1. Widespread the Stalinist War Program

No more talk of "shadows of 1914"—what a regrettable error that was! No, indeed; instead, Lovestone developed the theory that the "sole" deviation of the C.I. was on the question of "mixed wars," i.e., wars in which the Soviet Union was involved on one side, and that even this deviation arose from the laudable desire to protect the Soviet Union. Since "mixed wars" are the only kind of large-scale wars which are possible in a period in which all wars tend to be international in scope, and since Social Democrats support capitalist governments from the equally laudable desire to protect the working class organizations against the foreign enemy, Lovestone's arguments do not hold water for a moment. But no matter; they confused the issue sufficiently to enable the Workers Age to move to the next stage, in which all talk of fundamental differences with the Comintern disappears completely.

Wolfe Sees the Flashpoints

Finally, in the issue of November 9, Bertram Wolfe and Herberg show us to what lengths these cynical tricksters are ready to go. Only a few weeks before, it had been perfectly clear to Wolfe what the C. I. line on war was—one of "principled deviations," "shadows of 1914," etc. By November 9, however, the prospect of return to the Stalinist apparatus had so dazzled him, the rich aromas and heavy vapors arising from the Stalinist flashpoints had spread such a mist before his eyes, that Wolfe was no longer able to see what had been so crystal-clear a few short weeks before.

Now he utters the gentle cry that the Stalinists must "clarify its stand." He gathers up all his courage to point an accusing finger at the Seventh Congress to say—"Does not the Seventh Congress bear the responsibility of not having spoken clearly on the French and Czechoslovak errors, of having tried to correct some of them by just dropping them without analysis, thus leaving loopholes for their repetition?" He cares not what happens to him, he must say it—"The Comintern must hasten to clean house." What a performance, indeed, this charade of Bertram Wolfe! He speaks of "errors" of "vague and worse than vague formulations," of "mechanical transference of the tactics of Soviet governmental diplomacy to the tactics of the class struggle," of the need to "clarify"—he speaks of everything except the bald fact that the Communist parties everywhere are social-patriotic to the marrow of their bones, and that the whole foul betrayal of every fundamental principle of the class struggle was embodied in every step taken by the Seventh Congress of the Comintern. "The Comintern must clean house"—what a fantastic joke! Real revolutionists will go more to the degenerate Second International to clean house than they will ask the degenerate Second International to clean house. Both are equally incapable.

Take Any Program—Not Revolutionary
In the same November 9 issue, Herberg goes even beyond Wolfe in covering up the Stalinist war line and seeking a basis for unity with the Socialists. "Never," declares Herberg, "was the situation more favorable for the development of a powerful anti-war and anti-Fascist mass movement deeply rooted in the trade unions. But what is the C. P. doing?" And what do our readers imagine that Herberg is about to accuse the Stalinists of doing? Their general social-patriotic war program? Their position on sanctions and the League of Nations, etc., etc.? Not a word about this from Herberg. His sole accussation against the C. P. on the war question is against the organizational form through which it pursues its social-patriotic line. "But what is the C. P. doing? It obstinately persists in pushing forward the American League Against War and Fascism as the chosen vehicle for rallying the masses in this field."

All the C. P. needs to do, according to Herberg, is get rid of the American League. "Why not start anew in the face of the new situation and, in collaboration with the Socialists and the C.P.O., help launch a new anti-war movement on sound foundations, with program, methods and appeal such as will open the way to a fruitful approach to organized labor? On such a basis, effective cooperation is possible immediately." Lest anyone harbor the notion that Herberg's talk of "sound foundations" refers to any revision of the Stalinist social-patriotic decisions to support capitalist governments in war—this, to repeat, is completely avoided by Herberg—we quote Herberg's notion of how to get a common platform:

A "Reasonable" Appeal

"In order to be really fruitful, Socialist-Communist cooperation must be cemented on such a basis and on such a program as will most effectively mobilize the organized labor movement for action. The question is not how 'correct' or how 'revolutionary' a program or a slogan may be but how reasonable an appeal it makes to the trade unionist who is beginning to feel keenly the need of doing something about the danger of war," etc. (Our emphasis.)

In other words: the Stalinists, with their social-patriotic conceptions, should unite with the anti-sanctions Socialists, and the Militant Socialists with their near revolutionary analysis of the struggle against war; how can such opposite camps unite? Herberg, as attorney for Stalinism, finds the formula: unite not on a correct or revolutionary program, but on one making a "reasonable" appeal to the simple worker who is "beginning to feel."

Note: Herberg does not speak here of specific, united front actions against war as being needed to involve broad masses in order to help them take their first step toward a revolutionary program. No! Herberg proposes that the program itself be written down to the level of the simple worker. In other words, write the kind of program on which social-patriots and Leninist fighters against war can both unite. But what kind of united front action can flow out of such "reasonable" programs, and where would it lead to? Only to the camp of Stalinism, for the backward workers, imbued with bourgeois ideology and otherwise unassisted, will move toward social-patriotism. The opposite camp, of real struggle against war, is one which must go against the stream, must go against the "reasonable," that is, the first thoughts, of backward workers. In calling for unity on such a "broad" program, a unity inclusive of Stalinism, Herberg is serving the cause of social-patriotism.

New System of Stalinist Apologies

The whitewashing of Stalinist social-patriotism, the erection of a smokescreen to cover the bare, bald fact that the Seventh Congress adopted a policy of supporting capitalist governments in war if they are allied with the Soviet Union, the invention of a "theoretical" justification for uniting with Stalinist social-patriots in "anti-war work"—this is merely the beginning of the doctrinal facade being erected by the Lovestoneites to facilitate their attempts to bring about organic unity. From this point they go on to give a completely false picture of the line adopted by the Seventh Congress. Whenever the Stalinists anywhere commit an act so flagrantly opposed to revolutionary policy that even the Lovestoneites must condemn it, they do so with the refrain: "Is that the way to carry out Dimitroff's directives at the Seventh Congress?" This preposterous fabrication, however, requires another article to do it justice.

(A second article on the Lovestoneites will appear next week.)

Y.C.L. Meet Converted Into Forum against Social Patriots

By JOSEPH CARTER

Last Friday's New York meeting of the Young Communist League on the new turn of the Young Communist International was converted into a forum against Stalinist social-patriotism.

The several thousand youth, mostly students, who came to the meeting were given innumerable pieces of anti-Stalinist literature by the Spartacus Youth League, the Young People's Socialist League and others. As a prelude to a dry humanitarian speech by Gil Green the audience was treated to some soothing music. The young Socialists were given the platform following Green's speech. The chairman announced that two representatives of the Spartacus Youth League had asked for the floor but that there was not "sufficient time" for any more discussion. This after only two Yipsels and no one else had been permitted to speak!

Following the meeting a group of Spartacuses assembled in the street and lustily sang revolutionary songs and shouted slogans, most popular of which was "I know it Browder" and the slogan of "Fourth, Fourth, Fourth International."

Green Sees the "Light"

Green dished out the new line of the Young Communist International. He sounded like a Y.M.C.A. director who had just seen the "light" and urged "the unity at all costs of the young generation against war and Fascism." Nothing new was added to his interview in the Daily Worker and Young Worker on the "reorganization" of the Y.C.I. preparatory to organic unity with the Young Socialist International.

The Young Communist League is today nothing but a "young Communist party," he stated. It must become a mass youth educational organization not directly affiliated with any political party. He denied that this meant the "liquidation" of the Y.C.I. but avoided any explanation of the omission of the road to power in the proposed program of the "reorganized" league.

Green declared that the "communists" in this broad league would "democratically" urge that the organization have fraternal relations, engage in joint activities, etc. with the Communist Party. If organic unity were achieved between the Y.C.I. and the Y.P.S.L., then the young Socialists would have the right to propose that the new youth organization have certain relations with the Socialist Party. This, he stated, would be a step to organic unity of the S. P. and C. P.

The response of the audience indicated that the young Communists present were uneasy about the liquidation of the Y.C.I. but seemed to be reassured by the remarks of Green.

Green had apparently forgotten all about the struggle against capitalism! Nor did he even attempt to explain the program of the Y.C.L. on the struggle against war and struggle against Fascism. Only bare formulas were presented: "unity of all non-Fascist and progressive youth," "organic unity of the Y.C.L. and the Y.P.S.L."

YPSL Denounces Social Patriotism

The young Socialists who spoke in "semi-official capacity" since the Y.P.S.L. had refused to send an official spokesman—followed the line of the leaflet issued by their organization. This is the first leaflet ever issued by the Yipsels to the Y.C.L. in New York and follows on the heels of a young Socialist leaflet which greeted Browder's meeting in Chicago several weeks ago.

The leaflet scores the "liquidationism" of the Y.C.L. "as an abandonment of the struggle for a Socialist revolution." (The inference might logically be drawn from this that the Y.C.L. directly affiliated to the C. P. is a revolutionary organization.)

The social-patriotism of the Comintern is attacked.

"The Comintern justified the split 16 years ago mainly on the ground that the International had to exclude all remnants of social-patriotism, all those who had supported the imperialist war because they considered their bourgeoisie to be aligned on the 'just side.' Today a similar situation is developing. Again we find sections of the working class (including the Communist International) leading the war drums in the name of the revolution. The C. P. frankly states that if, in the next world war, the U. S. finds itself aligned on the same side as the U.S.S.R. (against Japan or Germany) then it will support that war by the Government."

Here is a clear cut statement against social-patriotism.

The Twenty-One Points

But strangely enough, this statement appears in the same leaflet wherein the twenty-one conditions for admittance to the Communist International (adopted 1920) is attacked as the cause of the split in the international working class movement.

"We are glad that they (the leaders of the Comintern—J.C.) now wish to take measures to overcome the split in our movement which has lasted since 1919 and for which the famous '21 points' were largely responsible. At that time, it was the theory of the Communist leaders that it was inadmissible for revolutionaries to be in the same party with the reformists and centrists. It was with this guiding idea that they drove toward the thoroughgoing split which your leaders are bemoaning at present.

"We of the Y.P.S.L. agree with the goal of a homogeneous revolutionary party, disciplined and centralized, which will be capable of overthrowing the capitalist state. But we consider that such an end can be achieved only by a process of discussion and self-development within the party, not through an artificial split engineered from without as the Comintern leaders believed. We therefore welcome the new turn of the C. P. and the Y.C.L. toward organic unity as a complete repudiation of the organizational principle upon which the C. I. was founded and which gave it its reason for separate existence."

Let History Speak

In the first place the split in the labor movement was caused by the social democratic betrayal during and following the World War. Strangely enough, this was stated by the young Socialist speaker at the Y.C.L. meeting—who is the author of the leaflet!

Second, the organizational split with the social-patriots was not "an artificial split engineered from without." One has but to read, for example, the history of the origins of the French and American Communist parties. In the first case Lenin urged the Communists to stay in the S. P. and it was more than a year and a half after the Comintern was formed (March 1919) that the Communists won a majority in the French S. P. (Dec. 1920)! The party affiliated to the Comintern.

In the United States the majority of the S. P. was expelled in the most arbitrary fashion because of its support to the program of the Third International. They agreed with the goal of a homogeneous revolutionary party, disciplined and centralized (present statement of Y.P.S.L.) and attempted to achieve this end—which means a break with the social-patriots of all stripe "by a process of discussion and self-development within the party."

Green Nods His Head

The leaflet confuses Stalinism with the early Comintern under Lenin. Stalinism has repudiated the 21 points in regard to the political struggle against social-patriotism because it has adopted this treacherous program as its own. And therefore it proposes organic unity to the social-patriots of the Second International!

Gil Green's reply to the young Socialists' charge of social-patriotism was an admission of the accuracy of the charge. He did not deny that the Y.C.L. would support the United States if it were in alliance with the Soviet Union in the coming war. He stated very dramatically that "we would force the government to support the Soviet Union in case of war!"

The young Stalinists present were undoubtedly impressed by the anti-Stalinist literature given to them. The statement of the Spartacus Youth League clearly explained the political basis and significance of the new turn of the Y.C.I.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

A. K. BRONX—
Question: Why should it not be correct for a revolutionary party to proclaim the slogan "Fight in the next war under the leadership of your imperialist government while it is allied to the U.S.S.R. and turn against your government when it turns against the U.S.S.R."?

Answer: What is completely false in this slogan, which is essentially that of the Stalinists, is that it relegates the defense of the U.S.S.R., not to the international proletariat, but to the Soviet Union's imperialist "allies" on the assumption that the military support of the latter can defend the class interests of the Soviet state, whereas the class struggle of the proletariat will only weaken such defense.

The class antagonism between the Workers' State and ANY imperialist power is of a more fundamental character than the antagonism between any imperialists or groups of imperialists so that, in the final analysis, the "aid" which an imperialist "ally" will give the Soviet Union can be, at best, of such treacherous and unreliable a character as to constitute, in reality, acts of hostility against the latter. As in 1914-18, the outbreak of war may reveal secret treaties by means of which pacts between the Soviet Union and imperialist powers have been completely negated. A possible variant here is for the imperialist "ally," at the same time that it agrees to support the Soviet Union in case of attack, to give the imperialist enemy to understand that it can depend upon the "ally's" neutrality; the intention of such a trick being, of course, to involve the Soviet Union and the opposing imperialist power in an exhausting war from which the "neutral" imperialists expect to benefit. Even if it should enter a war as opposed to the same imperialists as the Soviet Union, the "ally" will attempt to conserve its own resources at the expense of the U.S.S.R.; so as to exhaust the latter as well as the imperialist enemy. As the world war showed, the imperialists, when allies, practice treachery on each other and in every turn of events the true nature of the "ally" would manifest itself. Areas and property, valuable to both opposing imperialists would be free from attack. If profits can be made out of the transaction, the enemy may find it possible to purchase arms and supplies from the "allies" of the Workers' state, who will even attempt to prolong the war if such profits are assured thereby. During the course of the war the class antagonism between the "allies" would immediately come to the fore. The question as to the form of government in captured territory, Soviet or capitalist, is sufficient to produce a rupture which could be solved only by force of arms.

The Soviet Union is dealing with imperialist bandits, with class enemies, and yet these are the people to whose "alliance" the Stalinists ask workers to surrender their own material interests. It is only by hiding the true character of the "aid" which the imperialists can and will give the Soviet Union, that it is possible to claim that the struggle of the workers against their own capitalists, "allied" to the Workers' State, can endanger the latter.

Only the class struggle of the proletariat can save the Soviet Union from being eventually faced with the military opposition of its imperialist "allies" as well as its enemies. If at first the workers' struggle appears to deprive the Soviet Union of a certain, even if treacherous, military support, it nevertheless opens up to the Workers' state the possibility of obtaining as allies, reliable allies, the proletariat of the enemy capitalist countries; and a demoralization in the armies of the latter can more than offset the loss of such military "support." Finally, it is the workers alone who can permanently remove all danger of attack on the U.S.S.R.

We have repeatedly stated that the Stalinists have squandered the revolutionary resources of the October revolution; that they no longer have any faith in the proletariat and cannot be depended upon to defend the U.S.S.R. The C. I.'s subordination of the proletariat to the class enemy, which is palmed off as the defender of the Soviet Union, is so much more confirmation of this. A real defense of the U.S.S.R., therefore, means the struggle for the Fourth International. All else is quackery.

Chiang Hands Over North China to Japanese for the Asking

Abandons Region Without Raising A Finger

By LO SEN

Plans for the proclamation of formal "autonomy" in North China were temporarily postponed on Nov. 20 following what looked very much like a deal between Chiang Kai-shek and the Japanese. It should be clearly understood that the question involved in the North China situation at the present time is almost entirely a formal one. De facto Japanese control has existed in North China since the conclusion of the Tangku Truce in May, 1933. Ever since that time no Chinese official in North China has dared breathe without permission.

The "autonomy" movement which sprang into being only a few weeks ago was a direct product not of any sudden political change in North China itself but of Nanking's temerity in trying to make monetary and other arrangements, without consulting Japan.

Britain Steps In

British imperialism stepped in with a plan for reasserting itself by having the Chinese dollar pegged to the pound sterling and for organizing an international loan which would relegate Japan to the position of being merely a partner in the plundering of China.

Nanking, and Chiang Kai-shek, jumped at the hope of finding a new imperialist wet nurse. The Chinese dollar was devaluated and all silver called in.

The Japanese soon showed their hand. They flatly and bluntly told Britain that no loan would be counterbalanced by Japan. They flatly and bluntly told Chiang Kai-shek and Nanking to behave or else—there would be "autonomy" in North China and perhaps a new invasion of Shanghai. In the north an "independence" movement miraculously came into being after Nanking's demand for the shipment of silver stocks southward. No Northern general had any intention of shipping good hard silver to Nanking in return for paper! And Japan stood ready to back their refusal.

Japanese Marines March Again

In Shanghai a Japanese marine was conveniently murdered and a whole flock of "incidents" occurred. Japanese marines tramped once more through the streets of Shanghai. Threats were again made that Japan would enter Shanghai to take for itself what Nanking hesitated to give.

The developments at Shanghai were not only meant as a demonstration of force to frighten Nanking but were also directly linked to the Anglo-Japanese struggle for control of Shanghai's rich foreign settlement, now dominated by British interests. Japanese demands for a bigger hand in the administration and police of the settlement were again brought forward with one hand, while with the other stinging slaps were administered to the Nanking government.

Meanwhile "autonomy" was announced for North China, to be proclaimed on Nov. 20. Under cover of specious press reports about the massing of troops to resist further Japanese incursions—a bit of window dressing Chiang needed to show his good will in the matter—Chiang moved toward a new settlement with the Japanese.

Chiang Backs Down

He looked over his shoulder for help from Britain and America. But from London and Washington come only expressions of "concern" over Japan's new conquests. This "concern" will one day grow into a major war in the Pacific but at the moment that prospect was of no help to Chiang, who is nothing if not realistic. So Chiang started talking terms.

The first indication that an agreement was approaching came when the Japanese modified "complete autonomy" to only "financial and economic" autonomy with face-saving political sovereignty left to Nanking. But that Japan meant business was likewise made plain with the concentration of Japanese troops and planes on the border ready to move in at a moment's notice if need be.

At zero hour, noon on the 20th, no proclamation was forthcoming in Peking. Instead at Nanking, Akira Ariyoshi, the Japanese ambassador, emerged beaming from a 2-hour talk with Chiang and announced that he was "completely reassured" concerning China's "intentions" toward Japan.

The terms of the deal remain to be divulged. They will be concealed, as usual, under the diaphanous veil of a "compromise" formula. But the latest despatches at this writing (Nov. 20) indicated that negotiations were about to open at Nanking to cover a thorough "settlement" of outstanding Sino-Japanese questions.

'Peoples Press' Sinks Ever Lower in Its Methods

The third issue of the People's Press, that new national tabloid sponsored by the Stalinists, is now being peddled on the streets. Sickened as we were by the filth of the first issue, we decided to skip the second in order to see whether the third showed signs of reform. Perhaps, after all, we were unduly harsh in our criticism, and the opening issue was simply an aberration on the part of the editors.

We hasten to report, however, that the character of the People's Press has not altered in the least. Although the third issue has a little more red paint on its cheeks and even a touch of Stalinist rouge on its lips, it remains the same journalistic prostitute.

Indeed, the paper has been going from bad to Hearst. Almost the entire contents of this issue, including news stories, photos, a full-page True Story, and the leading editorial, revolves around the Sultan of San Simeon and his personal affairs. The main headline on the front page, announcing that "Marion Davies Rushes East to Be With Hearst," treats the palpitating public to another chapter in that stirring sex-serial on "The Bad Life and Good Times of W. R. Hearst."

The leading editorial is given over to a puny peevish personal attack upon Hearst. It seems that King Features, the Hearst syndicate, refused to sell photos to the People's Press. From the photos of cities, etc., the People's Press has been printing, this doesn't seem to us so damaging an offense. However, this unjust act brings all the fighting blood of the editors to a boil. They simmer over in a savage editorial. Listen to the lions roar!

'WILLIE'S MAD AT US!'

"Willie's mad and we are glad. We know what will please him, Sugar plums to make him sweet, And Marion to please him."

"Despite all our efforts to please everybody, William Randolph Hearst doesn't like the PEOPLE'S Press. And we try SO hard. . . . 'His boys . . . sent our money back. . . . So we marked, 'Charge Marion Davies account,' to help the boys figure it out."

"You see Hearst lies about the best people in America. Then he poses as the Great American Husband, the Savior of the American Home, and the Patron of Clean Movies. And he lets publishers know that anyone who dares tell the story of his long affair with Marion Davies will be blasted from existence."

"Well it was a good act while it lasted but there's a new deal in American life and that means curtains for the Hearst myth. . . . Thanks to the People's Press, we now know what 'the new deal' is all about. It is to expose the private life of Hearst and defend 'the best people' against his slanderous attacks. Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Rockefeller, meet your valiant knights, the People's Pressmen."

We have nothing good to say for the arch-reactionary Hearst. His anti-labor and anti-Soviet activities must be exposed to the last detail. But the campaign against him must be waged upon the level of political propaganda. It is Hearst's political and economic activities that menace the working class, not his personal peccadilloes. Such keyhole peeps into his private life as the People's Press indulges in have nothing to do with the case. They can only make the untutored worker believe that Hearst acts the way he does because he is a degenerate person, not because he is an aggressive spokesman for the masters of capital. Accordingly, if Hearst led a pure moral life, he would presumably be as well-disposed toward democracy and the workers as "the best people" he slanders, such as the Rockefellers, the Whitneys and other leaders of bourgeois society.

Another streamer head on the front page reads: "Poison Candy Sold As Medicine for Children." At first glance, we thought this was a brief statement of the paper's editorial policy. But no! It is an expose of "Ex-Lax" by Editor Kallet of "100 Million Guinea Pigs" fame. Ex-Lax, we are told, contains phenolphthalein, an irritant and a poison. Kallet, however, doesn't consider one important circumstance. So long as people continue to stomach such stuff as appears in his paper, they need strong laxatives. We do not uphold this "policy of the lesser evil." We say: boycott the sheet and you won't need laxatives after reading it.

The biggest laugh of the week is contained in the first sentence of a hot story on the Amsterdam News strike, which reads: "Hearst's reputation as a hotbed of entertainment has acquired a new luster (sic!). 'The new luster' in case you're interested is William H. Davis, husband of the owner of the Amsterdam News who, although he owns 41 percent of the stock, is presumably willing to play ball with the strikers in order to get even with his wife. That's class—angling the eternal triangle with a vengeance!"

To date, the NEW MILITANT is the only labor paper that has protested against the putrescent policy of the People's Press. Following the lead of its big brother, the Daily Worker, the New Masses also applauded its appearance, and its attempt to apply the tabloid technique to the popular issues of the day, and "to approach politics through personalities."

Fascist Propaganda Methods

In our opinion, such a policy is absolutely false. Marxists approach personalities through politics. This principle holds true in every field of political action and propaganda, even to the most popular printed agitational material.

There exists, however, another tendency in the world today, which believes and acts in a totally different fashion. This tendency stresses the personal side of politics to the exclusion of the real political issues involved, shouts "turn the rascals out!" and "put right men" or "the strong man" in their place. It stoops to the vilest level of slander; resorts to all kinds of lies and tricks of deceit; and panders to every prejudice among the backward elements in the working and middle classes. That tendency is reactionary through and through. It has nothing in common with Marxism or the revolutionary movement. It is, indeed, its deadliest enemy.

This tendency is called Fascism. Hearst is at present its leading exponent in the United States.

The editors of the People's Press have begun by imitating the propaganda methods of the Fascists. Where will they end?

Jim-Crow Law for Herndon

Jim Crow judge likely to overlook Solicitor Lecraw's political philosophy and demands. "If the highest courts finally sustain the outrageous class sentence passed on Angelo Herndon, the governor can free him. For this reason, the petition campaign must be intensified."

"While the Joint Committee does not control the policy of the Herndon defense, which is directed by the I.L.D., it can do a lot to help Herndon's struggle for liberation through this petition campaign, which is its primary concern. We call on all members of the N.P.L.D. and all members of other organizations who have received petition blanks from us to send them in at once with every space filled out with a bona fide signature."

W. A. Sutherland of Atlanta, Georgia, the other defense counsel, did not deal with legal questions, but presented the judge with his political arguments in favor of granting Herndon a writ of habeas corpus as a step towards Herndon's eventual liberation. His chief argument was that existing social, political and economic relations could best be preserved by allowing radicals, whom he regards as ridiculous, freedom of criticism and agitation up to the point where they might threaten to succeed in their aims. This argument he supported by flattering references to the social system of Georgia today.

Jim-Crow Political Philosophy
Solicitor Lecraw, in addition to making legalistic and technical replies to Seymour's argument, gave Sutherland a political reply from the viewpoint of the State of Georgia, the instrument of ruling-class political oppression. Denying that Sutherland's theory of limited free speech is the law of Georgia, he went on to say:

"Should the Supreme Court of the United States decide that this doctrine is the law of the land, we are through. When things get so that there is a danger that they will succeed, we won't be able to fight them in the courts. Then we will fight them somewhere else. Now is the time to fight them in the courts."

Weighty legal technicalities, with such fancy names as "the rule of stare decisis," stand in the way of Judge Dorsey granting the writ, Lecraw argued.

Whatever Dorsey decides, a long struggle is ahead. The Joint Committee for the Herndon Defense is continuing its work in aid of Herndon by circulating pamphlets and petitions.

Statement of N.P.L.D.
In a statement issued subsequent to the Atlanta hearing, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, a constituent of the Joint Committee, declares:

"It is hardly likely that Judge Dorsey will fly in the face of the ruling Bourbons of Georgia by overlooking these 'good' excuses for denying a writ. Nor is this

ALABAMA MINERS WIN

PARTIAL VICTORY

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Union recognition and an agreement granting approximately half their demands were won by 17,000 miners in the Birmingham district as a result of an eight-week strike.

The miners will receive a wage increase of 20 cents a day, with increases of 4¢ cents a ton for tonnage workers and 5 percent for dead work. The new agreement runs until April 1, 1937. The strike was hard fought, and at least one miner was killed.

British Tories Sweep Election as Best "Sanctions" Party to Protect Empire

By MAURICE SPECTOR

The Baldwin government was returned to power by a majority that exceeded every Tory expectation. The distribution by parties in the new House of Commons is:

For the National Government: Conservatives, 385; Liberal National, 32; National Labor, 8; National, 3; total, 428.

Against the government: Labor, 154; Liberal, 17; Independent Liberal, 4; Independent Labor Party, 4; Communist, 1; Independent 3; total, 183. Four seats were still in doubt when these lists were compiled.

If one considers the entire national and international background of this election, the British working class, under the leadership of the class-collaborationist, pro-"sanctions" Labor Party, has sustained a severe defeat. The increased Labor representation from the low-water mark of 52 in the elections of 1931, may be Thanksgiving fodder for the "New Leader" of this city, but it will be no occasion for mad revelry in the ranks even of the British Labor bureaucracy.

The Conservative strategists themselves, who learned their "cricket" on the playing fields of Eton, did not expect a government majority of 250. In the face of such a majority the return of the lone Stalinist Gallagher will hardly send any tremor through the Empire, particularly as the Stalinists stood for "sanctions" and the "League" as staunchly as Sir Samuel Hoare. Besides which British Communist Party representatives have a way either of deserting to the Tories like Colonel Malone, to the Labor Party like Walton Newbold and Ellen Wilkinson or feebly subsiding at the first supercilious Tory's push like the unfortunate Parsee Saklatvala.

Labor Party Prepares Own Defeat

For the past four years the Labor Party has assiduously prepared its own defeat. When you estimate the results, remember that the Labor Party has already formed two Labor governments. We are not dealing with an election victory of our own cherished C. P. who proclaim a one hundred percent increase when (probably with the aid of a little colonization) they add another vote to the solitary vote in Oshkosh! The British Labor Party is the party of the majority of the organized British working class.

In these past four years, the army of nearly two million unemployed has not appreciably declined. Wages and the social services have been reduced. Conditions in the "distressed areas" have become a by-word of destitution. As in the case of the miners now threatening a great strike, longer hours were imposed by legislation of the National Government in 1932. In the field of foreign affairs, the disarmament conferences have diametrically collapsed. Hitler re-armed with the complicity of the government and the Bank of England. But the elections nevertheless gave the party of National Reaction five more years of a free hand at home and abroad.

Supports and "Deplores"

And the principal reason? At this crucial juncture of the post-war epoch the policy of the British Labor Party is in every practical essential a capitulation to the interests of British imperialism. The outstanding fact is that there is virtually nothing but a feeble protestation to distinguish the pro-"League Covenant," pro-collective security, pro-sanctions position of the Laborites from the Tories. Both the Labor Party and the Trades Congress went on record urging not only economic but military sanctions. They gave the Tories just the right ammunition for the imperialist plans to increase the air and naval forces on a gigantic scale in preparation for war.

The Labor Party manifesto declared that it "deplored this attempt to exploit for partisan ends a situation of grave international anxiety." But they have deplored before! The Labor Party "deplored" Lloyd George's Khaki election but they had ardently helped Lloyd George prosecute the war. They "deplored" the fake Zinoviev letter sensation which won another election for the Tories, but the Labor government had been prosecuting Communists. They "deplored" the financial panic stragem by which the Tories turned out the second Labor government in 1931; but with what right when they had themselves been preparing to cut wages and social services in the interests of economy? MacDonald was merely following out the extreme logic of his position as the leader of the Labor Party, when he entered the coalition. MacDonald's policy was always based on "continuity" instead of class struggle and "community" as against "class-consciousness." Those who believe in "continuity" and socialism by parliamentary procedure must accept the consequences. MacDonald is not the only "undone old man" in the ranks of the present and former heroes of the Second International.

The point cannot be too strongly stressed. If what is wanted is a party that will maintain the imperial establishment, support the present distribution of world markets, called "collective security," and enforce military sanctions, then a single-minded, strong-willed, forthright imperialist party like the Tories will get the support over the "arf-and-arf," milk-and-water, "Socialistic dilution" of these objectives by the Labor Party. The twelve million who participated in the straw vote for the League of Nations prefer to put their trust in additions to the fleet and the air force rather than in more professors of international law.

Role of Independent Labor Party

That there are prospects for a revolutionary party in Great Britain is indicated by the fact that the Independent Labor Party which has vacillated so badly for so long was yet able to return four members. The I.L.P. must make up its mind which route to travel or be dissipated by the C. P. For a considerable time, Maxton and Brockway have balanced themselves on a tight-rope. The stand of the I.L.P. in opposition to sanctions and its approximation to the revolutionary anti-war policy should clear the air if followed up with a clear-cut orientation on the problem of the international. Precious time has been frittered away in the attempt to establish the united front with the Stalinists. The result was demoralization of the I.L.P. The British C. P. is sterile and the problem was to engage in united front activities with the Labor Party for fruitful contacts with the masses, but the leaders of the I.L.P. adamantly insisted that they wanted a "revolutionary" united front. For a while they even utilized the "third period" concepts of the C.P. The social-patriotic rightward swing of the Comintern seems to have had a sobering effect on some leading elements of the I.L.P.

But the I.L.P. is still bound up with the London-Amsterdam Bureau of "Socialist Revolutionary Unity." That means that they are still pursuing "organic unity" of the Second and Third Internationals. If any country provides an illustration of the futility of mere unity on the basis of a program of social reformism, bourgeois democracy and social-chauvinism, surely it is Britain with its Labor Party, already overwhelmingly in fact the party of "organic unity." To imagine that the addition of the British Labor Party to the German Social Democracy to the Stalinist bureaucracy (Comintern) will somehow engender the social revolution is mysticism, not Marxism. The unity of the working class movement can only be progressive if it embarks on a program of class struggle, if it breaks with bourgeois democracy, if it is a revolutionary unity. The I.L.P. has recently been rid of the Gaster-Lovestonite (R.P.C.) clique that was striving to liquidate the I.L.P. into the C.P. The revolutionary left of the I.L.P., the Marxist Group, clearly indicates the road the party must travel—the road of the Fourth International.

The Years Ahead

We have said that the next years will be crucial, confronting the revolutionists with gigantic problems and decisions. Consider that in the half decade of the National government just gone, history inscribed on its rolls the Spanish revolution, the victory of Hitler, the Viennese insurrection, the seizure of Manchuria, the Italo-Ethiopian war. Ahead of us lie the prospects of yet greater upheavals. Japanese imperialism is systematically carving up China. The United States is carefully preparing for the great struggle in the Pacific. German rearmament proceeds apace. The Egyptian demonstrations indicate the challenge to imperialism generally contained in the colonial ferment. The capitalist world is a powder keg. The British Labor Party has given every evidence of its impotence. In the tests of office and of opposition. The I.L.P., if it takes the road of revolutionary Marxism, can become the party of socialist power.

JUST OFF THE PRESS!

This is the attractive cover of our new pamphlet, just off the press.

Popularly written so that every worker can understand it, Comrade West's pamphlet is a searching analysis into the causes for war, the imperialist conflicts of the present epoch and a scathing indictment of all forms of pacifism and social-patriotism.

Party branches are asked to make special efforts towards a large scale distribution. This should be done, of course, without delay and in such a manner that it can really become an important part of our campaign against imperialist war. Those branches which have not as yet forwarded their orders should do so right away. All orders are to be sent to the NEW MILITANT, 55 E. 11th St., New York City. The pamphlet retails for 10¢ a copy; 7¢ in lots of 10 or more.

One Year of the Workers Party

By A. J. MUSTE

A YEAR ago the Workers Party of the United States came into existence as a result of the fusion of two of the most significant currents in the American labor movement. One of these was the American Workers Party (outgrowth in turn of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action), the other the Communist League of America.

A. J. MUSTE

The A.W.P. forces came mainly from militant elements in the unions and unemployed organizations who, through practical experience in the class struggle, had come to realize the need of a theoretical foundation, and political expression, and who believed that this foundation must be revolutionary and internationalist. Organizationally they had taken the position that new revolutionary parties and a new International, as against the Second and Third, must be built. The C.L.A. and its sister groups of the International Communist League throughout the world came out of the Communist (Third) International.

They fought within that International and after expulsion as a group seeking readmission, against the Stalinist line of "socialism in a single country" etc. After the debacle of the C. P. in Germany and similar developments, they concluded that the Third International could no longer serve as the vanguard of the working class, that a new, Fourth, International, must be built. Hence the fusion of the C.L.A. and A.W.P. in December, 1934.

Those who have some knowledge of the interaction of groups within the labor movement know that "fusions" by no means always result in fusion. The first year of the history of the W.P.U.S. has, however, demonstrated the genuine success of this particular fusion. It is true that there have been unclear individuals who could not be assimilated, and on the other hand ultra-leftist, sectarian elements that proved unfitted for existence in a revolutionary party with its face turned to the masses which was more than a debating society. The main core of the A.W.P. on the one hand and the C.L.A. on the other are fused into one. Whatever differences of emphasis and tactics may emerge, and those always exist in every living organization, the struggle over these differences will not be as between former A.W.P. members and former C.L.A. members. They will be fought out by revolutionists who all stand upon the Declaration of Principles of the W.P. and owe unswerving allegiance to the Fourth International.

Now this achievement of fusion is in itself a big thing. If there were nothing else to record at the end of the year, this year in the existence of the W.P. would none the less be justified. It would have marked an important step in the creation of the Fourth International.

The fact that the year has not been marked by anything approaching a mass influx of members into the W.P. in no way invalidates this estimate. The period in which the W.P. lived out its first year is predominantly reactionary in character. The trend away from parliamentary democracy, the open resort to Fascism in many instances, the piling up of armaments, the actual outbreak of war between Italy and Ethiopia and the increasing tension in the foreign relations of all the important capitalist powers are all illustrations of the general trend.

The pressure upon the working class movement from capitalism making a desperate effort to save itself is in such a period tremendous. The world labor movement has suffered severe set-backs in recent years and important sections, such as the German and Austrian, have been almost obliterated. Reaction is thus also characteristic of the labor movement, as is most clearly seen in the stampede to the right of the Stalinist movement—capitulation to social-patriotism, People's Front, support of bourgeois democracy, etc.

From a superficial viewpoint the general trend is obscured by certain developments in the Second International and its parties. The crisis of the democratic state, the developing break of the bourgeoisie with social reformism in favor of Fascism undermines the internal stability of the social democracy as it involves its ultimate destruction. A cleavage between leaders and followers and within the leadership itself develops. The classic reformism of the party gives way to centrism, etc.

This does not mean that it is our concept that the Second International is now becoming the "international of revolution." As the Open Letter stated, "the social democracy everywhere continues to remain the agency of the bourgeoisie within the working class." The reaction—the capitulation or preparation for capitulation to social-patriotism—marks the main body of the social democracy everywhere, though camouflaged by centrist maneuvering and equivocation. We note, on the one hand, the trend in the Scandinavian countries, British Labor Party, Canadian C.C.F. In the main, on the other hand, "the shift to the left" in such countries as France and U. S. expresses itself in rapprochement with the Stalinists (organic unity, People's Front, labor party, conciliationism toward 230 Hear Shachtman in L. A.

LOS ANGELES.—At a mass meeting of some 230 Los Angeles workers Max Shachtman gave an inspiring lecture on "War and the Soviet Union." The enthusiastic crowd stayed until the very last, plying Shachtman with questions and engaging him into heated discussions. From every point of view the meeting was a successful one. Many new people heard for the first time a Marxian analysis of imperialist war and the attitude of revolutionists to it.

The following night 52 members and friends of the Workers Party attended a banquet where comrade Shachtman spoke on the history of the Left Opposition. Songs by the "Spartacus Chorus" and speeches by the local activists finished off the evening.

M. Lewis Reported Retired

Minneapolis C.L.U. Refuses Splitters Aid; Negotiates with 574

By CARL O'SHEA

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 25.—In strong contrast with its initial bombast, the attack of William Green and Meyer Lewis upon the progressive labor movement of Minneapolis has quieted down to a whisper. It is reported that "Splitter" Lewis will spend the rest of his time auditing the books of local federal unions.

The Minneapolis Central Labor Union has told Lewis they can settle matters with 574 without his assistance. The executive board and a special committee from the central body asked for a meeting with 574's executive board, and on Tuesday morning, Nov. 19, the two groups conferred for the first time, with the hope of bringing about peace in the local trade union situation. In a statement issued to the press, 574 said: "Local 574 has been invited by a committee of the Central Labor Union to meet with them with the view to ironing out some disputed questions. The General Drivers Union has accepted this invitation in the spirit of unity and friendliness to the trade union movement. We believe that any dispute which may now exist can be adjusted. We have no quarrel with any bona-fide A. F. of L. union as such. Every effort consistent with the principles of honest trade union practice will be made by Local 574 to come to a worthwhile and lasting agreement."

On Thursday morning 574 again met with the A. F. of L. committee. It is understood that the General Drivers union is proposing that the local trade union movement recommend 574 be reinstated in the Teamsters and Drivers International.

In their fight against William Green's red drive, the Minneapolis progressives have obtained impressive support from various forces throughout the country. Emil Rieve, president of the Hosiery Workers, has written that he is "doing everything possible to prevent the A. F. of L. from making the mistake of going on a 'red baiting' campaign." Norman Thomas has written 574, pledging national support to the General Drivers union.

Local 574 is in a strong position for three reasons: first, its own control of the workers; second, the local trade unionists want to support the General Drivers; thirdly, the national situation is shaping up in favor of the advocates of industrial unionism. The A. F. of L. local leaders have realized this very clearly, and that explains why they have told Meyer Lewis so emphatically to keep his hands off Minneapolis.

Minneapolis employers, encouraged by the irresponsible and false statements of the red-baiting Lewis, are making a strong drive to re-open the Strutwear Hosiery plant, where 1,200 hosiery workers have been on strike since August 15. On Wednesday, Nov. 20, the bosses met at the Radisson Hotel and drew up a plan by which Strutwear would agree to take back all employees as of August 15, and would be willing, after the plant has been in operation 30 days, to meet with any employee groups for the purpose of discussing any complaints. They demand that the American Federation of Hosiery Workers cease picketing, and call upon Mayor Latimer for police protection for this strike-breaking move.

Alexander McKeown, first vice-president of the Hosiery Workers, who is conducting the Minneapolis strike, has answered this proposal by pointing out that "it offers no assurance to our membership that grievances or complaints placed before the management will receive just consideration and action to adjust the grievances and complaints." McKeown calls upon the Strutwear employers to agree, as have the strikers from the very beginning, to arbitrate all disputed points before the plant re-opens.

Fred Zeller Declares for 4th Int'l

Paris Socialist Youth Leader Writes Stirring Pamphlet

Comrade Fred Zeller, acknowledged leader of the revolutionary Socialist Youth Federation of the Seine, has declared for the Fourth International, and for a new revolutionary party in France.

Behind comrade Zeller march the revolutionary proletarian youth of the Seine, the proletarian heart of France. To the thousands who know him as a leader who has served prison terms for his activity in the class struggle, for his bold fight under the banner of revolutionary defeatism, comrade Zeller has given a revolutionary lead at a time when such a lead is the most imperative need of the French working class.

Young revolutionary Socialists and Young Communists should study the political evolution of Fred Zeller with the closest attention—for it is in France that fibres are being tempered today for tomorrow's test. It is in France to-morrow's test. It is in France to-morrow's test.

Army Stocks Up in Cas...

The War Department over the last six months has ordered $3,836,786 worth of blankets. This blanket order is described by The Wall Street (Oct. 22, 1935) as "the first substantial order since the World War."

Recent woolen contracts placed by the Army Quartermaster Depot, Philadelphia, include the following: American Woolen Co.—Over 280,000 yards of flannel. Gera Mills, Passaic, N.J.—125,000 yards of flannel. William Whitman Co.—400,000 yards of flannel.

Radicals, Stalinists, Socialists Collapse at First Test

By H. F. ROBERTS

The Bonapartist regime of Pierre Laval sought and secured a temporary renewal of its mandate this week from the Chamber of Deputies which reconvened on Thursday. Fear for the safety of the franc stampeded the doughty Radical Socialist leaders of the Front Populaire back into the arms of Laval. Under pressure from Herriot, darling of the Stalinists, the Radicals swung from the People's Front and cast their votes for Laval, to whom they gave a majority of 120.

It took just that—a threat to the franc—to crack the parliamentary front of the Front Populaire—and the parliamentary front is all that it has! At the first critical moment the bourgeois politicians of the Radical party decided that power would be too hot to handle. The Socialists and Stalinists—whose only perspective was a Radical Socialist government—were left

Chevrolet Plant May Lead Off

Motor Products Strike In Detroit Is First Skirmish

BULLETIN

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 26.—At the mass meeting of the Toledo Chevrolet workers, held this Saturday afternoon, the Chevrolet men unanimously rejected the company's proposal of a seven and a half-hour day, four-day week, three shifts—a proposal which would automatically throw 900 of the Chevrolet employees out into the street. The shop committee, instead is instructed to offer counter proposals to the management which would provide a greater schedule for Toledo, and that every man not reabsorbed be immediately placed on other General Motors payrolls.

The Chevrolet executive committee is already establishing contacts with the "Committee for Industrial Unionism" with the aim of immediately organizing Saginaw and Muncie and other unorganized Detroit Motors plants in the Detroit area.

With the bitterly fought Motors Products strike in Detroit holding out solid, and the prospect of the Hudson plant men going out very soon, the prospects are that hell will be popping loose around these parts in the immediate future. The whole party must be keyed up to the possibilities of the situation, and must stand ready to give the men in the field all their aid, at a moment's notice.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 21.—The Chevrolet plant at Toledo has opened its doors this Monday, after a four-week shutdown, and announced through its general manager, Mr. Guiliver, that the plant will rehire 1,100 men. (Prior to the lay-off approximately 2,200 men were employed at the plant.) Before the shut-down, the management specifically promised the shop committee that all of these men would be rehired.

The shop committee, headed by its chairman, James Roland, has been in interminable negotiations with the management since Monday. The final proposal as submitted by General Motors, was 7½-hour-day, four-day week, three shifts. This arrangement would hire approximately 1,400 men, still leaving off some 800 Chevrolet employees.

The shop committee is in a quar-

Mass Conference of Illinois Workers Alliance Draws Up Demands for Wage Increase and Hour Reduction

AUBURN, ILL., Nov. 24.—Delegates representing thirteen well-organized counties of the Illinois Workers Alliance unanimously voted today to strike all WPA projects in Illinois Dec. 16.

The Labor Temple was crowded with hundreds of delegates and visitors who voiced an emphatic disapproval of the WPA arrangements; the delegates minced no words in denouncing the scab wage scale that averages much less than $65 a month and demanded that the I.W.A. lead an aggressive movement to end the starvation pay.

The Action Committee elected by the conference recommended that the following demands be presented to the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission:

The 30-hour week, no Saturday work.
Pay day every Friday night.
Prevailing union wages.
A minimum of 50c for agricultural districts.
First aid kits on all projects.
Free transportation to and from work.
Recognition of all project grievance committees.
These demands were unanimously accepted after a healthy discussion. Hank Mayer, Carlinville, re-

BARBERTON LABOR RISES

Plan General Strike in Akron Suburb to Meet Threat of Militia; Reporter Tells of Heroic Battle

By JACK WILSON

BARBERTON, Ohio, Nov. 25.—6,000 organized workers in this highly industrialized suburb of Akron planned a general strike to back 300 strikers at the Ohio Insulator Co., a Dupont subsidiary, against possible use of the National Guard and martial law to smash the solid picket line, after their threat of the city-wide walkout forced the sheriff to withdraw 60 scabs and completely shut down the plant.

Aroused by the tear gas terror and clubbings by 70 company thugs against the 100 percent organized strikers, 2,000 unionists and sympathizers stormed the plant last night after they were attacked and routed the thugs and shouted:

"We'll give you another Auto-Lite strike if you want it."

The union went on strike ten weeks ago for a 20 percent pay raise, seniority rights, union recognition and a written agreement. It was called the "most peaceful strike in Ohio history" by the bourgeois press. But last Tuesday the company announced it would open the factory for "all loyal workers who wanted to work." Meanwhile, Jim Flower, the sheriff, who is also a National Guard captain, hired 70 thugs to "keep peace," and brought out all the tear gas guns and clubs bought last spring for possible use against the rubber workers.

The Weed Double-Crosses

A solid picket line greeted the company officials and the thugs early Wednesday. Flower, a big burly brute, called the pickets to one side and demanded peace. Just when the pickets came toward him, 12 cars filled with scabs, tried to break through. The workers grabbed stones, but a volley of tear gas and a clubfest by the thugs proved too strong.

Shouting, "We've been double-crossed by that rat," the workers valiantly defended themselves, although over 20 were hurt by the gas shells and clubs. Another attack was made by Colonel Joe Johnson, an old strike-breaker and aide to Flower, at the railroad entrance against another picket line so a train could bring in food to the scabs.

As the tear gas drifted away the workers reformed their line. Flower marched out of the factory and ordered them to dissolve. He dug up a "riot act" passed in 1902 as his authority and threatened a $500 fine and 90 day sentences for work-

High-Lights

THE PEOPLE'S FRIENDS

"Anti-Soviet, ally of the Friends of New Germany, shielder of the murderers of a charity patient," was the cheerful manner in which the C. P. of Cleveland characterized Doc Walz for the past few years. Walz has the habit of running as an independent mayoralty candidate.

But this year, after the primaries, I. O. Ford, Communist candidate for mayor, told a meeting of the Independent Civic League that the minority candidates ought to get behind a write-in campaign for Walz.

Ford sat down with Walz and wrote out a reformist platform for him.

The C. P. leaders met and decided to participate in this action if the S. P. stated its willingness to go into it. Otherwise the C. P. was to pretend that it has reached a contrary decision for some trumped-up reason. (Write-in campaigns are not effective.)

At the meeting where the "united front" was to be consummated, Walz made a typical liberal, reformist speech—then launched into an attack on conditions in the Soviet Union! The C. P. representative sat without a protest, with his head bowed sheepishly. No objection could be made to Walz's statements because the Socialists hadn't stated their position as yet, and the united front was yet tentative.

The S.P. disrupted another beautiful united front. They thought the platform (prepared by the C. P.) had nothing to do with the C.P. had nothing to do with labor and didn't resemble anything that militants could rally around.

At any rate, the audience got a good laugh.

"DESIGN FOR LIVING"

"Frankie and Uppie were lovers," Maurice Sugar snatched on Upton Sinclair in the Detroit debate on "America's Way Out—EPIC or Farmer-Labor Party?"

"He was your man but he done you wrong. You captured the Democratic Party. Roosevelt has captured you! Mr. Sinclair, it is apparent that you fell in love with Roosevelt at first sight. He carried you. He led you on. He played with you. . . Mr. Sinclair, you lovely man, you have been seduced!" (Daily Worker, Nov. 5).

This Freudian analysis does not help us to understand that a Farmer-Labor Party will get America "out" of—(economic crisis?)—but we would like to point out that Earl Browder states in the September "Communist" that the C. P. ought to take over the Epic Plan.

F.D.R.'s bedroom must be getting popular.

"I KNOWS IT, BROTHER"

Mike Gold chides the Left young Socialists for singing ribald parody "Our Line's Been Changed Again." Instead of the customary abuse, threats, and third period epithets, the columnist resorts to wheedling, pleading, and sugar-talk. We understand, Mike,—your line's been changed again!

WORKERS SCHOOL HANDS OUT PLENTY TOO

"Have you ever wondered why I. O. Ford (Communist candidate for mayor) is always so jolly and gay, why he has that big smile on his face?" gushed Onda at the Cleveland Browder meeting. "Because he's a Communist!"

We thought it was because Onda, running for council on a Labor Ticket, promised to collect all the garbage if he was elected.

Too bad he didn't get in. His first job would have been to send around a truck behind the Workers Book Shop to pick up all those copies of "The Name is Lewis, John L." which have been withdrawn from circulation.

A 'Square Deal' Corporation An Altruistic Boss! Workers Get It in the Neck

By CYRUS RIGBY

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Last week the workers in the shoe factories of the Endicott Johnson Corporation were given renewed and positive assurance that the world does not move. The occasion was the posting, on all shop bulletin boards, of the identical Promotion Policy Message that George F. Johnson had himself issued before in 1920.

The statement was prefaced by a note saying that "This is just as true today as it was 15 years ago, and as it will be 50 years from now." Resuscitated, the message took no account of the ravages made by the system of capitalism on the workers of the Southern Tier no less than in other parts of the world. Parading of the now completely exploded American myth of "equal opportunity to all" was so brazen, in the light of past events, that the notice was this time greeted only by ridicule by those few workers who paused to read it.

Dividing the Workers for Profit

The message is part of the halloved Endicott Johnson "square deal plan," which is itself founded upon a policy of dividing the workers in order the better to use them for profit. One passage reads, "You may even be the general manager or one of the directors, as we are looking for the best talent to fill positions of responsibility." It closes with the words, "If you are faithful, loyal and reliable, you will earn a good living with a chance for advancement. This company and its directing heads know their business. Their business is to see that you give them a square deal, which means a fair return for what you receive—an honest effort to do the work well and a fair and sufficient amount of it."

Because the most recent breakdown of capitalism has forced more and more people to wear shoes of a cheaper, and hence inferior grade, the Endicott Johnson factories have enjoyed an ever-increasing expansion since 1920. But not one extra benefit has accrued to shoe workers by this circumstance. Wages have been lowered and the threat of unemployment held constantly over their heads to still protests. Speed-up has been growing in pace every month. Stoolpigeons and spies, always with hope of promotion at the expense of their class, have been more numerous and more active.

A "Working Class" Bank

Everything in Endicott and Johnson City is cloaked with a fake "working class cooperative" veneer. Even the local bank bears the name "Workers Trust Company." Yet further scrutiny of this institution, as an example, will show how all these labels and policies are merely clever methods of deluding the workers into a false sense of power. Assets of the Workers Trust Company are placed at about five and a half million dollars. Stocks in the bank consist of 8,000 shares. Are most of the shares in this "working class" establishment owned by the workers in the E.-J. factories? By no means! 7,534 shares, or complete control and ownership of the institution, are owned by the Marine Midland Corporation, a major fortress of finance capital in America. Investigation has shown that the same tissue of spuriousness covers every supposedly benevolent gesture of the Endicott-Johnson shoe barons.

American workers have learned, to their sorrow, that they are no different from workers in every part of the world: that for the working class there is strength only in unity. Anything else faintly resembling a real trade union is still banned in the Endicott-Johnson sphere of influence. Most of the workers there still hope to live on altruistic crumbs from the table of "George F." and his fellow capitalists. Yet even the most superficial examination of the facts will prove that their one salvation is in solidarity with the entire working class, rather than in accepting the occasional sops handed out to them by their exploiters to keep them docile.

Shachtman Meeting in San Diego

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Nov. 19.—Approximately 75 workers came to Woodbine Hall last night to hear Max Shachtman lectured on "War and the Soviet Union." Shachtman analyzed the causes of war and outlined the revolutionary tasks of the proletariat in relation to war as advocated by the Workers Party and other adherents of the Fourth International in contradistinction to the class collaboration policies of the parties of the Second and Third Internationals. A lengthy question and discussion period followed the lecture and nearly everyone stayed until midnight asking questions about the Workers Party. This was one of the first public meetings attempted by the San Diego branch and Shachtman's lecture is calculated to conclusively solidify the W. P. with the already sympathetic class-conscious workers.

How They Ache for War!

Editor's Note: How the Stalinists are out-Baldwin Baldwin and becoming the most rabid advocates of military sanctions, i.e., imperialist war, is revealed in the quotation below from the Journal de Moscow, French equivalent of the Moscow Daily News—one of the many Stalinist stooge periodicals.

MOSCOW, Nov. 1.—Steps to make possible military sanctions must be taken by the League of Nations, the Journal de Moscow, French language newspaper here, declared tonight.

The sanctions already voted against Italy will help the League's prestige by showing that it is prepared to act, the newspaper said. But economic and financial penalties never can stop a war.

"The first experiment of the League will allow us to conclude that economic sanctions alone never can succeed in guaranteeing peace," it stated, "and that it will be impossible in the future in analogous cases to limit ourselves to economic sanctions, as is foreseen in Article XVI, Paragraph 2 (of the Covenant) treating of military sanctions."

"It will suffice to study especially this paragraph and at the proper time create the conditions necessary to apply it rapidly in case of need."

If the sanctions already voted are not energetically applied they will only have a harmful effect, the paper declared.

Appeal Date Set in Cal. C. S. Frame-Up

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 27.—The District Court of Appeals has set a hearing for Dec. 3, at which Raymond W. Henderson, attorney retained for Norman Mini by the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, will argue for a writ of mandate ordering the trial court in the famous criminal syndicalism case to provide the Mini defense with a copy of the proceedings of the trial.

Mini, Prisoner 57606 in San Quentin, one of eight workers appealing against the frame-up convictions arrived at under pressure of an anti-union and anti-radical drive launched by employers' organizations in this state. Thus far the trial court has provided only one transcript of the proceedings. Applications for copies made by Martin Wilson and several other appellants who represent themselves legally, have been denied.

Due to the refusal of the I.L.D. to consider a unified defense, there are two attorneys in the case. Leo Gallagher represents the I.L.D. defendants, while Henderson represents Mini. By compelling the two attorneys to prepare their briefs on the basis of one copy of the transcript, the court is working a hardship on both Henderson's fight for an additional copy has the support of Gallagher.

Support for the defendants is on the increase. The Los Angeles and San Francisco sub-committees of the N.S.A.C. recently held successful mass meetings.

A Radical Farmer's View of Recent Shifts in AAA

(Reprinted from the Producers News, official organ of Farmers Holiday Action Committee)

The AAA Wheat Production Control Board has now amended the bonus basis from the county acreage of wheat production per acre average to that of the individual unit of wheat production as the basis, based on the last three years production adjusted to the preceding two years, whatever that may mean. This individual unit base discriminates against the small grower, against the poverty stricken farmers, who do not have the means to farm properly, or who for the want of seed wheat could not get his crop in when he should, and so did not get the crop which he would have had the planting been done in the proper seed bed and at the right time, and in favor of the farmers who have the proper machinery, the seed and the means to carry on his farming operations as he should.

The first and the largest section of farmers of course raised very poor crops, the latter quite good crops. So on the individual unit basis, the impoverished farmer gets a reduced bonus, while the rich farmers get the big check—the gravy as it were.

On the county average basis for the last five years, all farmers get the bonus on the average acreage production of the county so all farmers share alike as to the number of bushels per acre they receive the bonus on, and this is as it should be.

But the county average basis for the bonus payment is contrary to the basic policy and program of the AAA, in spite of all the illusions the farmers may be entertaining of the purpose of the act, and so just could not stand. The purpose of the AAA wheat control is to make a privilege of farming—those finally will farm who have a license, a government permit to farm; no others will. The purpose is to eliminate all the impoverished farmers from the land, put them on subsistence farms, take the poor lands out of production entirely, and put the good lands into production, in the hands of the rich farmers, on a basis where they can farm it at a profit. And to do this, to reduce the production to what those who have buying power can consume. This is the purpose of the AAA and has been since the beginning, and the idea that is going to be carried out.

The county unit plan was adopted at first because it was necessary to put the scheme over, in order to get the farmers to sign up the contracts. The individual unit basis was the plan all of the time. Now that the AAA crop control has developed to where it can substitute the latter plan, it has.

The work out is—to him who has shall be given, while to him who has not shall be taken away! That is the spirit of the AAA in all of its ramifications—just set yourself right on that.

The late delivery of seed grain loan checks so as to reduce production possibilities, the ruthless seed grain loan collections, removal of farmers to subsistence farms, etc., are all a part of the general scheme.

The one thing that will defeat this scheme is understanding of it by the farmers and mass resistance. The Dagmar farmers are showing the way. Other impoverished and bankrupt farmers must follow their lead or get ready for the subsistence farms. And it's time to get into action!

Letters to the Editor

Editor, NEW MILITANT:

I cite the following incident as a revelation of the inner workings of that great democracy-loving organization, the League Against War and Fascism. Essentially pacifist and reactionary in nature, this body listens no end to preachers, rabbis, society ladies, senators and others of the same kidney but can spare not a moment to a revolutionist. Indeed, in my case, the presentation of the point of view of the Workers Party meant ejection from a meeting of the League.

I attended a meeting of the Boro Park branch of the League in a Y.M.H.A. building at 49th Street and 4th Avenue, at which a speech was given on the Chinese Soviets and the situation in the Far East. During the discussion I took the floor and attempted to show that the speaker had been guilty of several misstatements as well as outright lies, all of which were intended to justify the line of Stalin on the Chinese Revolution. The chairman interrupted me when I offered to outline briefly the historically correct theses of Trotsky and the Left Opposition. He immediately entertained a motion that I be excluded from all further meetings of the League since for several weeks I had insisted on presenting a political point of view which could "only succeed in disrupting the organization," etc., etc. The organizer, a well-known Y.C.L. member, backed the motion, fulminating for fully fifteen minutes against the "counter-revolutionary Trotskyite line." Some "innocent" members of the American League protested that this action smacked of bureaucracy, but the Y.C.L. faction had a majority and the motion of exclusion was passed.

The American League, which would fight for democracy in Germany, Italy, Spain and everywhere except in the American League, will never learn that the struggle against tyranny like charity begins at home. A stooge can only mimic his master, the American League, the C. P. —MILTON HINDUS.

The 'Resettlement' Fraud A Texas Thanksgiving Relief Is Discontinued

By JAMES EVANS

(Special to the New Militant)

DALLAS, Tex.—Thousands of impoverished Texas farmers are being made the victims of Roosevelt's "resettlement" fraud. The relief administrators make glowing promises to these bankrupt producers, only to shunt them into leaky shacks on sub-marginal lands. As a rule, the tenant is forced to incur several hundred dollars of indebtedness before he is allowed the privilege of supervised starvation.

In McLennan county alone, five hundred rural families were taken off the relief rolls last year and given government loans to "rehabilitate" themselves. In twelve counties of central Texas, 2,600 such families were given opportunities to lead the simple life—as prescribed by the banking interests that dominate the Federal agricultural policies.

Slaves of King Cotton

Despite the uncertain condition of the cotton market, two thousand have been put to growing crops of this staple. These recipients of government bounty are truly the slaves of King Cotton. Many of them became impoverished as a result of the cotton plow-up program. Their rented tracts of land went back to the owners upon being retired from cultivation. Their small AAA checks went to satisfy the landlord and the merchant. Their livestock starved to death or was sold for a song. Now, they find themselves once more planting cotton, bound to Uncle Sam rather than the landlord, still keeping their children out of school to pick the crop during the fall.

4,000 bales of cotton were produced on these Roosevelt poor-farms last year, an average of two bales or $120 cash income for each family. Out of this princely sum, the family had to repay loans of $31 for groceries (mostly fatback and cornmeal) and $37 for feed and seed. After buying insufficient amounts of winter clothing, the average subsistence farmer does not have enough money to last himself and his family until the first of the year.

In the meantime, all relief was discontinued for the subsistence serfs long before Roosevelt made good his heartless promise to the business interests that he would "get out of this business of relief."

The tenants were buncoed by adroit case-workers who promised them part-time jobs at manual labor. Now, all pretense of work relief has been dropped by Rex Tugwell and his well-fed minions. The "steer farmers," as they are called, are expected to live together by what they earn from the farms—a forced continuation of the dying Southern feudal system.

Most of the subsistence farmers live in miserable colonies scattered over the state. Others live on single tracts, temporarily consigned to the resettlement administration by landlords. Generally these tracts are poor lands which the owners have been unable to rent otherwise. The tenant is expected not only to make enough to carry his own family, but also to pay his debts to the government and the landlord.

It is obvious that this policy will result in a continual turn-over in tenants, since not one out of ten will be able to meet these requirements.

Corruption Rampant in Ft. Worth, Texas, Relief

(By a Worker Correspondent)

FORT WORTH, Tex., Nov. 18.—Fort Worth relief clients are being put off projects because they will not pick turkeys for poultry houses at the starvation wages of fifty and sixty cents per day. The price of turkeys has advanced with the approaching holidays and due to a strike of farmers which forced poultry dealers to pay more for the fowls. Nevertheless, the companies are adhering to the same wage scales.

A recent investigation of the Fort Worth relief administration showed widespread graft, coercion and corruption. Young girls were even told by case workers to get out and hustle if they did not like the rations afforded them by the relief boards. In some cases, case workers even forced indigent women to accept their attentions.

It was for exposing such evils as these that T. E. Barlow, Unemployed Council leader, was murdered by the third degree in September of 1933.

Newark Jobless In Demonstration

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 21.—A demonstration of organized unemployed and project workers took place in Washington Park today.

The demonstration was called by a united front of three unemployed organizations: the Workers Alliance of America; the Unemployment Council and the Association for Adequate Relief. Newark section of the National Unemployed League. The demonstration marked the launching of the fight for an increase in wages on the projects and for the continuation of direct relief. The meeting was an enthusiastic one and is to be followed by a large indoor mass meeting to hear the reports of the delegations that visited the state and county WPA and ERA officials.

The mass meeting was preceded by a short parade of the women who decided suddenly that they didn't need a permit to parade. This was led by Elsie Salvatore and other members of the Association for Adequate Relief. The speakers were Edwin Kaemph for the Workers Alliance; Fred Haug for the Unemployment Council and Irving Rosenberg for the Association for Adequate Relief. The chairman was Jerry Kotz of the Association for Adequate Relief.

The project workers' locals of the Association for Adequate Relief are planning a giant mass meeting for Dec. 9 in the City Hall council chamber in Newark. The Monday night project workers' local, attended by over a hundred workers, received reports from almost all Essex County projects that the men are clamoring for action against the $55 slave wages.

ness before he is allowed the privilege of supervised starvation.

In McLennan county alone, five hundred rural families were taken off the relief rolls last year and given government loans to "rehabilitate" themselves. In twelve counties of central Texas, 2,600 such families were given opportunities to lead the simple life—as prescribed by the banking interests that dominate the Federal agricultural policies.

Slaves of King Cotton

Despite the uncertain condition of the cotton market, two thousand have been put to growing crops of this staple. These recipients of government bounty are truly the slaves of King Cotton. Many of them became impoverished as a result of the cotton plow-up program. Their rented tracts of land went back to the owners upon being retired from cultivation. Their small AAA checks went to satisfy the landlord and the merchant. Their livestock starved to death or was sold for a song. Now, they find themselves once more planting cotton, bound to Uncle Sam rather than the landlord, still keeping their children out of school to pick the crop during the fall.

4,000 bales of cotton were produced on these Roosevelt poor-farms last year, an average of two bales or $120 cash income for each family. Out of this princely sum, the family had to repay loans of $31 for groceries (mostly fatback and cornmeal) and $37 for feed and seed. After buying insufficient amounts of winter clothing, the average subsistence farmer does not have enough money to last himself and his family until the first of the year.

In the meantime, all relief was discontinued for the subsistence serfs long before Roosevelt made good his heartless promise to the business interests that he would "get out of this business of relief."

The tenants were buncoed by adroit case-workers who promised them part-time jobs at manual labor. Now, all pretense of work relief has been dropped by Rex Tugwell and his well-fed minions. The "steer farmers," as they are called, are expected to live together by what they earn from the farms—a forced continuation of the dying Southern feudal system.

Most of the subsistence farmers live in miserable colonies scattered over the state. Others live on single tracts, temporarily consigned to the resettlement administration by landlords. Generally these tracts are poor lands which the owners have been unable to rent otherwise. The tenant is expected not only to make enough to carry his own family, but also to pay his debts to the government and the landlord.

Mays Strikers Call for Aid

The strike in the Mays department store in Brooklyn, entering its fifth week, is agitating the New York labor movement. Over 100 strikers came out in answer to a strike call when Mays began to fire members of Local 1250. The working conditions in Mays are absolutely intolerable. We are fighting against the starvation wage of $10 and $12 for a 50 to 60 hour week. This wage is lower than that received by most workers on relief projects. We have been compelled to work on Sundays or suffer the loss of a day's pay, or worse, the loss of our jobs.

The militancy and courage of the strikers has won the widespread admiration of labor for the struggle we are making. Wholesome arrests, reaching a total of 102, have been made, the "conspiracy to interfere with business" charge made against two union organizers and three strikers have hardened us and we are more determined than ever to win this fight.

We will win this strike if you give us your support. We appeal to you for assistance. Through your Executive Board, through your membership, through your affiliations we appeal for immediate financial aid.

Send all contributions to Leon Levy, chairman of the Finance Committee, Department Store Employees Union, Local 1250, 205 West 14th Street, New York City.

THE NON-PARTISAN LABOR DEFENSE

A Year of Activity, Success and Service to the Working Class on All Fronts of the Radical and Labor Movement

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense has a record of achievement of which its members and the working class organizations which support it may well be proud. The following summary of some of its defense activities concretely illustrates what is meant by "non-partisan labor defense."

Anti-Fascist and International Activities

HITLER GERMANY:

It was the N.P.L.D. which organized the protest movement against the deportation to Hitler Germany by the Dutch police of four young German refugees attending a radical congress at Laren, Holland. The N.P.L.D. organized a joint protest of many workers' organizations and, despite his reluctance, compelled the Dutch Consul General to accept it.

NEW YORK:

The N.P.L.D. organized the protest movement against the clubbing of anti-fascists by the New York police, arising out of a demonstration of young Socialists and Spartacus youth against a Nazi meeting at Madison Square Garden in May, 1934. The N.P.L.D.'s activities were recognized as a factor leading to the removal of Commissioner O'Ryan from office.

ITALY:

The N.P.L.D. was an active constituent of the Committee which held effective counter-demonstrations against visiting Italian Fascist student groups on Columbus Day, 1934, in New York. When college students were expelled for participation in these activities, it was the intelligent aggressiveness of the N.P.L.D. which forced on a reluctant city administration a discussion of this attack on civil rights.

CUBA:

The Cuban National Committee for Amnesty, composed of thirty-one Cuban labor organizations, has asked and received the aid of the N.P.L.D. in winning American support for its struggle against the Mendieta regime of terror. Anita Brenner is chairman of the N.P.L.D. Committee on Cuba.

CHINA:

The N.P.L.D. is organizing an international protest movement against Chiang Kai Shek's reign of terror. Herald Isaacs, formerly editor of the Shanghai China Forum, leading labor organ of China, is chairman of the Committee on China.

The Fight Against Criminal Syndicalism Laws

SACRAMENTO:

The N.P.L.D. has taken an outstanding part in the most important criminal syndicalist case of the past decade—the famous Sacramento frame-up.

During the trial the N.P.L.D. provided Norman Mini, a member of the Workers Party, with the services of attorney Albert Goldman, noted Socialist lawyer, whose work was an outstanding feature of the courtroom struggle. At their request, it raised $3,400 bail to liberate Caroline Decker and Jack Warnick (members of the Communist Party) from Sacramento County Jail, where they had been held for six months. It stimulated widespread public interest in the case through press publicity and public meetings from coast to coast.

The cases are now being appealed. Owing to the importance of the Sacramento case to the entire labor movement, the N.P.L.D. organized the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, including the Socialist Party, Workers Party, General Defense Committee, Y.P.S., L.S., S.Y.L., National Unemployed League, Workers Alliance of America, and the Workers' Sick and Death Benefit Fund. This Committee, together with sub-committees acting in San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, Boston, Cleveland, Toledo and elsewhere, has assumed direction of the appeal fight. Herbert Solow of the N.P.L.D. is secretary-treasurer of the Committee. The N.S.A.C. has retained Raymond W. Henderson, attorney in every successful criminal syndicalism appeal in California; has published and circulated 10,000 copies of a pamphlet on the case entitled "Union-Smashing in Sacramento," and is conducting a nation-wide campaign to organize mass support behind the Committee's efforts to obtain a reversal from the California Supreme Court.

ANGELO HERNDON:

The N.P.L.D. is one of six organizations which set up the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense. The Committee has printed and distributed over 45,000 copies of a 16-page pamphlet. It aims to secure 1,000,000 additional signatures to petitions calling upon the Governor of Georgia to free Herndon.

WARD ROGERS:

The N.P.L.D. is a constituent of the Committee to Aid the Defense of Ward Rogers, young FERA instructor and Socialist, convicted of "anarchy" for aiding the organization of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union in Arkansas. An appeal is now pending.

Deportation of Aliens

ANTONIO BELLUSSI:

Antonio Bellussi, veteran anti-Fascist, union coal miner, and a member of the Bordiquist group, was forced to flee Italy in 1923 because of his fight against the Fascist. He was arrested by Federal agents on June 17, 1933 for expressing his opposition to Fascism during a meeting of Fascist Khaki Shirts at Wilkesbarre, Pa. In danger of deportation to Italy, Bellussi appealed to the N.P.L.D. for aid. The N.P.L.D. secured Bellussi's release on bond after he had been nine months in jail. The N.P.L.D. obtained for him the right to go to South America, and raised the funds necessary for transportation and admission to a South American country.

JACK WARNICK:

Jack Warnick, one of the defendants acquitted in the Sacramento trial, but thenceforth pursued by the Committee on Subversive Activities of the American Legion, has been seized by the immigration authorities, acting on the instigation of the Legion, and basing themselves on the evidence on which Warnick was acquitted in Sacramento. Released on bail, Warnick is being aided by the N.P.L.D.

Against Martial Law

The N.P.L.D. initiated a joint committee of seven organizations which held a mass meeting in New York protesting against the use of the National Guard as strikebreakers, and which sent defense funds to Toledo, Minneapolis and the Gulf Coast. With five other defense organizations, it helped launch a counter-offensive against the strike-breaking anti-red scare in California in the summer of 1934. It presented to Secretary Perkins a petition to stop deportations of aliens arrested by the troops. It organized an Eastern protest against martial law in Minneapolis, during the great strike of teamsters Local 574, in July-August, 1934.

Against Persecution of Strikers

HARLAN MINERS:

In 1931 the eyes of the working class were centered upon the terror in the Harlan, Kentucky coal fields, where seven union organizers who defended themselves against the attacks of coal company gangsters armed with machine guns, were given life sentences. The General Defense Committee of the I.W.W. has never ceased its fight for the release of these seven prisoners. The N.P.L.D. in raising funds to aid the fight for a pardon. The G.D.C., N.P.L.D. and I.L.D. have now formed the Joint Committee to Aid the Kentucky Defense.

ROBINS-GRAS:

Harold Robins and Andre Gras were arrested during the hotel strike of the Amalgamated Food Workers in New York City in February, 1933 on the charge of assaulting a non-union chef. Found guilty, they were sent by the notorious anti-labor Judge Corrigan to Sing-Sing. Undertaking their defense at this juncture, the N.P.L.D. organized a movement which secured broad backing. The judges of the Appellate Division unanimously reversed the conviction on the ground of obvious prejudice on the part of the trial judge.

FARGO TEAMSTERS:

One of the longest and most bitterly fought strikes in the history of the Northwest, in Fargo, North Dakota, led to a frame-up instigated directly by the notorious Associated Industries of Minneapolis. The N.P.L.D. sent its Chicago counsel, Francis Heitsler, to represent the strikers during the strike struggles; defended the strikers in numerous cases, and carried the 17 convictions to the North Dakota Supreme Court, which has not yet handed down a decision.

MINNEAPOLIS STRIKES:

As the defense representatives of the famous General Drivers Local 574 of Minneapolis, whose 1934 strikes have led to a resurgence of the Northwest labor movement, the N.P.L.D. has been in charge of numerous defense cases in that locality. Latest of these cases are: Vincent F. Dunne, officer of Local 574, while leading a picket line in aid of an American Federation of Hosiery workers' strike, had three ribs broken by Farmer-Labor police and was arrested and convicted.

When police shot and killed two pickets and wounded numerous others who had closed down the Ornamental Iron Works, and the Farmer-Labor Mayor Latimer refused to conduct an open hearing, the N.P.L.D. conducted a mass public hearing on the issues; a score of eye-witnesses testified; leading Farmer-Laborites denounced the mayor for scabbery and murder; and the assembled workers laid the murders at the door of Mayor Latimer.

PHILA. FRUIT CLERKS:

Local 753 of the Retail Clerks International appealed to the N.P.L.D. when five of its members were framed by the employers' association during a strike. With the exception of a peace bond required from one striker, the cases were all won.

Rallying the Labor Movement

The main aim of the N.P.L.D. in all cases is to rally the broadest possible section of the organized labor movement in support of persecuted workers in need of limiting defense struggles merely to the necessary legal steps. In the course of its activities, the N.P.L.D. has enlisted the support for cases of the leading trade union, fraternal and political organizations. Its ultimate aim is the unification of the largest number of labor groups in one defense organization on the basis of a militant, class-struggle program.

The foregoing brief and incomplete record of the work of the N.P.L.D. testifies to the way in which the N.P.L.D. meets a fundamental need. Hardly a day, but some labor organization or worker seeks its aid. The American working class has greater need than ever of a strong defense arm to protect it against enemies. The N.P.L.D. needs the active support and sympathy of every worker and every friend of the labor movement. What can you do to help? Actively participate in its work by joining the N.P.L.D. where a branch exists, or help build a branch where none yet exists. Build the Non-Partisan Labor Defense!

To Hold Protest Against Ferrero Deportation

A mass meeting to protest the imminent deportation of Ferrero and Salitto is to be held at the Rand School, 7 East 15th St., at 8:15 P.M. on Wednesday, Dec. 4. Under the auspices of the Ferrero-Salitto Defense Conference, 21 organizations, among them the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the American Civil Liberties Union, and the General Defense Committee of the I.W.W. are calling this meeting as the latest step in the long struggle to save these two men.

Prominent speakers, both from the outside and from the participating organizations will outline the case to date and the further steps which must be taken. Ferrero is in immediate danger of forcible deportation to Italy where, because of his anti-Fascist views, certain death or imprisonment awaits him. A similar fate for Salitto hangs upon a pending decision in his case by the Department of Labor. Only mass pressure and additional funds with which to carry on the legal battle can save either of them. The charges against both men, long residents of this country, are nothing more than that they hold anarchist views. In reality their cases are but another in the long list of cases wherein the government is taking aggressive and arbitrary steps against all militant fighters in the labor movement.

Norman Mini Writes from His Dungeon in San Quentin

One year after the beginning of the Sacramento trial, Norman Mini sent from San Quentin Prison the following letter to Herbert Solow, secretary of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee:

Nov. 18, 1935

Dear Solow:

Getting those orange-colored two pages (the N.S.A.C. "News Letter") was a surprise and a gratification. Today it struck me this might be a good time to write you a sort of summary of my state of mind.

Just this afternoon as I was wandering around in the yard (Saturday afternoons you can walk, look at the sky, think) it came to me that now almost any feeling of strangeness or wonder at the life I'm leading has worn off; this has become the normal existence. It is completely and utterly natural that you should work down there (in the jail) six days of the week, that you should sit around doing nothing on Sunday, that you should fit all your actions and ideas to this particular rhythm. It is the only existence.

Somewhat it strikes you as absurd that you should have ever done even the most everyday things outside: standing on a street corner looking into the window of a cigar store; ruffling up a starched napkin; seeing a bill-board in a vacant lot. And you realize all this profoundly, but without any particular feeling of unhappiness. Your desires, the things you worry or dream about, are the MINOR events of your life; the things close to you (my god, my task!—the loom broke down yesterday and 30 yards behind; tomorrow we will have cornbread for breakfast lar feeling of unhappiness. Your desires, the things you worry or dream about, are the MINOR events of your life; the things close to you (my god, my task!—the loom broke down yesterday and 30 yards behind; tomorrow we will have cornbread for breakfast and I like it and will be glad sopping up the gravy with it) take up your time and you have no sense that it could be otherwise.

Probably the adjustment has been so complete because it has been, in a sense, deliberate. About a month ago I said, "Come on now, we are going to get down to business," and when I started working on my novel, life began to fit into three distinct categories—the jute mill, books, and the outside world. (Writing, newspapers, visitors.)

I almost hate to say it but, in spite of the work, the ascetic diet and the innumerable petty annoyances, I'm getting along very well JUST NOW. I know that the writing is really the cause of this, and that in time something there's sure to happen to it and then there'll be a reaction. But maybe by that time something will have happened to change the whole perspective. I don't think I'll actually stay in here forever!

Before I forget it, the N. Y. Times runs out on November 26, the first anniversary of the beginning of the trial, and my letter to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense asking their aid. In honor of the occasion, I want to thank all of you for everything you've done in this past year... and I mean EVERYTHING. I leave it to you to get my thanks to the proper people.

Fraternally,
MINI, No. 57606.

New Stalinist Pamphlet Covers Up their Shameful Role in the Sacramento Case

plain. Nor does he mention the role of the N.P.L.D. in the bail matter. Nor does he mention how his rag had to publish an apology to the N.P.L.D. after it had insinuated that bail should not be put up through the N.P.L.D. because it was composed of racketeers.

On page 15 is an impeachment of the "intelligence" of the jurors. We haven't conducted any psychological examination of the jurors and so we can't dispute this matter with Professor Quin. We can, however, ask why Quin does not reprint some of the scurrilous cartoons and insulting wise-cracks which his rag published during the trial about the jurors and which the prosecution's undercover agents were in a position to slip to the jurors when they went home at night.

On pages 17 and 21 is a discussion of a statement made by Norman Mini to the prosecutor shortly after his arrest. Jack Warnick has testified and events have shown that Mini's statement in no way aided the prosecution. Pat Chambers has signed a statement scoring the capitalist press for calling Mini's statement a "confession."

The "Stool-Pigeon" Legend During the trial, however, Quin made a united front with the Hearst papers. They and he called the Mini statement a "confession," thus building up the prosecution's argument that a crime had been committed. Mini was denounced by Quin and the whole C. P. as a "stool-pigeon."

The Quin pamphlet says nothing of "stool-pigeon" whether "subjective" or "objective." It states only that Mini's statement ridiculed the Communist Party. It did in the tone of properly so. It was in the guilt of Mini's remark to Al Hougharty, Stalinist section organizer, when Mini was thrown into the tank in Sacramento County Jail along with this petty bureaucrat: "The only criminal syndicalism you have ever been guilty of is being section organizer all this time and never organizing anything."

Gallagher and Goldman On pages 17 and 21, mention is made of the fact that at one point in the trial Attorney Albert Goldman of the N.P.L.D. dissociated himself from a remark made by Leo Gallagher, the I.L.D.'s "genius" attorney. Quin does not reveal that Gallagher's remark was a challenge to the jury to do its damndest: "I am not speaking for the jury; I am speaking for the people in the back of the court." Quin writes that Goldman asked "exception for his client, Mini, from the displeasure of court, jury and prosecution." This is a typically Quinish lie. Goldman asked that the jury not permit itself to be prejudiced against any of the defendants by Gallagher's remark. In so doing, Goldman served all the defendants.

other participants in the united front, is that the C.P. ruthlessly and deliberately broke up the united front on orders from 13th Street. Later, Charles Gordon, California I.L.D. organizer, was fired from his post; the Western Worker printed the charge made against him; he had entered a united front with Trotskyists. So who broke it up?

Mini's Testimony On page 25 Quin states that Norman Mini took the stand first "for the defense." What? Was he part of the defense? As to what he said, not a word here. But the day after he testified, the Western Worker charged that Mini's testimony had consisted of a "fantastic" scheme of violence against the government, which was not Marxism, gave the prosecution a weapon, etc. etc. Where are all those charges now?

On page 28 Quin writes that one juror, after the conviction, signed an affidavit revealing that the verdicts were arrived at in an illegal manner. True. What Quin does not say is that Juror Howard S. McIntire gave this affidavit not to the noble I.L.D. and the "heroic" Gallagher, but to the N.P.L.D. Attorney Goldman and to the Sacramento representative of the N.P.L.D.

The pamphlet admits that Norman Mini was a defendant and that he is now in San Quentin. It has a cover design which the careless might think represents only seven prisoners. But if you look closely, you will see a little lock of hair. That is Norman Mini!

On the other hand, when the names of the prisoners are listed with their statements to the sentencing judge, Mini's name is absent! Quin does not want to record that Mini said:

"Our standing here is no accident. Our conviction is the result of the inner logic of the class struggle. But the same class struggle that results in our conviction will some day generate an irresistible wave that will sweep away forever everything this court and state represents. With this knowledge we can face our sentences confidently: we know that the future belongs to us."

Even a Quin can show that there was perpetrated in Sacramento a gross frame-up, not only against the revolutionist Norman Mini, but against those workers who endorsed the centrist views expressed by Sam Darcy at the trial.

The C. P. may be in a new period, but when it comes to telling the truth about its revolutionary opponents, that part of the line—I know it Browder—remains unchanged. During the trial the C. P. disrupted the defense, attacked those who sought honest, militant unity, knifed in the back a courageous hero of the working class movement, and spread a thousand lying stories. Because the N.P.L.D. pounded it at every turn, exposed its corruption and slanders, the C. P. has had to back down. Today it merely whines: Norman Mini, the N.P.L.D., Trotskyists... they are not very nice fellows.

Come, come, Mike Quin... next thing you know you will find that you are willy-nilly, in a united front with the N.P.L.D. Or is your national office keeping secrets from you?

The Race Into War

Keen competition for world markets marches hand in hand with fierce exploitation of the working class in an endeavor to degrade prices to the lowest possible level. The intensity of this competition indicates the proximity of war which is felt immediately by the workers in the mad pace set by capitalist industry—the speed-up.

The race between American and Japanese capitalists for markets is graphically illustrated in the story told by the October Textile World which publishes figures on the Japanese cotton industry showing an increase in sales per worker and a decrease in workers per 1,000 spindles between 1927 and 1934.

Bales per worker	Workers per 1000 spindles
1927 1.23	35.3
1930 1.51	29.1
1934 2.04	18.8

Between 1933 and 1934, the last year for which figures are available, the number of spinning workers increased only 9.3 percent while the increased production rose 12 percent. And this, it is pointed out, is not because Japan is turning out coarser yarn. On the contrary, the finer yarn output increased much faster than the output of the coarser counts.

American employers and their trade journals point with envy to the ability of Japanese capitalists to speed up the workers and the handsome profits derived from this.

Pioneer Notes

The first volume of a series of six of the Selected Works of Leon Trotsky, publisher by Pioneer Publishers, is to be The Third International After Lenin. It is scheduled to appear in January of next year. The contents are:

- A Letter to the Sixth Congress of the Comintern.
- The Program of the Comintern.
- (a) A Program of International Revolution in One Country?
- (b) Strategy and Tactics in the Imperialist Epoch.
- (c) Balance and Perspectives of the Chinese Revolution.

An Analysis of the Seventh Comintern Congress.

This volume deals with all the major polemics raging between the International Left Opposition and Stalin, bringing them to their final climax at the Seventh Congress of the Comintern.

- The other five volumes will be:
- The Stalin School of Falsification.
- The Revolution of 1905.

- The Revolution of 1917.
- Seven Years of World Politics.
- The Chinese Revolution.

In order to raise the necessary funds for this publication program, Pioneer Publishers is conducting a campaign for the sale of certificates at $10 each, which entitle the holder to 30 percent discount on all of their own publications and 15 percent on all books of other publishers.

The Trotsky series will cost $1.50 if paid in advance and $1.00 to certificate holders.

All those interested are urged to subscribe. Write to Pioneer Publishers, 100 Fifth Ave., for further details.

Who are the New «Progressive» Leaders in the A. F. of L. ?

By ARNE SWABECK

With his usual flair for punctuating a specific issue by a dramatic act, John L. Lewis has created a stir throughout the trade union movement in submitting his resignation from the A. F. of L. Executive Council.

Unusual importance is attached to this act. This is natural for more than one reason. John L. Lewis is identified as the leader of the new "progressive" bloc formed within the A. F. of L. upper crust and his resignation certainly tends to emphasize the hopeless division within the leadership. Much more important, however, is the additional and keen attention this act will focus upon the industrial union issue.

His resignation, to be correctly understood, must be viewed on the background of the recent A. F. of L. convention fight in which John L. Lewis, supported by Charles P. Howard, of the typographical union, together with Sidney Hillman and David Dubinsky of the needle trades and others, argued on the progressive side of some important questions. This fight in the main centered around the issues of the organization of the unorganized workers in the basic and mass production industries and their organization into industrial unions. The most hidebound craft unionists, led by William Green, Matthew Woll, Dan Tobin and John P. Frey, made up in voting strength what they lacked in convincing arguments and were thus able to carry the day, with the opposition, however, mustering imposing forces. Of course, this vote did not settle the issue. No sooner had the delegates left the gorgeous hotels and the beautiful shores of Atlantic City than the industrial union defenders realized that if there is to be any force at all behind this idea it is necessary to organize. They formed the "Committee for Industrial Organization." Does the resignation of John L. Lewis indicate that this group intends to take up in earnest the fight for organization of the unorganized and for industrial union organization?

Framed Way Into Presidency

In the leadership that John L. Lewis can give to this group is expressed both its strength and its weaknesses. He is both resourceful and cunning. His fixed objectives he pursues relentlessly. One need only remember how he came into the leadership of the U.M.W.A. by the back-door route. Functioning as a technical worker for the weak Frank J. Hayes, he was appointed vice-president to fill the vacancy left open when Hayes took White's place as president. Lewis was quick to utilize the opportunity to frame up Hayes, keeping him drunk most of the time and involving him in compromising situations which finally forced his resignation and thus automatically elevated Lewis to the presidency.

John L. Lewis has proved himself equally relentless in pursuing his opponents and tracking down those who fell victims to his despotic rule, always striking at the time when the opponents one way or another were in a weakened position. To this he adds the flair for the dramatic staging of his battles against his opponents in order the more surely and the more effectively to gain his ends. Often these methods have helped him enormously to consolidate his own position and strengthen his prestige among leading trade union officials. Hardly one instance in his long career can be found, however, where these special abilities were put to use in conflicts with the coal operators, except in an adverse sense insofar as the interests of the rank and file workers are concerned. One such example dates back to 1920, when he sold out the great national strike and yielded weakly in the face of the Daugherty injunction, declaring: "We cannot fight the government."

Turns Heat on Farrington

Toward the operators Lewis proved soft and exceedingly flexible; toward the opponents in the organization, uncompromising. For years he fought bitterly the equally ambitious president of the Illinois district, Frank Farrington, keeping almost constantly at least five dozen organizers in the district, not to organize what was then already a completely organized district, but to watch Farrington and get the goods on him. In this they succeeded and Lewis made good use of the evidence, and as usual in the most dramatic fashion. When Farrington was about to address the British Trade Union Congress as an official A. F. of L. delegate, Lewis denounced him as an agent on the payroll of the largest Illinois coal company, the Peabody Coal Co., at a salary of $25,000 a year.

Most recently John L. Lewis again made use of his great dramatic talents in appearing suddenly on the Atlantic City A. F. of L. convention floor, asking that the rules be set aside to give consideration to a special resolution directed against Matthew Woll. He demanded the latter's resignation from the reactionary Civic Federation and won his point while the august assembly was thrown into an uproar.

Wrecking the U.M.W.A.

John L. Lewis is at the helm of the strongest and undoubtedly the most militant organization in the country. But his record, to put it mildly, is an odious one, and even though he now takes his stand on the progressive side of the argument in what has become the most important dispute in the A. F. of L.—which deserves due recognition—this record should not be overlooked. In the course of further events it is quite likely that he will be compelled to become one of the outstanding champions of trade union democracy. If so, and this is to be expected, it will arise out of the logic of his present position and not because of any principled adherence to the idea of trade union democracy. His whole past record is that of ruthless wielding of bureaucratic powers, expelling progressive and left wing opponents, beginning with Alex. Howatt, packing conventions and stealing votes in union elections, not shrinking from the most vicious and arbitrary measures.

On times, almost without number, the rank and file members have been in revolt against his sell-outs to the operators. Notable is the instance of 1922, when 50,000 unorganized miners of western Pennsylvania, the home of the steel trust, saved the national strike by making common cause, only to find themselves left out in the cold in the settlement, abandoned, beaten and to be starved into submission. Similarly in 1928, the striking miners of Pennsylvania and Ohio were finally left by the national union officialdom to shift for themselves, beaten, disorganized, and the national organization in the soft coal territories reduced to about 70,000 members.

The Revival

Many severe blows were thus dealt to the glorious U.M.W.A. which reached almost the depths of despair when John L. Lewis, who is now the champion of industrial unionism, inaugurated the disastrous policy of separate state and individual agreements with the operators. However, with the turn of the business cycle and the recent revival of trade union organization, the U.M.W.A. came back strongly to occupy its rightful place. The changing economic conditions and the change in the moods of the masses produced its inevitable pressure also upon the union officials. The coal miners gained new experiences battling the steel trust for organization of the captive mines. It is only natural that this should find its reflection even in the upper strata of the union officialdom.

Trade union organization, now so bitterly fought by the gigantic corporations, has really become a matter of a life and death battle. No trade union leader, no matter how reactionary and bureaucratic, can remain blind to the fact that in the issues of the class struggle—which are here, whether or not the bureaucrats attempt to deny them—only organizations of mass numbers can assure the power necessary in facing these battles. The small beginnings made toward union organization in the basic and mass production industries such as steel, automobiles and rubber, only lends further emphasis to this situation of reality. And the first real distinction that appears between the old bureaucracy left over from the days of Sam Gompers and the bloc of "progressives," headed by John L. Lewis, is the fact that the latter has much more readily responded to the pressure of new objective conditions and much more accurately gauged the actual moods of the masses.

Failure of Leadership

The Executive Council reported to the Atlantic City convention a gain for the year of another half million workers over that of the previous twelve months, bringing the total membership up to 3,045,947. This is the highest membership reported since 1922, though it is still more than a million below the 4,078,740 of 1920. Paltry figures indeed when compared to the rich opportunities for organization that were available. A mighty stream of workers was set into motion for union organization, coinciding with the revival of industrial production and stimulated by the NRA. Almost without exception this stream gravitated toward the A. F. of L. Again and again, however, these workers were repelled by the dismal failure of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy and its reactionary collusion with the employers. Therefore the matter first to be recognized is the fact that the craft union structure is no weapon for the struggle against the large corporations that union organization entails. These bureaucrats lacked both vision and will to even attempt to adjust the organizational structure to the new needs. They leaned almost exclusively upon the government for their support, entering into a partnership in which their position as agents of capitalism meant that they were to prevent the workers from engaging in independent class activity. Consequently they did their best, with the support of the government, to strangle every strike. This could not at all inspire confidence among the workers in union organization.

Lewis Gives the Record

It was thus easy for John L. Lewis to put his finger on the weak spots at the A. F. of L. convention: "For twenty-five years or more," he said, "the American Federation of Labor has been following this precise policy (he meant the policy of doing nothing—A.S.) and surely in the absence of any other understanding of the question, a record of twenty-five years of constant, unbroken failure should be convincing to those who actually have a desire to increase the prestige of our great labor movement by expanding its membership to permit it to occupy its natural place in the sun."

"What is the record?" he went on. "Delegate Howard expressed it when he said that we laid claim to a membership of approximately three and a half million, out of an organization number of approximately thirty-nine million. There is the answer."

The Executive Council had claimed a total of 1,804 Federal labor unions organized during the year. Lewis proceeded to show, from the report itself that this number included a period of two years, and then, reading from other pages of the report about the locals that had been suspended or disbanded and thus permanently gone out of existence drew a negative balance of 314 federal labor unions. From this Lewis concluded: "So the 1,804 organizers of the American Federation of Labor in all classifications during that year lacked 314 unions of holding their own."

"On that basis I submit it to be a reasonable statement," continued Lewis, "that it will be a long time before the American Federation of Labor organizes those 25,000,000 workers that we are all so anxious to organize. There are others among us who believe that the record indicates a need for a change in policy. This convention floor is teeming with delegates from those industries where those local unions have been established and where they are now dying like the grass withering before the autumn sun, who are ready to tell this convention of the need for that change of policy."

Green's Church Philosophy

William Green attempted to make a reply to this charge of dismal failure, saying: "One might as well ask why the church has not saved all the sinners." In this answer Green revealed his true self. As a good churchman, still a deacon in his home town, Conneaut, Ohio, he would never infer that the church is no good. His conclusion is that the wicked sinners do not repent and do not want salvation: We said we would organize 25,000,000 workers in the great American Federation of Labor, but darn it, these workers did not want to get organized. The truth is that the workers did desire organization but the gentlemen of Green's church repelled them by woeful incompetence and deceit.

Since the Atlantic City convention the cleavage in the Executive Council has deepened. The resignation of Lewis should not be looked upon as a split but rather as a determination on his part to wash his hands of responsibility for failure and, undoubtedly also, as a means of getting his hands free in case he should decide on a serious campaign for a new and more aggressive policy of organization. William Green has made further feeble attempts to take up the challenge, but despite his exalted position he is a poor match for the much more resourceful Lewis. This will become much more apparent when it is clearly understood that there are much more fundamental issues involved than a mere tilt between the two.

On how Green came into his high position there also hangs a tale. Old Sam Gompers had ruled the affairs of the Federation for so many years and in such an undisputed fashion that his sudden death and the problem of finding a "worthy" successor presented great difficulties. There was Matthew Woll, commonly looked upon as the Crown Prince, but his not very large stature sheltered an even smaller mind, and he nursed great personal ambitions. The writer recalls having a debate some years ago with Matthew Woll when he appeared before the Chicago Federation of Labor to which I was a delegate at the time. The debate commenced around Woll's ardent presentation of his own special labor insurance scheme and expanded into the main issues of the A. F. of L. policy of organization. I received the distinct feeling that he was much more concerned about himself appearing in an impressive light than with the issues in question. The old Gompers crowd at the time of the departure of their helmsman feared the too great ambitions of Matthew Woll, and so William Green fell into his present position.

The real battle for the life of craft unionism versus industrial unionism can hardly be avoided. This is keenly sensed in all leading A. F. of L. circles and those who are the real theoreticians of the stark reactionary policies, like John P. Frey, are coming more to the fore, defending the shaky structure of craft unionism. There need be no doubt, however, that the future lies on the progressive side of this fight. And, aside from such considerations as the personal abilities of those who now stand out in the forefront on either side, the "progressives" have the real issues. On that side the real now beginning, so such a perspective lies also the confident hope forces are sure to come from the new unions that are bound to grow in the mass production industries, encouraged by the struggle that is that precisely from these unions, new and genuinely progressive forces will emerge.

Next to John L. Lewis and his powerful organization in back of him, as it surely will be, and should be, on the progressive issues now in dispute, the representatives of the textile workers' union stand out in the bloc that recently formed. In this sense we have in mind first of all the organizations that are involved. Together with these two there are the needle trades unions. On the whole these represent a line-up of unions with a militant fighting tradition. Moreover, the leaderships in these unions cannot help but feel in a very marked degree the pressure from below, from a membership trained in the fire of the class struggle, and striving to make their unions effective instruments of this struggle. This should prove an important and a wholesome factor in the future orientation of this "progressive" movement of today. However, the personal integrity of their representatives, who are now in the spotlight in the "progressive" bloc, is perhaps equally important.

In this respect very little of a favorable nature can be said for McMahon, the President of the United Textile Workers. During past years his feeble abilities served to keep the textile workers divided into a multitude of ineffective quarreling unions, and he was most often ready to sabotage any single one of them which did carry on a militant struggle. The "progressive" bloc is hardly advanced by his presence. The Vice-President of the U.T.W., Francis J. Gorman, plays a somewhat different role. No doubt his dynamic qualities have had a great deal to do with the growth of this union during the last few years. It is understood that all the more militant delegates to the U.T.W. convention, held prior to the national textile workers' strike of last year, specifically demanded that Gorman be placed in charge of the strike. He has since made many attempts to cover up and make his own weakness appear in the most favorable light, accepting a strike settlement that gave the rank and file workers nothing in return for their valiant fight. Still, at the A. F. of L. convention Gorman went further than any other prominent delegate in taking issue with the whole concept of the organizational as well as political orientation of the entrenched bureaucracy. In defending his labor party resolution he made it clear that in his opinion the labor party was to be a distinct opponent, antagonistic to the vested interests represented by the two old capitalist parties.

The Stalinists, seeing in these utterances of Gorman the living incarnation of their own "principle of the People's Front for the United States," were positively eloquent in reporting this speech at length in their "theoretical" organ. Said the Stalinist scribe:

"That a labor leader of the type of Gorman comes to the identical conclusions as those formulated by the General Secretary of our party, Comrade Browder, shows both the knowledge of the conditions and needs of the masses that Comrade Browder has mastered, and that Gorman has made great advances on the basis of his recent experience."

So, Gorman elevated himself to the position at least of becoming the unconscious medium for Browder. This ought to mean a lot to him. A true description, however, of the intervention of the Stalinists in present trade union developments would of necessity be much more prosaic in tone as it would show an absolutely pernicious influence.

The Needle Trades

The full effect of this influence has been felt in the needle trades unions, whose two most outstanding representatives, Hillman and Dubinsky, are prominent members of the "progressive" bloc. Some years ago the left wing showed its greatest resourcefulness in these unions. But this was a good deal before the Stalinist "third period." Traditionally these unions are looked upon as Socialist unions, yet almost consistently having had their definite right and left tendencies and movements. The leading officials usually laid claim to the title "Constructive Radicalism."

From the days of Schlesinger and Siegan the leaders of the I.L.G.W. were amongst the main props of the S. P. Old Guard and receiving their main support from the decrepit Jewish Daily Forward. Usually this I.L.G.W. bureaucracy was bitterly opposed by their own rank and file Socialist union members. So disreputable had this administration become that Dubinsky, a lesser evil, fell heir to it. Sidney Hillman, the President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, on the other hand, politically unattached, understood how to gather around himself radicals and ex-radicals of various descriptions, mostly ex's, and make them subservient to his administration.

Sydney Hillman

Whereas, in the I.L.G.W., the "Socialist" officials nearly always fought the left wing head-on, Hillman endeavored to make the left wing feel at home in the union in order to quietly muzzle it or to painfully kick out the more determined ones. Somehow he always managed to have a "right" wing target, as for example the former New York Beckerman gang, and thereby kept the left wing busy supporting the administration measures against the gang. Hillman could always manage skillfully to make it appear that he met the left wing half way, but always in such a manner that the decision would remain on paper and cost him nothing. So, for example, he did not oppose amalgamation of the needle trades unions, so long that he felt sure others would oppose it sufficiently as a practical reality. He could display what looked very much like a real and practicable form of sympathy for the Soviet Union and even accept the shop delegate system—in principle—and in such a way that it would not interfere in the least with the domination of his official machine. Hillman began his career as a progressive leader fighting the incredibly reactionary United Garment Workers bureaucracy, and fighting against the sweatshop. With the A.C.W. growth of membership and power, he adjusted himself handsomely to all the celebrated forms of bosses' "impartial" machinery, based on the "Rule of Reason" and wound up in the cunning speed-up system called standard of production, which is the curse of the union membership. Hillman is now completing the cycle, back again in a "progressive" (Continued on Page 5)

Toledo-Union Town

Militant Battles That Defeated the Bosses

By ART PREIS

Over one and a half years have passed since that memorable night in May, 1934 when some ten thousand embattled Toledo workers besieged the stronghold of the Toledo Auto-Lite plant and fought through those six days of magnificent struggle against all the armed hosts of the capitalist state. The echo of that victorious "Battle of Chestnut Hill" beat against the eager ears of the American workers and inspired the first great strike wave under the "New Deal."

Hard in the wake of the Auto-Lite strike came the two famous and historic battles of the Minneapolis truck-drivers under the leadership of Local 574, the general textile strike, the San Francisco general strike, and a flood of other militant labor struggles.

Toledo a Union Town

Emboldened by the lessons of the Auto-Lite encounter, Toledo labor began a steady organizational upsurge. Although every step of the path toward a solid and fighting union front has been marked by the fiercest opposition, both from the employers and overmen on the outside and reactionary union bureaucrats from within, the one-time notorious "scab-town" Toledo is today a genuinely union town. This development did not spring to full flower overnight out of the earth. Following the Auto-Lite affair, Toledo experienced one strike battle after another, the Armour and Swift, Larrowe Milling, General Milk Drivers, FERA strikes and a flock of others. The primary issue of most of these scraps was the establishment of the union, union recognition and the fulfillment of the grandiose promises of the late-lamented NRA.

Chevrolet Strike

It was therefore no mere coincidence that in May of 1935, but one year after the Auto-Lite strike, Toledo labor again set off the spark which revitalized the apathetic workers in the giant auto industry and launched the second strike wave under the Roosevelt regime. The Chevrolet strike, under the leadership of hard-hitting, intelligent union progressives, served not only to entrench unionism in several General Motors plants, but exposed to the workers of the nation the treacherous role of Green, Dillon and other enemies of industrial unionism, stimulated the fight for union progressivism and the organization of the workers in basic industries.

"THE BATTLE OF CHESTNUT HILL"

The three weeks battle of the Chevrolet workers, climaxed by the unforgettable demonstration of the strikers against Francis Dillon, right-hand Green man, on the night when they were finally budgeoned into partial but short-lived defeat, served to crystallize anti-Dillon-Green sentiment in the auto, rubber and other unions, led to the formation of autonomous international unions in these industries, and spurred the fight for industrial unionism in the recent A. F. of L. convention and subsequently.

only by a state-wide walkout. W. J. Eldridge, of Kincaid, a coal miner, acted as secretary of the conference.

The conference planned to conduct an intensive drive for the organization of all relief projects and to crystallize a wide sentiment for strike action. Conferences are to be held in various sections of the state in order to consolidate the forces of labor. The first conference to be held will be at Marion, Ill., Dec. 1, where thirteen southern Illinois counties are to be represented.

One of the features of the conference was the presence of delegates from local union number 1, the most powerful unit of the Progressive Miners of America. The Progressive Trades and Labor union and the A. F. of L. Hod Carriers union had delegates at the conference.

Jas. Crass, Tony Scremin, James Shipley, Al Renner and Edward C. Morgan delivered inspiring addresses. Gerry Allard stated when interviewed that a strike would materialize in Illinois by Dec. 16 unless radical concessions were made by the WPA administrators before that time.

"Sure the workers will strike," Allard declared when asked if the workers would respond to the call for action. "As a matter of fact, hundreds of them are already on strike. The sentiment is there. Our job is to organize it and lead it in the most effective channels."

«Local 574 Is Invincible!»

By JAMES P. CANNON

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 26.—The union-wrecking racket which used to work so smoothly under the guise of the "Red purge" is not what it used to be. Not in Minneapolis at any rate. And union militants all over the country can learn something from the manner progressive labor in the northwest.

JAMES P. CANNON

In which Local 574, spearhead of has beaten off the latest attack directed by William Green's personal representative and gained ground steadily in the four weeks since it was first announced in the nation's headlines. As things stand now it is conceded on all sides in the labor movement that Local 574 has the upper hand over the union wreckers. The impression is widespread—and strongest of all in the ranks of its own membership—that Local 574 is invincible. The name, or rather the number, has become a legend.

Bosses Wary of 574

It is highly significant that the bosses, who tried their hands at breaking the union in the great strikes of 1934, have nowhere ventured to come out in the open to support Tobin and Meyer Lewis. To be sure, this cautious attitude has not been directed by sympathy for the union under attack and its outspokenly radical leaders. Their hearts were with Lewis, but they didn't trust him to make good his boasts that he would break up the "outlaw" union. They told him frankly in more than one private conference, the reports of which found their way into local labor circles, that they had had their share of expensive trouble last year and had become convinced that their trucks could not operate without 574 drivers. The union has signed new contracts with several new groups of employers, and renewed its contracts with others, since the formal revocation of its charter by Tobin last summer, and has even made new gains since the formal launching of the ill-starred "Red purge" by Meyer Lewis on Oct. 30.

THE MILITANCY THAT SCARED GREEN

Local trade union leaders of the traditional non-militant type, despite their entanglement with and dependence upon the official A. F. of L. machine and their lack of any real affection for the "wild men" of Local 574, have likewise shrugged their shoulders at the appeals of Green's special union-bust. The action of the Central Labor Union in shouting Lewis down and then instructing its executive board to confer with Local 574 with a view toward a peaceful settlement of the difficulties was a remarkable tribute to a so-called "outlaw" union. It bears testimony to the strength of Local 574 and to the respect in which this strength is held by the local leaders of the official trade union movement of the A. F. of L.

The Grand Strategy

In its reply to the Central Labor Union the executive board of Local 574 reiterated the position which it has maintained throughout the long struggle: As point one, it declared the desire of the union to remain a part of the general labor movement represented by the A. F. of L. and asked the aid of the Central Labor Union in securing the restoration of its charter in the Teamsters' International; it disclaimed any quarrel with the other unions, pointed to the record of its cooperation with them in the past and expressed the desire to continue this cooperation in the future; and, finally, the leaders of Local 574 reiterated the firm determination of the union to maintain its organization and to defend itself against all attacks.

In these three points is contained the gist of the policy of Local 574 which has brought it such brilliant success: a policy of militancy, plus cooperation with all other legitimate unions; a deliberate policy of affiliation to the A. F. of L., and of unceasing struggle for reinstatement, plus a refusal to sacrifice its organization or to capitulate to union wreckers masquerading as labor leaders. This policy, in my opinion, is a model for the internal union strategy of the trade union militants everywhere, just as the policy exemplified by Local 574 in the great strikes of 1934 can serve as a model of strike strategy.

Meticulous attention to every detail of organization is another one of the secrets of Local 574's astounding success. For the strike battles of last year the union set up headquarters in a big garage, equipped it like a field headquarters for the rapid mobilization of the picket "crusading squads," and hurled them like a militant army into action. The bosses, accustomed to dealing with horse-and-buggy unionism, represented so pathetically by a dickerling business agent, were knocked out of the water by these militant mass tactics. These tactics prevailed eventually even against the police and the militia and wrested settlements which made it possible for the union to consolidate itself, heal its many wounds and begin to grow as a day-by-day organization. For that a different technique was needed. Grand strategy had to make way for detail and routine.

THE BATTLE OF «DEPUTIES RUN»

The spacious new headquarters on Plymouth Avenue North present a picture of Local 574 in this stage of its development as a full-blown union, taking care of the daily business of its membership, but poised for action all the time. Occupying two large floors, with two or three times the space of the headquarters of the Central Labor Union, with an auditorium seating 1,500, adequate office space, several conference rooms and a bar, Local 574 is equipped for business and does plenty of it. As many as six different meetings of separate categories of workers, including those employed on relief projects, take place on a single night. Over three thousand people were packed into the hall on the night of the demonstration against the Green-Lewis "Red" drive, with a large overflow crowd in the streets listening to the loudspeaker. In addition, the headquarters serve as a social center for the membership. Every week there is one kind of an affair or another, dances, smokers, lectures, frolics. Sports are organized around the union—baseball, football and soccer teams compete with amateur rivals in the uniform of Local 574. All this is reflected in signs, announcements and gatherings at the headquarters. Local 574 is a mass movement, drawing its people ever closer to the union, taking hold of them at their work and in their hours of recreation, welding them together. A formidable, new movement. A really inspiring union, the pride of the whole northwest, strong in the affection of the working masses. A hard union to bust, as the bosses of Minneapolis know, and as Tobin, Green and Meyer Lewis are learning. Local 574 is strong in itself, but its great advantage in every struggle is the enthusiasm and devotion with which the rank and file of the other unions rally around it. Local 574 has won this devotion by the inspiring example it has set before them and by the ready and effective cooperation in time of trouble. From a formal standpoint Local 574 is an "outlaw." They have revoked its charter and declared it "outside" the general labor movement. But in the real essence of the matter Local 574 is "inside"—in the hearts of the rank and file of all the other unions. These things are the real capital of Local 574 in the struggle. In spite of all, it is conceivable that the united forces of reaction in the labor movement could crush and destroy it as they have crushed other isolated unions before. But the tide is not running that way at present. The workers are in a more militant mood. They are clamoring for industrial unionism, sick and tired of the policy that brings nothing but defeat. Craft unionism is cracking at the seams in the A. F. of L. The reactionaries have too many fights on their hands to concentrate on Minneapolis alone. The ardent sympathy of progressives and militants everywhere is on the side of Minneapolis, and that helps in various ways. For all these reasons it appears to me that the militants of Local 574 have a fighting chance for victory again. That's all they ever asked for.

Who Are the Progressive Leaders of the A.F. of L.?

Chas. P. Howard's position in the "progressive" bloc to promote industrial unionism is somewhat unique. His organization, the typographical union, is distinctly craft-conscious. But Howard does understand the importance of organized groups functioning inside the unions. He was elected President of the union on the slate of a faction calling itself the Progressive Party, which for years fought the more reactionary "Wahngits."

Strangely enough, Frank Morrison, the eternal Secretary of the A. F. of L. and ardent supporter of Green, comes from this same typographical union faction. Or maybe this is not so strange after all.

Howard genuinely fears that if the A. F. of L. becomes immune to necessary progress, somebody else will take over the job of organizing the workers. This was the tenor of his support of industrial unionism at the San Francisco convention last year, and he made no bones about whom he feared. At the Atlantic City convention he repeated almost word for word his previous speech on this particular point, saying:

"Now, let me say to you that the workers of this country are going to organize, and if they are not permitted to organize under the banner of the American Federation of Labor they are going to organize under some other leadership or they are going to organize without leadership. And if either of those conditions should extenuate, I submit to you that it would be a far more serious problem for our government, for the people of this country and for the American Federation of Labor itself than if our organization policies should be so molded that we can organize them and bring them under the leadership of this organization."

On this particular point Lewis was even more outspoken, yet utterly reactionary in presenting Communism and Fascism in the same category, when he declared: "What of the future of our country? Who among us does not know the hazards of the present moment? The teachings of false prophets falling upon the ears of a population that is frightened and disturbed and depressed and discouraged, the nocturnal and surreptitious attempts of interests to form a philosophy, the philosophy of the Communists on the one hand and the philosophy of the Nazis on the other hand, equally repugnant and distasteful to the men of labor. And yet it is constituting a serious, deadly menace for the future."

It would thus be absurd to assume that there is a real distinction between the Lewis forces and the Green forces in questions of basic class ideology. Nevertheless, the present situation is clear to militant and to revolutionary workers in the trade unions. Around the issues that stand out today—an aggressive policy of organization and industrial unionism—they must make common cause and a common struggle with the Lewis "progressive" bloc. This struggle, once it takes real hold, will rage primarily

Fred Zeller, Leader of the Paris Socialist Youth Declares for the Fourth International day under the white heat of the class struggle that political values are brought into sharpest, boldest relief. It is the showdown—a time when no ambiguity is possible.

Days of Decisive Struggle

These are the days in France when the class struggle itself rips every shred of pretense and hypocrisy from those who stand in the van of the working class. In the decisive struggles to come the workers will learn who are their leaders—and who their betrayers.

It is at a time like this that comrade Zeller—only a year ago an avowed opponent of "Trotskyism"—has come forward with the call for a fight for the Fourth International, for a new party, as the only way out for the French proletariat. The youth organization of the Seine and whole federations and parts of federations elsewhere in France will follow his fighting lead.

Through what experience did Fred Zeller pass to arrive at this conclusion? That is what every young Socialist, every Young Communist, if he really counts himself a fighter against capitalism, will want to know. Comrade Zeller has himself written the answer.

In one of the most valuable documents of the present-day revolutionary labor movement—a pamphlet of a few thousand words—Fred Zeller describes the evolution of the Youth during the past year in terms of the political developments which have brought the fight against Fascism onto the order of the day in France.

Addressed to his own comrades in the Socialist Youth of France and to comrades throughout the world, the pamphlet gives, with all the authority of a leading participant, a picture of what has been happening in France, a picture of the Front Populaire in action, a pitiless picture of the social democracy and Stalinism in their final, social-patriotic, class-collaborationist phase. He gives a living and striking demonstration of the result of the impact of events and the influence of firm Bolshevik ideas. Firm attachment to the interests of the proletariat led him relentlessly from the bosom of the social democracy in which he was nurtured into firm solidarity with the Bolshevik-Leninists whom upon first meeting he distrusted and fought.

He describes the growing sentiment among the Socialist Youth of France against the social democratic bureaucracy of the S.F.I.O. He relates how into this leftward moving current came the Bolshevik-Leninists. At the beginning Zeller and his comrades were alienated.

Hatred for Bolshevism

"Despite our desire to take a progressive road, it seemed to us that between them and us there was an unbridgeable gulf." As young Socialists "we had been brought up in the party with a hatred for Bolshevism."

The vigorous activity of the young Bolsheviks—all too vigorous, it seemed to their Socialist comrades—led Zeller and his associates to unite in an organized faction under the name of Revolutionary Socialist Youth which was formed to combat, as they saw it at the time, "both the reformists and the Trotskyists."

But it was not long before this faction, under the pressure of events, began to itself move in a clearer leftward direction. "One part, the most progressive, entered into collaboration with the Bolshevik-Leninists."

In this period, early 1935, the young revolutionary Socialists fought the S.F.I.O. bureaucracy, above all on the question of national defense versus revolutionary defeatism. This period coincided with the new turn of the Stalinists, particularly in the matter of national defense, as Franco-Soviet negotiations for a military pact proceeded.

Stalin's Missionaries in France
In April, Zeller relates, two representatives of the Y.C.I. came to Paris, Kossarov and Chemenodanov, and approached him with a demand that he and his comrades take a sharp position against the Trotskyists, and for adhesion to the Third International.

Lengthy extracts are given from Evolutionary program.

Expulsions, War Crisis, Toulon
The expulsion of revolutionists, the events at Toulon and Brest, the growth of the war crisis, and the swift drop into foul betrayal by both bureaucracies hammered home, with Bolshevik-Leninist help, the real issue:

"Seeing that the policy followed by the Second and Third Internationals were nothing but a reflection and an echo of the League of Nations and that there was no longer an independent working class policy on a world scale, and that in fact we were witnessing the bankruptcy of the Internationals and the decomposition of their national sections, we concluded that with relentless inevitability, today or tomorrow, the indispensable regrouping of the whole proletarian vanguard would take place on the basis of revolutionary position. "Carry out the indispensable rapprochement with the Trotskyists." This was Zeller's advice to Marceau Pivert, who remains so far, with many of his comrades, under illusions concerning the "democracy" in the Socialist Party which they think will enable them to seize its apparatus and introduce a revolutionary policy from the top.

The Two Roads

"It is clear," says Zeller, "that such a tendency will not go far. Under the pressure of circumstances and the pressure of events, it will automatically differentiate, just as the Revolutionary Socialist Youth did. The soundest and most active wing will come near to the Bolshevik-Leninists. The other will return to the clan of the reformists, to the shirt-tails of the bureaucracies."

What perspectives does Zeller open up?

"We have deep roots in the youth and that is important. Only those who in the days to come will know how to be the faithful interpreters of the will of the youth, who will offer it an unstained flag and clear perspectives, will win the victory in France."

"We are forging in the daily struggle the cadres of the great revolutionary party of tomorrow. From now on we call loudly to the working class youth of France: The Young Socialists of the Seine have had a series of experiences in the struggle. Now they have definitely broken with the policy of bankruptcy and of treason of the two Internationals. In the face of the bourgeoisie which is showing its teeth they do not want to bend the knee but to fight!"

"They want a party and an international of struggle which will be faithful to revolutionary Marxism, to the ideas of Lenin and the glorious tradition of the Bolsheviks of October, 1917!"

"The Second and Third Internationals are nothing more now than decomposing corpses."

"Henceforth, for the grouping of all the exploited of the earth under the banner of the Fourth International."

"Love live the French Revolution!"

"Long live the world revolution!"

Not Hollow Preaching - But Clear Cut Slogans!

(From Leon Trotsky's Preface to Fred Zeller's Pamphlet)

"In the ebullience of our epoch, amid great defeats and disillusionments, in the growth of the conservative Soviet bureaucracy, the oldest generation of both Internationals has largely spent itself, become a hollow shell and fallen prostrate. The building of the new International fails with its main weight upon the young generation. The obstacles are great, the tasks colossal. But it is precisely in the struggle against great obstacles that fighting cadres are formed and steeled. The Seine Federation of the Youth and after it the provinces as well can and should take an honored place in this work. More faith in ourselves, in our forces and in the future! Let the philistines howl about the tactlessness, the brashness and exaggerations of the youth. Cadres of the revolutionary party have never been educated either in the ballet schools or in diplomatic chancelleries. The revolution is not only 'tactless' but it is ruthless when need arises. That is why Messrs. Bourgeois hate Leninism (with Stalinism they get along not so badly). The social-patriots translate the bourgeoisie's fear into the language of sanctions, expelling young Bolsheviks from the party, while the centrist philistines curse on this account—the Fourth International. This need not worry us. All those processes take place in the thin layer of the bureaucracy and the workers' aristocracy. One must look deeper into the masses that languish in the chains of the crisis, hate their slave owners, desire struggle, are capable of struggle and in Toulon and Brest have already made their first assault. These masses do not need hollow preaching on unity, not the false 'tactfulness' of the salon, but clear-cut slogans and courageous leadership. Let us hope that Zeller's pamphlet will perform a service in the cause of the education of the young cadres of the new International!"

Written on Nov. 7, 1935.

the stenographic record of Zeller's meeting with the Y.C.I. representatives during which the now famous injunction was given them: "If in this period you make your revolution you are traitors!" The Stalin-Laval declaration in May completed the education of the young Socialists.

"They hoped to use us to betray the supreme interests of the international proletariat. We indignantly refused. Chemenodanov came not to win us from reformism but to push us into the arms of the bourgeoisie under the fallacious pretext of defending democracy against the principal enemy, Hitlerite Fascism. To serve the needs of a poor cause, they wanted to yoke us to our General Staff. Strongly opposed, we took up the struggle fiercely."

The brochure develops in detail the relations between the S.F.I.O. and Stalinist leaderships and the revolutionary wing of the Seine party and describes the expulsions perpetrated at Lille, their sequel, the role of the S.A.P.ists (followers of the Socialist Workers Party of Germany) in the French youth, their capitulation and the proudly developing fight of the main body of the youth on a developing revolutionary program. "Expulsions, War Crisis, Toulon" The expulsion of revolutionists, the events at Toulon and Brest, the growth of the war crisis, and the swift drop into foul betrayal by both bureaucracies hammered home, with Bolshevik-Leninist help, the real issue:

"Seeing that the policy followed by the Second and Third Internationals were nothing but a reflection and an echo of the League of Nations and that there was no longer an independent working class policy on a world scale, and that in fact we were witnessing the bankruptcy of the Internationals and the decomposition of their national sections, we concluded that with relentless inevitability, today or tomorrow, the indispensable regrouping of the whole proletarian vanguard would take place on the basis of revolutionary position. "Carry out the indispensable rapprochement with the Trotskyists." This was Zeller's advice to Marceau Pivert, who remains so far, with many of his comrades, under illusions concerning the "democracy" in the Socialist Party which they think will enable them to seize its apparatus and introduce a revolutionary policy from the top.

"It is clear," says Zeller, "that such a tendency will not go far. Under the pressure of circumstances and the pressure of events, it will automatically differentiate, just as the Revolutionary Socialist Youth did. The soundest and most active wing will come near to the Bolshevik-Leninists. The other will return to the clan of the reformists, to the shirt-tails of the bureaucracies."

What perspectives does Zeller open up?

"We have deep roots in the youth and that is important. Only those who in the days to come will know how to be the faithful interpreters of the will of the youth, who will offer it an unstained flag and clear perspectives, will win the victory in France."

"We are forging in the daily struggle the cadres of the great revolutionary party of tomorrow. From now on we call loudly to the working class youth of France: The Young Socialists of the Seine have had a series of experiences in the struggle. Now they have definitely broken with the policy of bankruptcy and of treason of the two Internationals. In the face of the bourgeoisie which is showing its teeth they do not want to bend the knee but to fight!"

"They want a party and an international of struggle which will be faithful to revolutionary Marxism, to the ideas of Lenin and the glorious tradition of the Bolsheviks of October, 1917!"

"The Second and Third Internationals are nothing more now than decomposing corpses."

"Henceforth, for the grouping of all the exploited of the earth under the banner of the Fourth International."

"Love live the French Revolution!"

"Long live the world revolution!"

To comrade Zeller and all his fellow-fighters among the revolutionary youth of France we extend the hand of comradely greeting. Welcome, fellow-fighters for the Fourth International!

pseudo-progressives in the unions, etc.) precisely at the moment when Stalinism most openly takes on the role of social-patriotic betrayal. Bureaucratic centrism and social democratic centrism meet to consummate the betrayal, to make it more certain by creating in the mind of the masses the illusion of strength through "unity."

It is in such a period of reaction as we have described that the old Internationals finally break down—i.e. in the sense of succumbing to opportunism and social-patriotism and irrevocably losing the capacity to serve as a progressive force. In "normal" times the process of degeneration is not obvious, it still appears that the working class under its leadership is "making progress." This also means that the "new" International comes into being in the period of reaction, of defeat, and of demoralization for the working class. Thus the Third International of Lenin came into being during the War, and the Fourth International comes into being in the present epoch of war and impending war.

It follows that the cadres of the new International are at first a small minority isolated in a sense from the masses, though they alone express the true interest and need of the masses, as presently becomes clear. These cadres survive in such a period because they are intransigent; because they possess clarity and sharpness in theory and ideology; because they make the clearest and sharpest break—not merely in words or even program but also organizationally from the dead and corrupt body of the old International, and because they steel themselves against every weakness in themselves and every attack and temptation from without. The example of Lenin needs merely to be cited.

To use Lenin's own words uttered during the early days of the World War, in such a period the basic task is "to unite the Marxian elements, however small their number may be at the beginning, to revive in their name the words of real Socialism now forgotten, to call the workers of all countries to relinquish chauvinism and raise the old banner of Marxism."

There are, furthermore, particular reasons why the growth of the forces of the Fourth International on American soil does not proceed at the rate of thousands a month. Right on the heels of the founding of the W. P. came the first public announcement of the Stalinist 180 degree turn, viz. support of the labor party idea. This was followed by other breath-taking swings on the Stalinist flying trapeze. Now many of the points in the present C. P. program have a superficial plausibility and attractiveness for the workers and especially for intellectuals and liberals. To welcome all people who on any ground are "opposed" to war and Fascism, who want to see peace and a semblance of democracy maintained, into one all-embracing united front—how sensible that sounds, how attractive, how imposing the masses that seem to rally to meetings and parades around such a program! It takes time and effort to demonstrate, as the W. P. attempts to do and must do if it is to be true to Marx and Lenin, true to the real facts, that this united front is a mere show, that it is pacifist and will collapse when war really threatens, as all the imposing pacifist movements always have, that this fake united front means in reality dividing the workers from each other, because it opens the way to social-patriotic betrayal in war. A similar superficial attractiveness attaches to Stalinist proposals for an all-inclusive labor party, their abandonment of the dual unionism, social-fascism, united front from below, etc. of the "Third Period." The task of showing the workers that the opportunist ditch in which the C. P. now wallows is as vile as the sectarian ditch of the earlier period is not an easy one.

But if in such a period and for such reasons as we have sketchily indicated, workers do not flock by themselves by thousands into the revolutionary party, there are compensations. Precisely the clearest elements, the most healthy and vigorous, the youth elements, penetrate beneath the surface. They see the capitulation to social-patriotism, the preparation for monstrous betrayal in the next war, the confusion and demoralization among the workers, which must result from the course of the bureaucracies of both the Second and the Third Internationals. These elements tend surely and irresistibly to move toward our program and our banner.

The past year has demonstrated that the program laid down for the W. P. in the Declaration of Principles is in every essential point unassailable. As the war issue has come to the front, the W. P. has been the one voice which has set forth a clear, a complete, a concrete Leninist position and has been able to explain events in the light of that position. Steadily this is making its impression on the genuine left currents in the Socialist Party, in Stalinist circles in some measure, and among the politically unattached who, in spite of and to some extent because of their confusion and demoralization, feel the need of some clear, albeit as yet small, voice amid the tempest.

The confidence built up among our own membership during this first year and among the most advanced workers in other groups, because on the burning, the real, issues of the revolutionary movement we speak with consistency and authority, is a great achievement.

Although this first year has necessarily been one devoted to organizing ourselves, laying foundations for the Party and its work—theoretical and organizational—the achievements in our external work have been far from negligible. In the very first weeks of its existence, the Party, through its own channels and through its support of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, intervened decisively in the Sacramento trial, lifting that issue out of the obscurity into which the C. P. was seeking to throw it. By this and other activities our first year record in defense work was made highly creditable. The Party played a leading role in the Toledo Chevrolet and General Motors strike, which carried the struggle against the automobile barons on the one hand and the A. F. of L. bureaucrats on the other to the highest point yet achieved anywhere. In Minneapolis and the entire surrounding territory, leadership has been given in strike struggles, in organizing unions, in building the broadest and most vigorous left-progressive union movement in the country. Party members played a significant part in the conventions of automobile workers, teachers and rubber workers just preceding the Atlantic City A. F. of L. convention which opened the way for the head-on conflict between craft and industrial unionists which marked that convention and made it the most exciting and important in the entire history of the Federation. To a remarkable extent the Party has turned toward mass work and it stands out clearly as the one organization which has a trade union policy free, on the one hand, from "Third Period" sectarianism and adventurism, and on the other hand from Lovestoneite-Stalinist opportunism and conciliationism toward the trade union bureaucrats. In the unemployed field, in a difficult period of reorientation, the Party has continued to take a vital part, not least in pressing for unification on a sound basis of the two leading organizations with a mass base, the W.A.A. and the National Unemployed League.

While the Party has thus addressed itself to the concrete activities in the American labor scene, it has been internationalist in its

5th Anniversary of Spartacus Youth League

Report Shows Large Increase in Membership and Influence

By NATHAN GOULD
National Secretary, S. Y. L.

December, 1935, marks the beginning of the fifth year of the existence of the Spartacus Youth League of America and the conclusion of the first year of the post-fusion Spartacus Youth League. For those who recognize and understand the all-important role of youth in modern society and of the youth movement in the class struggle, this day is a day of exaltation. For those who have never understood its significance, it is an invitation to stop for reflection. For all, this is the occasion to review and to plan the political course and organizational strategy of the youth organization of the Workers Party.

Four years of diligent effort enables us to report the existence of a youth organization which, in the field of the class struggle, figures as a factor. The S.Y.L. has today a total of twenty-six branches functioning in fifteen cities, in ten states throughout the country.

The S.Y.L. is today approximately one-fourth the size of the Young People's Socialist League and about one-sixth the size of the Young Communist League. All other political labor youth organizations (I.W.W. youth, Anarchist youth, P.P. youth, etc.) are considerably smaller and cannot be recognized as factors influencing the youth whatever. Through our stupendous strides we have come to be acknowledged as one of the three political youth organizations active in and influencing the struggles of the toiling and student youth of this country. It is interesting to observe that our organization, in contradistinction to the above mentioned, experienced its principal growth during the last year.

Growth of S. Y. L.

While the C. I. prepared the liquidation of the Young Communist movement, and whereas the Y.P.S.L. at its last convention (Pittsburgh, July 19-21, 1935) acknowledged the loss of 20 of its branches since the time of their Reading convention one year prior to the Pittsburgh session, the Spartacus Youth League reports unprecedented progress. For the first three months after the fusion the Spartacus Youth League increased its membership by over 144 percent and increased the number of its new branches in cities where none had previously existed by 132 percent. A further increase in membership of ten percent and in new branches by 27 percent is reported for the summer months, a period of time when organizations tend to suffer normal declines in membership, in activity and in recruitment. These figures of steady and substantial growth testify to the vitality of our organization and gives indication of its great future.

S. Y. L. branches exist today in such strategic areas as the Calumet steel district and the southern Illinois coal fields, influencing there considerable numbers of youth. That the S.Y.L. is more and more becoming a factor in the struggle of the youth is best displayed not only in its active participation in the student movement and in the student strike of April 12, but more in the fact that, for example, in the past four months S.Y.L. branches in seven different cities played leading roles in strikes of the young workers.

The few organizational notes written on the occasion of the first anniversary of the post-fusion S.Y.L. are designed to give our readers an idea of our present strength and of the great potentialities of this young youth organization.

Purpose of Spartacus

The Spartacus Youth League of America is the guiding instrument of the Workers Party in the class struggles of the youth section of the proletarian population. The primary purpose of that organization is to win and to educate for membership in the Workers Party and for leadership in the class struggle, the masses of toiling and student youth of the country. As an international organization it is prominently engaged in the work of realizing the organization of the Fourth International and the youth section of that international. In the Stockholm Youth Bureau, which the organization together with the International Communist League organizations was instrumental in founding, the S.Y.L. played an active role in the life of the Bureau and in the political struggle against the centrists and opportunists, who succeeded finally in smashing the Bureau by expelling from it the I.C.L. representative. Together with other organizations that have signed the Open Letter for the Fourth International, the S.Y.L. is now actively involved in the building of the youth section of the Fourth International and in drawing new forces to it.

The importance of the youth organization grows in correspondence with the increase of the importance of the role of youth in society. Because of the position which youth occupies in the world today it is safe to say (and it is by no means an exaggeration) that the outcome of the struggle of the working class will be determined in great measure by its (the working class) ability to win to its support the masses of toiling and student youth. In the course of the post-war period the role of youth in the various strategic positions of industry and politics has assumed an increasing importance until today they hold the very key to the four avenues which vitally concern the revolutionary movement and its course to power.

On the war front youth is the first and the most directly affected. On the economic front it is the greatest physical and moral victim. In relation to the Fascist movement it is the most likely recruit. In the field of labor politics it is the most aggressive, the most militant, and the most amenable to the propaganda of the Marxists; yet the most easily deceived by virtue of its lack of experience.

On the Economic Front

Approximately twenty-four million, or one-fifth of the total population in the United States, are youth between the ages of 15 to 24 inclusive. At least five million of these are today without employment. Another eight million are students. In 1930, the U. S. Department of Labor reported that no less than 11,585,808 youth between these ages were gainfully employed in the U. S.

Hence in 1930 the youth comprised over one-third of the total number of workers gainfully employed in that great period of unemployment. More important is the fact that there is probably not one single important industry in the U. S. in which the youth are not represented in ample proportion. Capitalist industrial development has seen to that. Furthermore, important industries such as automobiles, employ youth in the overwhelming majority because of the nature of the work and the immense speed-up.

It is not difficult to understand therefore that the importance of the youth in the productive apparatus of the country is enormous, and considered from the point of view of the class struggle and proletarian victory, they are indispensable to the proletarian vanguard. This steady relative increase of youth in industry at the expense of the older worker is to be attributed to the simplification of machinery in production, the rationalization in production (Taylorism) which requires nimble fingers, young and active bodies, with great stores of quick energy; also the fact that youth ostensibly requires less to live on (that is, from the point of view of direct family obligations, although many times he is actually the sole supporter of large families) enabling him to work at a lower wage return. Because of these factors we find that in the past fifteen or so years youth has become more and more of a factor in basic industry to the extent where he has become a vital factor to the operation of production. Just as youth, counting in the millions, is indispensable to the productive apparatus of the country, so he is vital to the victory of that progressive force in society which, by the nature of its struggle, must rely upon and seek support from the factory proletariat. The task of winning the younger members of this class falls directly upon the shoulders of the Spartacus Youth League.

While it cannot be stated with any amount of accuracy that the degree of exploitation (from the point of view of speed-up and general working conditions in the factory) is not any worse for the youth than for the adult, it is a known fact that, as a rule, their wages are lower than that of the adult and that they are given (be-

Does the support of League of Nations sanctions lead to support of the new imperialist war? A British Stalinist spokesman, T. A. Jackson, gives a clear-cut answer (see Plebs, Nov. 1935):

"The issue which is being decided now in relation to the Italo-Abyssinian war is whether the League of Nations is of any use as an instrument for the prevention (immediate or ultimate) of war. To put this issue to the test involves punitive measures, up to and including (if necessary) war upon the war-maker. There is no other way of testing the issue decisively."

"Would a war between the League states and Fascist Italy (with any allies Italy could collect) be worth while from the point of view of the INTERNATIONAL working class? Of course it would. A defeat of Fascism in Italy would be a defeat of Fascism EVERYWHERE. A defeat of imperialism in the person of Italy would be a defeat for imperialism everywhere, including Britain and France."

Here we have Stalinist social-imperialism in the guise of the struggle against Fascism and imperialism!

And the same author finds that the League of Nations can be converted into an anti-imperialist, anti-capitalist force!

"It is, potentially, at least as much an ANTI-imperialist (and therefore, potentially, ANTI-capitalist) institution as the reverse." (Same as above.)

cause speed is the primary skill requirement in modern society) the more strenuous jobs and that they are being constantly cheated and discriminated against through the application of so-called apprentice laws, etc.

Unemployed Youth

At the present time youth represents almost one-half of the total unemployed of the country. Most of these are youth who have been graduated from high schools and colleges and have been denied by this system the right to participation in production. Such individuals properly enter into a category all their own—"declassed" elements. Never having worked, they lack experience in and a basic knowledge of the class struggle and its inevitable implications. Because of an absence of this fundamental class tradition, functioning under the unbearable economic conditions imposed on them, they more easily degenerate (politically) and are compelled to resort to other ("illegal") means in order to live.

It is not surprising that Dr. Williams of the Psychiatric Clinic of Children's Village, Dobbs Ferry, New York, can report a tremendous increase in crime in the depression years among the youth between the ages of 18 and 21, most of whom have had no previous record; that these "depression youth" are today the greatest offenders of the law. Wandering and begging, living as "moochers," is the most dignified expression of the demoralization imposed upon the youth. America's contribution to the institutions of crime and degeneration, the pool hall, profit considerably from increased attendance by the youth who frequent these institutions for lack of a better means of disposing of the long hours of tortured thought. A process of moral and physical degeneration of the youth, "the future of the country," as we say, takes place and is taking place at a rate unbelievable. Hundreds of thousands of youth wandering, listless and apathetic; restless, stealing, begging, degenerating, rendered useless by a system that cannot care for them, they become the victims of that society.

This multitude of "depression youth" (ex-students who have been denied a place in the productive apparatus of the country) will tomorrow, unless reached and educated by the proletarian movement, constitute the Fascist army of this country. That is the lesson of the development of the Fascist movement of every other country. American capitalism is producing today by this very economic process a huge reservoir from which will spring tomorrow a consensable Fascist army. We for our part can and must direct the gross dissatisfaction of these youth into the proper channels, the channels of proletarian revolution, as the only means by which the needs of these youth can be satisfied for all time. Let it be known to all that the Spartacus Youth League is the instrument of the working class designated to execute this vital and historic task.

THE NEW STRUGGLE IN AUTOS

Big Test Awaits Industrial Union Movement

(Special to the New Militant)
By A. J. MUSTE

DETROIT, Mich.—On every side signs multiply suggesting that before this winter is over the battle for unionization of the automobile industry will come to a head. The condition of the industry, the developments among the independent unions in the industry; the Green-Lewis controversy in the A. F. of L. over craft versus industrial unionism, and the strikes that have already broken out or are about to explode, all point in this direction. It is hard to see how a gigantic conflict can be avoided. The automobile magnates' nervousness is reflected in all the newspapers in the automobile centers of Michigan, Ohio and adjoining states.

The strike of nearly 4,000 workers in the Motor Products Co. in Detroit is holding firm. It is a preliminary skirmish in which the forces that will presently be cooperating or fighting on a grand scale are feeling each other out.

The strike was called by the Automobile Industrial Workers Association (the "Coughlin" union) mainly composed of production workers, but the Mechanics Educational Society of America (composed mainly of tool and die makers though its last convention decided for industrial organization) which also had members working in the plant immediately called out its men and gave the strike complete support. The strike also has the support of the Associated Automobile Workers of America (known as the "Greer" union after its leader). As the NEW MILITANT reported recently, the executives of these three independent unions in the auto field have voted for amalgamation into an industrial union with a preamble recognizing the existence of class struggle. The referendum vote of the membership on the proposal will be almost unanimously favorable.

The Motor Products strike is thus the first test of the new amalgamation of auto unions. If it succeeds, as seems fairly certain, the new union will become a very potent rallying center.

The reactionary wing of the A. F. of L., headed in the automobile industry by Francis Dillon who gained unsavory fame for his collaboration with the bosses in the great General Motors strike last spring and was rewarded by Bill Green last August by being made president over the protests of the delegates of the A. F. of L. International, the United Automobile Workers, has behaved in characteristic fashion and has succeeded in finally discrediting itself in the eyes of the Detroit workers. Dillon tried to play an open scab-herding role. He stated publicly that he would confer with the management and "take the Motors Products workers back to their job at once."

The strikers met the Dillon bid with two masterful strokes. First, they challenged Dillon to support an election under Federal auspices to determine which union represents the majority of the men. Dillon cannot run this chance. The firm will also oppose it as long as possible, because to allow an election means recognition of the Wagner Board and recognition of the independent union!

In the next place the strike leaders are inviting Dillon's union to join the strike committee, help them to win the battle and telling him that they are willing in such case to have him take all the credit he wants for the victory!

Dillon will of course not cooperate with the "outlaws" and the chance that he will be able to do any damage to the strike is now practically nil.

It can be authoritatively stated that from both sides leaders of the M.E.S.A. and the A.I.W.A., and the John L. Lewis Committee for Industrial Unionism have been making exploratory moves to determine whether cooperation is possible. Here is the key to the situation so far as the workers' side of the struggle is concerned.

The auto workers, especially in Detroit, have unquestionably lost faith in the A. F. of L. which they identify with Dillon and his predecessor, Collins. This outfit cannot organize the industry. The opportunity will pass this year, perhaps for several years, if it is left to them. On the other hand, the workers are not likely to have the confidence that any combination of independents can achieve the huge task, especially as long as an unsympathetic, reactionary A. F. of L. union remains in the field to keep the men divided and to receive the bosses' support as soon as the independents really threaten the latter. The independents need the support of the John L. Lewis "progressives" to smash the Green-Dillon leadership from inside the A. F. of L. Then the basis will be laid for a genuine industrial union within the A. F. of L. which can include the present independents. There are reasons to believe that the more far-sighted leaders among the independents have just such a perspective.

Thus the prospects for a sound foundation for building a union are better than ever. The workers are active, furthermore, and here and there strikes are breaking out earlier than in other seasons, making it more likely that enough impetus for an extensive struggle will be attained before the season passes its peak. The condition of the industry itself is also favorable for an organization campaign and strike action.

General Motors Nervous On the one hand, production is running high. Detroit turned out 93,177 cars last week compared with 16,810 in the corresponding week last year. On the other hand, competition for business is fierce.

The companies are thus caught in a dilemma. If e.g. a plant producing even a minor part of a car is shut down, the production line in one of the big companies may be slowed down in a few days which means losing orders. The same drive of competition is leading companies to seek means of cutting down costs, which means that in the face of rising prices grievances accumulate among the workers. Thus the Motor Products Corporation strike started over an attempt of the company to put over a wage cut under the cover of a shift from piece to week work. General Motors is laying up trouble for itself. In its move to decentralize its transmission production, so that it may not be caught again as it was by the Toledo strike last year, by working the men in Muncie, Ind., and Saginaw, Mich. 25 percent longer hours and at corresponding lower pay than the reduced force still working in Toledo. Little wonder the big companies exhibit symptoms of extreme nervousness!

Militants and progressives must not let this opportunity pass. They must make full use of it. In a real sense the fate of the American labor movement for a long time to come may hinge upon what happens in the auto industry between now and May of next year. Militants and progressives in meeting this challenge and opportunity will:

Program for Militants

1. Promote the amalgamation movement among the independent auto unions.
2. Fight to smash the Green-Dillon leadership in the A. F. of L. auto union once and for all.
3. Demand that the Lewis-Hillman "progressives" prove that they mean business by fighting Dillon, supporting strikes, whether of A. F. of L. or independent unions, and undertaking to unite all forces in the industry and in the labor movement for a large-scale organizing campaign to start immediately.
4. Support joint action of all elements in any organizing work and strikes now going on.
5. Aim at the creation in this production season of a powerful industrial union in automobiles with an autonomous international charter from the A. F. of L. and democratically controlled by its own membership. Even if the Green-Wool forces block the movement and force postponement of a decision until the next A. F. of L. convention, this must not prevent cooperation of all forces in organizing and strike activity pending final determination of the A. F. of L. attitude.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

MINERS' STRIKE IN ENGLAND

The threat of a general strike of the English miners attracts the immediate attention of the class-conscious workers everywhere. For they remember the last great struggle which paralyzed British imperialism. That struggle, on the widest scale ever experienced in England, came as a defensive stand against the reactionary drive of the entire bourgeoisie to lower production costs so as to meet competition by a relentless lowering of wages. The strike developed into a general strike involving the railroad, transport and mining industries, under the "leadership" of the General Council of the Trade Unions. The Triple Alliance was betrayed by the General Council whose leaders were given the prestige of Stalinist endorsement through the abortive Anglo-Russian Committee (committee of trade union centers of both countries—Ed.). In the present instance, a vote has already given authorization to the miners' executives to call a strike if necessary in order to obtain an increase of fifty cents a day. The strike would come at a time when a considerable recovery of business and of industrial production has taken place. This means that the miners are taking the offensive to regain the ground so heavily lost during the years of crisis.

ENGLAND AND THE FAR EAST

The imminence of a further advance by Japan into North China has aroused the keenest apprehension among English capitalists. With the British fleet tied up in the Mediterranean due to Mussolini's war, the British are helpless to offer much resistance to Japanese penetration in the Far East. The vast investments of British imperialism in China are seriously endangered. Just as the United States was forced to recognize the Soviet Union in order to make the Japanese militarists pause temporarily, so now England is forced to turn to the Soviet Union with an eye to alliance in the common struggle (from totally different standpoints) against Japan. Although this is not the only factor involved, it is nevertheless a major cause of the recently opened negotiations between Russia and England in regard to a large loan to be floated for the Soviet Union by the English banks. Part of the interest on the loan would go to the purchase of railroad equipment in England. Japan cannot help understanding the meaning of this move. It is possible that the "timely" publication of the facts concerning the loan, accomplished its purpose of halting the immediate steps of the Japanese army for engineering an autonomous North China. Whether the Japanese will feel this mood of caution for any length of time remains to be seen. The contradictions that antagonize Japanese and British imperialism have reached the point where the traditional friendship resulting from the military alliance that existed up to 1922, begins to turn sour and to give way to hatred.

CLASS STRUGGLE IN FRANCE

The situation in France becomes more threatening to the workers daily. The battle between the Fascist Croix de Feu and the Socialist and Communist workers at Limoges, in which fifteen workers were seriously injured and none of the Fascists, is a lesson from the life of the need for an armed workers' militia to meet the armed workers' hands. The policy of the "People's Front" becomes in this respect a worse and worse betrayal of the interests of the proletariat. It is the medium through which the workers are lulled into passivity, through which working class policies are made dependent on and subordinate to the bourgeoisie. The workers are being misled into relying on the "liberal" and "radical" bourgeoisie whose interests can only be identical with those of the finance-capitalists. The only salvation for the French workers and toilers is the leadership of a Bolshevik party based on a revolutionary program aiming at seizing the power for the working class. In the coming period it is either Fascism or communism that will triumph. The vicious policy of the People's Front can only assure the victory of the Fascists, helped into power by the Herriots and Daladiers—and the Blums and Cachins.

TRADE TREATY WITH CANADA

Whose government is it? Roosevelt's treaty with Canada would almost by itself prove that the government follows the demands and the interests of big business, of industrial and commercial capital as against the interests of the farmer. Industry thrives at the expense of the agricultural sector of the capitalist system. The Treaty is indeed "cold comfort to the farmer" whose interests are sacrificed wherever necessary to those of the factory owners. In the main it is the manufacturers of autos, machinery and farm implements, including tractors, who are helped, while the American farmer is forced to meet added competition from Canadian farmers. Our main interest is not particularly in the farmer-capitalist. But the working class will have to learn ultimately to utilize the contradictions that exist in American economy—and one of these contradictions is illustrated in the Canadian Treaty, namely, that tariffs are for the benefit of the financiers and industrial capitalists, not for that of the farmer. His interests come second, if at all.

Lessons of October

By Leon Trotsky

Editor's Note: This article was written for the French paper "Revolution," the organ of the Parisian revolutionary youth. The contents of the article clearly reveal as its main aim the utilization of the experience of the October Revolution to demonstrate to the reader the fatal nature of the policy of the "People's Front" in France, as well as in other countries.

I accept with the greatest readiness Fred Zeller's suggestion to contribute an article to "Revolution" on the occasion of the 18th anniversary of the October overturn. True, "Revolution" is not a "big" daily newspaper, it is just striving to become a weekly. High-placed bureaucrats might pull contemptuous faces on this score. But I have had occasion to observe many times how "powerful" organizations with a "powerful" press crumbled into dust under the impact of events, and how on the contrary small organizations with a technically weak press were in a short time transformed into historic forces. Let us firmly hope that precisely this fate is in store for your paper and for your organization.

In the year 1917 Russia was passing through the greatest social crisis. One can, however, say with certainty, on the basis of all the lessons of history, that had there been no Bolshevik party, the immeasurable revolutionary energy of the masses would have been fruitlessly spent in sporadic explosions and the great upheavals would have ended in the severest counter-revolutionary dictatorship. The struggle of classes is the prime mover of history. It needs a correct program, a firm party, a trustworthy and courageous leadership, not heroes of the drawing room and of parliamentary phrases, but revolutionists, ready to go to the very end. This is the major lesson of the October revolution.

Bolsheviks a Minority in the Beginning

We must remember, however, that at the beginning of 1917 the Bolshevik party led only an insignificant number of the toilers. Not only in the soldiers' soviets but also in the workers' soviets the Bolshevik fraction generally constituted 1 to 2 percent, at best 5 percent. The leading parties of petty bourgeois democracy (Mensheviks and the so-called "Social-Revolutionaries") had the following of at least 95 percent of the workers, soldiers and peasants participating in the struggle. The leaders of these parties called the Bolsheviks first, sectarians, and then... agents of the German Kaiser. But no, the Bolsheviks were not sectarians! All their attention was directed to the masses, and moreover, not to their top layer, but to the deepest, to the most oppressed millions and tens of millions whom the parliamentary babbler usually forgot. Precisely in order to lead the proletarians and the semi-proletarians of city and country, the Bolsheviks considered it necessary to distinguish themselves sharply from the factions and groupings of the bourgeoisie, beginning with those false "socialists" who are in reality agents of the bourgeoisie.

The Poison of Patriotism

Patriotism is the principal poison of that ideology by means of which and cannot take its defense upon the bourgeoisie poisons the class-consciousness of the oppressed and paralyzes their revolutionary will, because patriotism means the subjection of the proletariat to the "nation," astride of which sits the bourgeoisie. The Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionaries were patriots; up to the February overturn—half concealed; after February—openly and brazenly. They said: "Now we have a republic, the freest republic in the world; even our soldiers are organized into Soviets; we must defend this republic against German militarism." The Bolsheviks replied: "No question but that the Russian republic is now the most democratic one; but this superficial political democracy may on the very morrow crumble into dust since it rests on a capitalist foundation. So long as the toiling people, under the leadership of the proletariat, do not expropriate their own landowners and capitalists and do not tear up the robber treaties with the Entente, we cannot consider Russia our fatherland of that ideology by means of which and cannot take its defense upon power and hid behind it. The aroused revolutionary masses never forgive cowardice and betrayal. First the Petersburg workers, and after them—the proletariat of the whole country, after the proletariat the soldiers and after the soldiers—the peasants, convinced themselves by experience that the Bolsheviks were right. Thus, within but a few months the handful of "sectarians," "adventurers," "conspirators," "agents of the Hohenzollern," etc., etc., transformed themselves into the leading party of millions of awakened people. Loyalty to the revolutionary program, irreconcilable hostility to the bourgeoisie, decisive rupture with social-patriots, deep trust in the revolutionary force of the masses—these are the chief lessons of October.

The Campaign Against the Bolsheviks

The entire press, including the papers of the Mensheviks and "Social-Revolutionaries," carried on a vicious campaign, really unheard of in history, against the Bolsheviks. Thousands upon thousands of tons of newspaper print were filled with reports that the Bolsheviks were linked to the Tzarist police, that they received carloads of gold from Germany, that Lenin was hiding in a German aeroplane, etc., etc. In the first month after February this torrent of abuse overcame the masses. Sailors and soldiers threatened more than once to bayonet Lenin and other leaders of Bolshevism. In July, 1917 the slander campaign reached its highest peak. Many sympathizing lefts and semi-lefts, especially from among the intellectuals, became frightened by the pressure of bourgeois public opinion. They said: "Certainly the Bolsheviks are not agents of the Hohenzollern but they are sectarians, they are tactless, they provoke the democratic parties, it is impossible to work with them." This, for instance, was the tone pervading the big daily of Maxim Gorky, around which gathered all sorts of centrists, semi-Bolsheviks, semi-Mensheviks, theoretically very left, but terribly afraid of a break with the Mensheviks and the Social-Revolutionaries. But it is a law that whoever is afraid of a break with the social-patriots will inevitably become their agent.

Learning from Experience

Meanwhile a directly opposite process was taking place in the masses. The more they became disillusioned with the social-patriots, who betrayed the interests of the people for the sake of friendship with the Cadets, the more attentively they listened to the speeches of the Bolsheviks, and the more convinced they became of their correctness. To the worker in the shop, the peasant in the trench, the starving peasant, it became clear that the capitalists and their lackeys were slandering the Bolsheviks precisely because the Bolsheviks were firmly devoted to the interests of the oppressed. Yesterday's indignation of the soldier and sailor against the Bolsheviks became remolded into passionate devotion to them and unselfish readiness to follow them to the very end. And on the contrary: the hatred of the masses for the Cadet party inevitably transferred itself to its allies the Mensheviks and "Social-Revolutionaries." The social-patriots did not save the Cadets, but themselves perished. The final break in the mood of the masses which took place within two to three months (August-September) prepared the possibility of the October victory. The Bolsheviks took over the Soviets and the Soviets took power.

Messrs. sceptics might say: but in the end the October Revolution brought the triumph of bureaucracy. Was it worth making? A separate article or perhaps two should be devoted to this question. Here let us say briefly: history goes forward not along a straight line but along a devious one; after a gigantic jump forward there follows as after an artillery shot, a rebound. Nevertheless history goes forward. No doubt, Soviet bureaucracy is an ugly ulcer, threatening both the conquest of the October revolution and the world proletariat. But the U.S.S.R. possesses something besides bureaucratic absolutism: nationalized means of production, planned economy, collectivization of agriculture which, despite the monstrous harm of bureaucracy, lead the country forward economically and culturally while the capitalist countries are moving backwards. The October revolution can be freed from the vise of bureaucracy only by the development of the international revolution, the victory of which will really assure the building of a socialist society.

Finally—and this is not insignificant—the October revolution is important also because it gave the international working class a number of priceless lessons. Let the proletarian revolutionists of France firmly learn these lessons and they will become invincible.

N. W. BRONX—

Question: On page 79 of "What Next?" Trotsky writes, "Lenin, through the press offered to compromise with the Social Revolutionaries and the Mensheviks: You compose the majority in the Soviets, he said to them. Take over the state; we shall support you against the bourgeoisie. Guarantee us complete freedom of agitation and we shall assure you of a peaceful struggle for the majority of the Soviets." Isn't Lenin's proposal here an exact model of the "United Front" or "People's Front" government proposed by the Seventh Congress of the C. I. and denounced by Trotsky as the complete repudiation of Leninism?

Answer: It is difficult to see how an equation can be drawn between the united front policy of Lenin and the policy of the Seventh C. I. Congress. In essence, Lenin's proposal is that which a revolutionary organization makes to other working class organizations in proposing a united front, of which the Soviet is the highest form: Make a bloc with us for concrete action against the capitalist class; at the same time that we will fully support this fight against the bourgeoisie, we reserve the right to agitate for our tendencies inside the ranks of the proletariat. The anti-revolutionary character of the Seventh C. I. Congress "united front" decision lies, not in the fact that it proposed such Leninist united fronts, but that it harnessed the workers of the capitalist countries to their respective bourgeoisies under the formula of the "united front." Adopting a social-patriotic position on war and setting as their goal the defense of the "remnants of bourgeois democracy," i.e., having adopted a social democratic program, the Stalinist "Congress" then proposed the formation of blocs with OTHER class-collaborationist and even bourgeois parties for the furtherance of this program.

The class-collaborationist nature of the Stalinist proposals are clearly revealed by the slogan itself, the "people's government." A PEOPLE'S government will exist only under socialism. Until that time, because the PEOPLE are divided into antagonistic CLASSES, there can exist only CLASS governments: in this epoch either the state power of the bourgeoisie or of the proletariat. Since the Stalinists have definitely given up their program for the seizure of power by the proletariat, their slogan of the "people's government" is merely a camouflage for their support of the CAPITALIST governments.

M. C. NEW YORK—

Question: In what concrete manner does the "antagonism between the city and the country" manifest itself?

Answer: The most outstanding manifestation of this antagonism in our epoch is the so-called price scissors which exists in Soviet economy. Because it is based on the division of labor between the town and the country and arises as a struggle between two major groups of commodity producers, the antagonism is reflected in the prices which each of the groups receives for its products. In the Soviet Union, which has inherited the antagonism, this is reflected in the fact that the alliance between the proletariat and the peasantry can be maintained only if the latter receive in exchange for their grain as large a share of city-made products as they would receive in the open market which, in the final analysis, is the international market. In other words, the alliance between the proletariat and the peasantry can be maintained only if the antagonism between the city and the country inside the Soviet Union is not more acute than it would be if the capitalist open market existed.

Another outstanding reflection of the antagonism is anti-Semitism. Because their course over centuries of time, primarily as merchants, has led them to live almost exclusively in large urban centers, there has been concentrated in the Jews, oftentimes in exaggerated forms, the physical and mental characteristics of city dwellers. The rural inhabitants (anti-Semitism is most prevalent in countries with large peasant populations) are thus easily led by reactionaries to vent their emotions on the Jews who appear to embody all that exploits the countryside. When a strong revolutionary movement, able to point out to the countryside the real source of its exploitation, exists, anti-Semitism is reduced to a minimum. In Germany it was precisely because the betrayal of the Social Democratic and Communist parties weakened the working class movement that Hitler was so successful with his anti-semitic propaganda.

Our Revolutionary Heritage:

Haymarket Sq.

By Leighton Rigby

The life of capitalist production depends upon profits. As capitalism declines, the capitalists seek to maintain profits by consistently driving down wages. By thus shifting the burden of decay to the shoulders of the working class, the rate of decline is temporarily slackened.

Reducing the speed of the fall does not, however, forestall the ultimate doom. Indeed, the very expedients brought into play to arrest the decline only serve to intensify class antagonisms and to make the overthrow of capitalism inevitable. The maintenance of profits at the expense of the working class must eventually kindle the fires of revolution.

This is true in the U. S. no less than elsewhere. Strikes will be "mediated" and broken by force of arms; the workers will be betrayed and misled. But in the end, the American proletariat will accept "no peace at the price of slavery!" It will arise and demand rebirth, not relief! The workers' state will be established.

It Can Happen Here!

It can't happen here? The American workers will continue to fight wrongs with the ballot in the American way? Idle bromides, mouthed by those who have neither felt the pulse of the American worker nor reviewed his revolutionary heritage. It can and will happen here! The working class is awakening to the realization that American democracy is but sham and pretense. Calling to mind its revolutionary heritage, the rank and file will bring forth the workers' state and consistent democracy.

The development of a clearly-defined proletariat in the U.S. came later than in Europe. The opening of the West with its free land, tardy industrialization and immigration made the circumstances here unique. Before the period of the planters' revolution, workers were mostly craftsmen, without the common interests that are found today among the industrial workers. Moreover, a constantly fluid population and dreams of new life in the West made solidarity among the workers, as a class, all but impossible. Add to this a steady influx of immigrants, bound by contract to work at low wages for heartless capitalists, and we see that the lag was not without good reason.

Our Varied Heritage

To say that working class solidarity was held back is the same as saying that the formation of labor unions was delayed. To be sure, there were unions, or societies, here and there prior to the 1860s, but there was no organization of workers on a broad scale. The coming of nation-wide working class solidarity and the rise of nation-wide labor organizations were necessarily simultaneous. The formation of the National Labor Union (1866) and those of the organizations which followed are outside the present discussion. The point is that our revolutionary heritage, as a whole, is not made up strictly of incidents of class war involving the proletariat and the bourgeoisie.

The Shays Rebellion, for example, which I have already described, was a farmer-debtor revolt. The proletariat was not involved, nor had the workers even emerged as a separate class. But the Shays Rebellion is surely a part of our revolutionary heritage, because it was a militant struggle against oppression.

The labor struggles of the 1870s, which have also been described, were the beginning of a series of class conflicts in which the workers revealed militant, revolutionary characteristics. Industrialization had greatly increased, and the rapid exhaustion of free land was tending to precipitate the workers into a well-defined class with common interests. The Knights of Labor (1875) was the means through which the working class manifested its growing solidarity, because that body steered for "one big union" and welcomed to membership working men and women, skilled or unskilled, regardless of color. In fact, its membership was so "Catholic" that the Catholic Church forbade its followers to join the union.

McCormick's Lockout

In October of 1884 the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions (Gompers' first attempt) set May Day, 1886, as the date for the inauguration of the 8-hour work day. The Federation of Trades had a short life, but the Knights took up the cry, and sympathizers added their voices to the swelling chorus. Agitation and demonstrations for the 8-hour day and union recognition prompted Cyrus McCormick (February, 1886) to lock out the 1,400 workers in his plant, saying that "the right to hire any man, white or black, union or non-union, Protestant or Catholic, was something I would not surrender." This lockout shifted the labor scene to Chicago.

As May Day approached, police, mounted or in close formation, took pleasure in bullying and clubbing workers wherever they assembled. The workers, on the other hand, answered by continuing to assemble. Eight thousand workers, representing labor in several industries and the International Workingmen's Association, marched to the lake front. Such slogans as "The Proletariat Must Be Liberated!" were prominently displayed on banners as the assemblage was stirred by militant speeches. And in the meantime (this was April 26) the McCormick lockout continued, and several strikes were in progress at other points throughout the city, including the steel plants, railroad shops and the stockyards. At least eight thousand workers were striking in Chicago.

May Day itself passed quietly enough. But two days later, when the McCormick workers held a meeting near the plant, there was bloodshed. The owner of the reaper works, who would consider no arbitration but was employing the Pinkertons and scabs, summoned the police to break up the meeting.

A hundred and fifty police swooped down upon the meeting and shot down workers right and left. Six were killed and at least twenty-five were soaked with their own blood.

The workers' press, the Arbeiter Zeitung, shouted out: "Blood! Lead and powder as a cure for dissatisfied workmen! This is law and order!" And the workers were equally aroused: "Revenge! Revenge! Men of color, this afternoon the bloodhounds of your oppressors murdered six of your brothers at McCormick's!" This was the call to Haymarket Square for a protest meeting on the following evening.

The meeting was held, a program of speeches had ended and the assemblage was dispersing. Mark the well! Up to this point there was no disorder. But suddenly, for no reason at all, a large cordon of bullying police marched into Haymarket Square, led by Inspector Bonfield, the biggest bully of the lot. They ordered the already dispersed meeting to disperse—police logic. A bomb was exploded, and one policeman was killed. The police immediately opened fire on the crowd, killing and wounding many. They rounded up scores, and eight men who had nothing to do with the bomb explosion stood trial—more police logic.

The eight who were tried faced a jury made up of men who admitted hostility and prejudice toward the accused. It was not by chance that stockholders, editors and printers of two "anarchist" papers in Chicago were chosen to be the victims. The capitalist press was yelling for blood, and unthinking innocents were echoing the cry. The prisoners were "anarchists!" That was enough! It was not a trial; it was a mass crucifixion. Four were hanged, one took his own life, two drew life sentences and the other fifteen years in prison.

No better evidence of persecution will be found than the very words of Judge Gary who presided: "The conviction has not gone on the ground that they did actually have any personal participation in the particular act which caused the death of Deagan." Some of the accused were writers, and because of that advice, and influenced by that advice somebody, not known, did throw the bomb that caused Deagan's death." Capitalist justice!

Roosevelt Closes His Third Year with New Deal at Low Ebb

Capitalists Desert 'Savior' As Crisis Clouds Lift

By JOHN WEST

In 1932 Roosevelt was swept stormily into office on a broad wave of middle-class bewilderment, working class and farmer resentment, and bourgeois fear. The curve of the business cycle was close to its very bottom, on the downswing of the mightiest depression the United States had yet experienced. Finance-capital itself was worried. The "orthodox" solutions, administered governmentally by Hoover, had got nowhere. The curve continued down. The middle classes, fluttering tremulously, saw no out. Faced with increasing impoverishment, proletarianization, and outright unemployment, they were losing all confidence in their former gods, the big industrialists and bankers. The farmers were crushed by mortgages, taxes, and low prices. The workers were decimated by unemployment without adequate relief, by sharply decreased wages and part-time jobs. The entire population was looking for a savior. Roosevelt pranced into the arena, with the banner of the New Era flung high. He offered himself to the people as their needed savior. His powerful demagoguery rolled out denunciations of the Tories and the money-changers. A new type of life was to be brought to America—freed from the domination of greed and private selfishness. The Forgotten Man was to become the basis of the new social order.

Savior of Capitalism

Now it is true that Roosevelt came into office in a sense as a savior: precisely as the savior of the capitalist order in the United States, as a stop-gap to tide over U. S. capitalism in a dark hour, as a channel to turn aside mass discontent from any development toward genuine social change. But, naturally, to accomplish these ends, Roosevelt could not appear in his actual economic role. The psychological and political requirements had also to be met. And to meet them, his program had to embody the half-formed dreams especially of the middle classes, and even, though to a lesser extent, of labor. This, then, was the material of the New Deal: in economic substance, a series of mostly temporary measures designed to help pull the business cycle out of the hole; in psychological and political form, a group of vague but inspiring generalities constructed to rally behind the Administration all who were bewildered, confused, and resentful.

There was, thus, little systematic opposition to the New Deal in its first period. Big business was scared, and needed the help of the Administration. The middle classes were full of hope. The farmers were encouraged by preparations for commodity inflation and direct governmental subsidy. Labor, not thinking in terms of class issues, was willing to follow its official leaders in welcoming the savior. The New Deal did its work. It is of course impossible to estimate exactly how great a part the New Deal policies played, over and above the normal economic developments, in getting the business cycle out of the basement. But on any account the part was considerable—was, indeed, unprecedented for this country. Without Roosevelt's handling of the banks at the outset, it is probable that the "banking holiday" would have precipitated a most severe financial crisis. The inflationary measures helped the farmers and exporters directly and immediately, loosened up purchasing, and helped check bankruptcies. The NRA provisions added the big corporations in putting some halt to the chaotic and destructive price-cutting, which was endangering the entire price and credit structure. The outlay of government funds through unemployment relief, the AAA, the various work relief agencies, loans of all kinds, etc., undoubtedly did a fair amount of the "pump priming" which the Administration promised. Section 7a, and a judicious combination of government arbitration boards with tear gas, managed to choke off two potentially major strike waves, and to "keep labor in its place."

The New 'Prosperity'

Two minor upturns in the business cycle, during 1933 and 1934, have now been followed by a more considerable rise beginning in the early spring of this year. The dominant internal factor at present is the continuance of this new drift toward "prosperity." It is a very peculiar prosperity indeed. Hardly a dent has been made in unemployment, particularly if we take into account the youth who have come to working age during the past six years. Though factory payrolls are considerably increased, real wages of factory workers generally are still far below the 1928 level, and in many industries close to the crisis low. The professional workers and recent college graduates have an enormous percentage of unemployment and a great lowering of living conditions where employed. The farm laborers, sharecroppers, and poor farmers continue in desperate straits. But the stock market has been steadily booming. Bonuses for executives have come back. A large number of independent as well as landlord and capitalist farmers have more money with the help of mortgage moratoriums, AAA benefits, and a combination of high prices and good crops during the current season (a combination resulting in part from inflation, in part from last year's drought). Chemicals, autos, munitions, steel, agricultural equipment, are forging ahead. Above all, corporation profits have mounted amazingly, each week bringing out new records since 1931 or 1930, and in some instances for all time.

Big Business Clamps Down

But what this means, from the point of view of finance-capital, is that the New Deal has served its purpose. With profits again rolling in, no need for any more nonsense about the Forgotten Man and a new social order. And no more extravagant governmental spending, with its necessary threat of either uncontrolled inflation or increased taxation. And no more playing around with "concessions" to the workers and the unemployed. And an end to this talk about Tories and money-changers, these slanderous attacks on American ideals, on the utilities and the banks and the Stock Exchange. Time to get down to real business again. It is all well and good to maneuver and talk and even accept certain devious methods and uncomfortable restrictions when things are on the edge of the abyss. But now that we have again picked up the scent of profits, away with this doll-playing and back to the high-road of true Americanism.

Thus has big business reasoned more and more openly during the past year and a half. And in the light of this reasoning, the campaign against the New Deal has taken form. The Chambers of Commerce throughout the land ring again with the old slogans. The editorials in the powerful newspapers denounce, deplore, and pile up the phrases about the Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini and anti-Christ in the White House. Finance-capital comes again out of its lair; its limbs rejuvenated with the blood of profits, it roars once more with its lion voice. It smashes head on into the New Deal legislation through its courts; and where the courts have not acted, it goes its own way in open defiance. And what a sham the battle is at heart! Who is this redoubtable enemy of theirs? What is his reply? We read it day by day. Roosevelt promises a "breathing spell." He sends out Roper to glorify capitalism. He promises the bankers fullest cooperation. He pleads with big business, through the Administration press agents and the pro-

Administration newspapers: "What have you boys against me? Haven't I brought back your profits, kept labor in check, done all you asked of me?" He promises to stop the mole, to reduce the deficit next year to $500,000,000 and the year after to bring the budget into balance. He is the injured servant, who has given his all to his master, only to be thrust out into the cold.

Only Privileged Few Benefit from New «Prosperity»

Meanwhile, in a half-hearted way, he continues his play for middle-class support by talking about the utilities and social security; and now by appealing to pacifist illusions in neutrality measures. But, alas, the middle classes no longer listen so readily. The middle classes always jump toward what looks at the moment like the winning side. With finance-capital again roaring, their depressed confidence again revives. It looks to them as if the big shots were right after all; and in any case only they seem to know their own minds. Ironically, every step forward toward "prosperity" loses for Roosevelt middle class support. If you can have the old-fashioned prosperity again, reasons the middle class, let's let it be run by its authentic representative, by the bankers and the old-fashioned Grand Old Party. Besides, what has Roosevelt done that he promised? No, we will return to the former gods, and sign up at the Chamber of Commerce.

A thankless task, indeed, this job of political dish-washer for finance-capital. But times do not exactly return, and 1935 is not nor can be 1929. The Chambers of Commerce overplay their hand. The farmers remain in the majority behind Roosevelt. The industrialists in the unioned industries stay with him. The middle class liberals have given up the Tories for good. And labor and the unemployed, for all their disillusionment with the shattered New Deal, are not now willing to go back quite as far as the rugged individualists, whose only tangible promises are a balanced budget, a smashing of independent unionism, and a cutting of relief. Thus Roosevelt can in all probability still be re-elected next year, unless major economic and social alterations meanwhile intervene.

But Roosevelt's victory taken in itself would not be the significant social symptom which it might seem—would not, for example, at all be a "vindication for the New Deal." The real cleavages begin to take form beneath the public surface.

The masses have learned far more from three years of Roosevelt than from the depths of the Hoover crisis. Labor and the unemployed are beginning to realize more clearly than ever before in U. S. history that the 1936 choice, between finance-capital open and undisguised and finance-capital with a decoration of appealing phrases, is for them no choice at all. They begin to understand that the present upturn in business will necessarily be short-lived, and will in any case and however far it goes be of little benefit to them. They begin to move toward consciousness of class issues.

Growing Sentiment for Class Action

Already this is apparent in the "third-party" sentiment, in the strength of local Farmer-Labor organizations (as in Minnesota), in the Labor party demands appearing within the A. F. of L., and especially in the growing sentiment among the rank and file workers everywhere to settle issues by direct class action, without parliamentary intervention—a sentiment clearly reflected in the stormy A. F. of L. convention. Roosevelt seems to have retained enough of his demagoguery to head this off from national expression in the 1936 campaign, but this can prove only a temporary diversion.

In the meantime, the energies of the far-sighted among the bourgeoisie itself, and of the reformists and betrayers within the working class, are being bent to make sure that this awakening consciousness of class needs and class issues is directed into safe channels. Labor fakery, Socialists, Stalinists, Love-stones and liberals alike try to move it toward a "sane" third party, toward a Labor or Farmer-Labor or People's Party. Thus would it be able to avoid direct attack against capital. The central effort of the revolutionists must be to give this consciousness its authentic expression, to lead it toward the sole historical embodiment of its genuine meaning and the actual needs which it reflects: the revolutionary program and the revolutionary party.

Peoples' Front Cracks In Cabinet Crisis

hanging far out on a lonely limb. The best they can now propose is the substitution for Laval—of a workers' and peasants' government?—no, of Joseph Paul-Boncour or of Theodore Steeg or Laurent Bonnevay or another one of that old school of hardened reactionary politicians at the head of a new coalition of Republican-Radical coalition! In other words, the substitution of a French von Papen for the French Bruening.

Should the turn of the debate result by any chance in the downfall of Laval another "good Republican" will follow him to continue the Bonapartist regime which is rapidly clearing the road for the Fascist Croix de Feu.

The Front Populaire, cracked wide open, offers no other perspective. The working class parties have thrown their fate into the lap of Herriot and now that the "leftist" Herriot has failed they've moved farther up the line to a Boncour! Anything, anybody but the struggle for workers' power. Not the workers, but Herriot or Boncour or somebody like them must get in to disarm the Fascists.

The Fascist Croix de Feu, armed and ready to seize power, looks with contempt on the proceedings in the Bourbon Palace. It jeers at the solemn insistence of Radical, Socialist and Communist deputies that Pierre Laval, their Bonapartist friend, dissolve the Fascist leagues and disarm them. The Croix de Feu is contemptuous because it knows that France's political crisis will be solved not from the tribunes of the Chamber but on the streets, arms in hand.

It jeers because it knows that neither Laval nor any Bonapartist successor to Laval can really dissolve or disarm it—any more than von Papen could dissolve the Nazi storm troopers.

It jeers because it sees its Socialist and Communist opponents concerning themselves alone with the struggle on the parliamentary scene—with shadow boxing which will disappear when the glare of the real class struggle is turned full force upon it.

Herriot started the defection from the People's Front last week and within the past few days—the rise of the discount rate to 6 per cent and the spectre of devaluation and inflation—turned the defection into a stampede.

During the last five days the whole French crisis reduced itself for these pitiful parliamentarians, Herriot-Blum-Cachin and Co., into whether they should let Laval introduce his budget first or whether they should insist on having their demand for dissolution of the Fascist leagues take precedence over all other issues!

Faced with the flight of the Radicals—and who but Cachin and his Stalinist confreres expected anything else?—the Socialists in turn grew frightened. And if Blum got scared—Cachin has been flirting with Hitler! The "differences" among the three groups were brought out in the meetings of the Delegation of Lefts, i.e., the Radical, Socialist and Stalinist members of the Chamber early in the week.

The Radicals got Laval's promise that he would discuss dissolution of the leagues after they helped him put his budget across. That was enough for them. They voted to support Laval's motion on the agenda.

Tweedledum for Tweedledee

Blum and the other Socialist deputies, for whom the whole fight against Fascism consists in having Laval, or somebody like him, "dissolve" the Fascist organizations, discussed the advisability of forcing the downfall of Laval on some technicality of procedure and substituting—what? A government headed by Bonnevey, Steeg or Joseph Paul-Boncour—any one of them, according to Blum, "a leader known for his Republican convictions." The function of this government, according to Blum would be to "dissolve the Leagues, dissolve Parliament, call new elections and ensure law and order during the campaign."

In other words, the Blum perspective is to provide, in the event that Laval should fall, for a Laval counterpart. For this any of the old-school bourgeois politicians mentioned, Bonnevey, Steeg or Paul-Boncour would amply suffice.

Where Are the 'Valiant' Radicals?

According to the Daily Worker for Nov. 26, the question is: "Shall Laval be overthrown today or has the situation not sufficiently matured? If the Laval government is overthrown, what shall take its place, a People's Front or a Radical Socialist government?" The issue of the fight against Fascism, it seems, depends entirely upon the stalwart action of—the Delegation of Lefts!—and in the final analysis—upon a bourgeois government!

But our Daily Worker writer, who says that a People's Front government would have to be a government of real struggle (sic!) but that the Socialist leaders "do not yet appear prepared" for such a struggle, has not followed his newspapers carefully enough. Cachin, Thorez, Duclos and Co. decided three weeks ago that a government of the Front Populaire at this juncture "could not be seriously envisaged." (Humanite, Nov. 11.) What do they offer in its stead? "A government of the left to replace Laval." A Radical Socialist government, in other words.

Auto Strike Impends!

dary. A great portion of the machinery of the Chevrolet plant has been moved to Saginaw, Mich. and Muncie, Ind., as was predicted in the NEW MILITANT during the April strike. Toledo is no longer in the key position with regards to the manufacture of transmissions that it held at the time of the last Chevrolet strike. The Saginaw and Muncie plants are completely unorganized. Dillon has no intentions of organizing these plants. The Cleveland Fisher Body union is in a weaker position than it was during the last strike. Norwood, still strong, is only an assembly plant.

Good Time for Strike

General Motors is now deliberately playing its cards, one by one. It is obvious, that what is involved here, is a carefully thought out, carefully prepared plan, to smash the Chevrolet union in Toledo.

There are many factors, however, which make objective conditions in this battle with General Motors even more favorable today than at the time of the last strike. First, this is the beginning of the season, and the automobile industry is experiencing its biggest boom since the golden days of 1929. The Muncie and Saginaw plants can be organized rapidly in the fire attack, through a swift, sharp battle of the flying squadrons. Detroit was moribund at the time of the last strike. Today it is beginning to feel again the first flush of returning confidence. If Toledo, with its great prestige, would give the lead in battle, the Detroit workers, filled with accumulated bitterness and dissatisfaction, might rise up again in a strike that would eclipse the battles of late 1933.

M.E.S.A. Strike in Toledo

The strike called by the M.E.S.A. at the Mather Spring Co. of Toledo entering into its third week. The plant remains shut tight as a drum. After a flat refusal to conduct any negotiations with the men, as "they did not contemplate any reopening of the plant," the management has finally seen the light and consented to meet with the union representatives. The celebrated Toledo Peace Board, set up by McGrady, which was supposed to avert industrial strife in Toledo and was heralded throughout the country as an example to be followed in all other cities, has failed to make one step during the entire three weeks of the strike. Only when the local threatened to spread the strike and the Chevrolet situation was coming to a head did they finally make a move to bring the management to negotiate with the men.

ers arrested. The pickets jeered and swore. They shouted their right to picket.

Children Gassed

Flower replied by ordering his thugs to advance in military array—most of them were veterans. When they approached the picket line, Flower called for them to fire point blank with their tear gas guns. Five workers fell stunned. The thugs leaped to club the blind workers. Twenty workers succumbed under the brutal attack. A crippled girl, going home for lunch from school, screamed in terror as tear gas scorched her. Three children, not over 10 years old, shrieked as gas shells broke a window in their home and narrowly missed them. A picket, defying the clubs, rushed to the house and carried them out.

An intermittent battle raged all day. The workers reformed their lines constantly, using coal and bricks to retaliate against the attacks. Word spread through the county of the terror. Workers came from Akron and elsewhere to reinforce the picket lines. Barri-cades were built, torn down, and rebuilt.

Union leaders called a mass meeting to protest the brutalities. All the strikers and 1,000 sympathizers attended while over 2,000 workers and sympathizers remained on the picket line.

Alarmed by the growing strength of the workers, the thugs frantically fired more tear gas as night began to creep over the battle ground.

Tide Turns

A strong wind blowing from the plant towards the pickets shifted. It carried the tear gas fumes back into the factory. Soon the thugs and scabs were gasping for air and retreating.

Three main streams of pickets advanced towards the plant, concealing their movements by first busting the glaring searchlight. A steady battery of rocks answered the thugs. The pickets met the clubs of the thugs in a fierce hand-to-hand battle without flinching. The mighty fist of labor crashed through the gangsterdom of the thugs. The gate-house, main stronghold of the enemy, was seized. Scabs rushed out with a fire hose but the workers brushed them aside. They started towards the plant entrance itself to clean it of scabs, but the wind died down. It took over 150 rounds of tear gas and plenty of re-inforcements for the frightened thugs to keep the plant from being demolished. Even so, the front wall was badly damaged and every window broken.

A solid barricade was built of huge cement blocks and the workers prepared for another attack. When word of the battle reached the mass meeting, it aroused the workers to a fever pitch of indignation against the company. Speaker after speaker told of the terror, women who were hurt demanded that their husbands protect them from the thugs. "No more tear gas or clubs. Disarm the thugs," the workers cried in the meeting. "We want a general strike to defeat the company!" they cried. A committee representing 25 unions was formed to consider and plan the walkout.

The Chamber of Commerce became frightened. It called two preachers and other "impartial" citizens to see what could be done to pacify the workers. This "citizens' committee" called for a truce. Union leaders, worn out from the terrific struggle, their workers tear-gassed, clubbed and exhausted, agreed on condition that nothing come in or out of the plant and that the thugs stay within the plant. No attacks on the picket line would be tolerated. Such provocation would immediately bring a general strike, the union leaders said. During the truce period the company refused to discuss even the critical situation. They spurned humble efforts of a federal conciliator who wanted to "ease the situation" by "compromising" the difference; in other words, making a sell-out agreement and trying to fool the workers into acceptance. Resentment against the company grew as truce expiration time drew near. The "citizens' committee" begged the union leaders to continue it for another 48 hours. They replied they'd present it to a mass meeting Saturday night.

CLU. Promises Walkout The workers, 1,000 strong at the meeting, thundered NO. Call the general strike, they shouted, unless the scabs are removed and the plant closed. We'll go in and take them out ourselves if the sheriff doesn't, voices added. The union leaders looked for Flower. He played hide-and-seek until midnight, and then told them he couldn't do anything. He said this after the disgusted workers left the meeting.

Sunday brought a formal vote by the Central Labor Union for a general strike, to be called anytime needed to aid the strikers. In particular by Monday night, when the truce again expired, if the plant wasn't closed. As the picket line began to grow into the hundreds again today, the sheriff, realizing he was licked, withdrew the scabs and ordered the plant shut.

But the company doesn't like this. If Flower can't break the strike for them, they think the National Guard can. So they conferred with an "observer" from Adj. General Marx's office in Columbus, late today.

Workers Celebrate

Tonight 5,000 workers paraded in a "victory" march over the closing of the plant. A huge mass meeting followed with all organized labor in this district represented and pledging solidarity.

The workers know from the Toledo Auto-Lite strike that the National Guard can be defeated. They confidently face tomorrow, in one powerful united front against the Duponts and their tools, be they thugs or the National Guard. It will take every repressive measure possible under capitalism to keep the workers from victory on the picket line and they know it.

The workers aren't so sure of themselves, however, around the conference table surrounded by Edw. McGrady and other smooth-tongued federal conciliators whose treacherous moves can change a victory into a compromise. But the workers are learning and if McGrady comes here, they will be forewarned against him.

All Unions Involved

One thing is positively certain and realized by every adult in this town of 25,000. There is only one main issue in the strike: "The company is trying to bust the union and then the other unions will also be demolished."

Last year the Mellon-controlled Columbia Chemical Co. officials tried to smash the union here. A picket line of 5,000 workers from Akron and elsewhere brought this company to its knees and the union gained its demands and its leaders were given their jobs back.

Now the Duponts are trying the same stunt. "But we know that a solid front against the capitalists can't be broken and we'll win this strike," a union leader said. . . . And so far it looks that way.

Thomas Leads Break with Old Guard as NY Socialist Party Splits

Danger of Patch-up with Right Wing Is Still Great

The struggle for supremacy within the Socialist Party between the Old Guard and the Thomas-Hoan-Militant coalition reached the stage of open split in New York City this week.

When the Militants' proposal to reconsider the motion of the Old Guard to expel "the Left Wing" and reorganize local New York under their control was defeated at the meeting of the City Central Committee meeting last Wednesday, forty-seven delegates from thirty-six Militant-led branches quit the meeting and proceeded immediately to constitute themselves the official City Central Committee of the party.

The two City Centrals have since been hurling statements and counter-statements at each other. In a letter to S. P. members, the Militants charged Waldman, Oneal, Gerber, and Lee with being "party-wreckers and breeders of disunity" and gave a list of their anti-working class actions, ranging from protection of Harry Lang, Cahan and Hearst's anti-Soviet penman, to "condoning corruption by Socialist trade unions and permitting persons found guilty of misconduct in their unions to remain members of the party."

Statements Fly

The Old Guard answered that the action of the Militants was "a secessionist movement" of a minority; that the newly-formed committee was an outlaw organization; and that "the break between the Socialist Party and the Left Wing group has taken place over the resistance of the party to the attempt to impose upon it by these Left Wing elements of three doctrines—dictatorship, advocacy of insurrection and violence, and united front with the Communists—doctrines which are not acceptable to Socialists."

The Militants replied that "It is indeed because this group is loyal to Socialist principles, one of the chief of which is inner party democracy, that it was forced to take such steps as would safeguard the Party from Old Guard maneuvers."

Both groups held rival meetings last Sunday night. The Militants' meeting, held at Irving Plaza, was attended by about 1,200 people. Three significant announcements were made. The first was a wire from Norman Thomas pledging support to the Militants and breathing defiance against the Old Guard. "We are not splitting the party," said Thomas. "We are saving it from petty tyrants. We are not denying democracy; we are saving it from lawless dictation of the Old Guard-Forward coalition. The position of these party-wreckers is clear. They are trying vainly to tear down a party they can no longer control. They support the New Leader which has slandered the party, and seek to ruin the Socialist Call, which has fought for it. They are capable of reacting only to hate of Communism and fear of losing their control in the party. They have lost their capacity to hate and fight the exploitation of capitalism. Their record has been a grievous burden for socialism to carry."

N.E.C. to Send Delegation

The second was the announcement by Jack Altman, Militant leader and temporary secretary of the new City Central Committee, that the Militants planned to hold a state convention of the party in Utica on December 27 and 28. The third was a letter from the National Executive Committee of the S. P., signed by National Chairman Leo Kryzcki, stating that it would send an official delegation to the Utica convention, consisting of Kryzcki, Darlington Hoopes, Clarence Senior, National Secretary, Thomas, and Oneal, Old Guard leader. It also stated that the decision had been approved by Hoan.

The Old Guard at the Rand School did nothing more than stand pat in repeating accusations of split against the Militants. Old Guard supporters passed resolutions supporting the old Central Committee; condemning the "bolters"; and welcoming efforts to heal the party split "provided all doctrines of dictatorship and violence were repudiated" by the Militants. Solomon criticized Thomas for having ceased to become the leader of the party in order to become "the Herbert Hoover has come out of his hole and is making snappy speeches. In itself this is an indication of how many years we are removed, psychologically and politically speaking, from March 4, 1933. More substantial evidence to the same effect has been given by the annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers held in New York last week and the pathetic attempt of Major George L. Berry, formerly president of the Printing Pressmen's Union, and now Coordinator for Industrial Cooperation (in effect head of what is left of the NRA) to stage one of those immense get-togethers of labor and industry out of which Hugh Johnson and his aids made such gaudy shows in the summer and fall of that year—in the age of the honeymoon of the New Deal and the ascendancy of the Blue Eagle.

The bankers and industrialists who in 1933 were being told that they were going to be "driven out of the temple," who in chastened mood urged the government to come to their aid and accepted, not without some reluctance, it is true, some items of labor legislation, are now again fully on the offensive. Mr. Clinton L. Bardo, president of the N.A.M., pointed in his opening address with pathos and feeling to the ignominious position in which employers found themselves until recently: "For the past two years industry has been driven into the cyclone cellar and the normal problems of depression have been magnified many times by a deliberate and well-timed rapid fire and devastating attack by economic crackpots, social-reformers, labor demagogues and political racketeers."

Six YCLers Join SYL

Symptoms of Ferment Over New Turn To Betrayal

Symptomatic of the ferment in the Young Communist League is the expulsion of six members of the Y.C.L. and Communist Party. These comrades were expelled in recent weeks in New York for criticizing the policies of the Communist Party and defending the views of Marxism.

They are among the dozens expelled in recent months from the Stalinist organizations for revolutionary criticism, a number of whom joined the S.Y.L. and the W.P. Only recently over half a dozen leaders among the New York Scandinavian workers were expelled from the C. P. for "Trotskyism" (!). Others in the Y.C.L. who question the recent turn towards "a broad non-party youth organization" and social-patriotism have likewise been expelled or "dropped for Trotskyism."

The Spartacus Youth League has covered open Y.C.L. meetings with its literature and speakers. Recently, a four page leaflet was issued by the Chicago S.Y.L. to the meeting held in that city. In New York, in addition to the large district meeting covered, sectional meetings in Manhattan and Harlem have already been covered. Last Sunday evening four members of the S.Y.L., including one of the expelled, spoke at the East Side meeting of the Y.C.L. The following evening a Spartacus presented a criticism of the Y.C.L. turn at the Harlem Y.C.L. meeting. The expelled are: Ethel Winston, Sec. 22; Louis Mednick, Sec. 22; Nat Herman, and Jerry King, Sec. 15; E. Wexler, Sec. 17; W. Levitsky, Sec. 8.

Japs Snatch North China; Put Screws on Chiang Gov't

By LO SEN

Japanese imperialism gave another twist this week to the screws it holds around China. Under Japanese military auspices an "autonomous" state was set up in Eastern Hopei on Nov. 24. Three days later Japanese troops took over control of all railways in North China. Japanese troop trains moving down across the Manchukuo border brought more than 10,000 troops into Tientsin where they are being held in readiness for action in North China should such action prove necessary.

The provinces of North China are in the process of being added to Manchuria and Jehol to swell the boundaries of the Japanese Empire on Continental Asia. This process of addition is taking place not in the swift, surgical manner that characterized the previous conquests but in a slower fashion attended by the presence of greater international complicating factors and the desire of Japan to avoid, if possible, the expense of military action.

Tremendous pressure is being brought to bear by Japanese military authorities on the Chinese generals in the North to declare a species of "autonomy" to provide the cloak of respectability for Japanese control.

In this situation the Kuomintang regime has been trying to squirm its way into a settlement which will avoid military conflict by giving Japan what is wanted and at the same time preserve the nominal shreds of Chinese sovereignty in the North.

Japanese military moves in the North during the past ten days have been meant to serve eloquent notice on the Nanking government that equivocation or evasion have limited. Press reports of the past week have contained seeming contradictions—some alleging that Nanking is preparing to oppose Japan, others indicating continued surrender to Japanese pressure by Chiang Kai-shek. These contradictions have a logic of their own—for the Nanking government and the bourgeoisie it represents are between the tightening clamps of a dilemma from which there seems no way out—along a bourgeois road.

Complete Japanese imperialism control of China means the final extinction of any hopes for independent bourgeois development, even if limited. The Chinese bourgeoisie has been unable to resist Japanese imperialism because to do so it would have had to run the danger of rousing the people in a national war. To do this would amount to the signing of its own death warrant.

It could only hope for the active aid of some more "benevolent" imperialism, the British or the American for example, to take up the cudgels against Japan. From such a struggle the Chinese bourgeoisie might hope for a crumb. But in these past four years Japanese imperialism has been able to proceed practically without hindrance. Not the least reason for this is the fact that Anglo-American antagonisms have prevented their cooperation in the East—and in addition, what countries hoped the U.S.S.R. would break its back in a struggle with Japan.

As a result of this conjuncture of circumstances Japan has advanced unopposed and carved for itself an enormous empire on continental Asia. In this the bourgeoisie has cooperated by suppressing the mass movement. There is a section of the Chinese bourgeoisie, however, which has never given up hope of getting the imperialist aid it needs to oppose Japan, in whom it sees its nemesis. That section it is

Committees of Action---Not Peoples Front

By LEON TROTSKY

"The Peoples Front" represents the coalition of the proletariat with the imperialist bourgeoisie, in the shape of the Radical party and smaller tripe of the same sort. The coalition extends both to the parliamentary and the extra-parliamentary spheres. In both spheres the Radical party preserving for itself complete freedom of action coarsely imposes restrictions upon the freedom of action of the proletariat. The Radical party itself is undergoing decay. Each new election gives added proof of the passage of supporters away from it to the right and to the left. On the other hand, the Socialist and Communist parties—because of the absence of a genuinely revolutionary party—are growing stronger. The general trend of the toiling masses, including the petty bourgeoisie, is quite clearly to the left. The orientation of the leaders of the workers' parties is no less self-evident: to the right. At the time when the masses by their votes and in their struggle seek to cast off the party of the Radicals, the leaders of the united front, on the contrary, seek to save it. After obtaining the confidence of the masses of workers on the basis of a "socialist" program, the leaders of the workers' parties then proceeded to concede voluntarily a lion's share of this confidence to the Radicals, in whom the masses of workers have absolutely no confidence.

Radicals Dominate Peoples Front

"The Peoples Front" in its present guise, shamelessly tramples not only upon workers' democracy but also upon formal i.e. bourgeois democracy. The majority of the Radical voters do not participate in the struggle of the toilers and consequently in the Peoples Front. Yet the Radical party occupies in this Front not only an equal but a privileged position; the workers' parties are compelled to restrict their activity to the program of the Radical party. This idea is most outspokenly advanced by the cynics of Humanism! The latest elections to the Senate have illuminated with especial clarity the privileged position of the Radicals in the Peoples Front. The leaders of the Communist party boasted openly of the fact that they renounced in favor of non-proletarian parties several mandates which justly belonged to the workers. This merely means that the united front re-established in part the property qualification in favor of the bourgeoisie.

The "Front," as it is conceived, is an organization for a direct and immediate struggle. When struggle is in question, every worker is worth ten bourgeois, even those adhering to the united front. From the standpoint of the revolutionary fighting strength of the Front, the electoral privileges should have been given not to Radical bourgeois but to workers. But in essence, privileges are uncalled for here. Is the Peoples Front intended for defense of "democracy"? Then let it begin by applying it to its own ranks. This means: the leadership of the Peoples Front must be the direct and immediate reflection of the will of the struggling masses.

The Committees of Action

How? Very simply: through elections. The proletariat does not deny any one the right to struggle side by side with it against Fascism, the Bonapartist government of Laval, the war plot of the imperialists, and all other forms of oppression and violence. The sole demand that class conscious workers put to their actual or potential allies is that they struggle in action. Every group of the population really participating in the struggle at a given stage and ready to submit to common discipline must have the equal right to exert influence on the leadership of the Peoples Front.

Each 200, 500, or thousand citizens adhering in a given city, district, factory, barracks and village to the Peoples Front should in time of fighting actions elect their representative to the local committee of action. All the participants in the struggle are bound by its discipline.

HERNDON FREED

Answer the Fascist War Mongers; All out Dec. 14!

New York anti-Fascists are called upon to demonstrate before Madison Square Garden Saturday, Dec. 14 at 7 P.M. against the openly-proclaimed threat of Mussolini's American agents to arouse sympathy for his highway-robbery in Ethiopia and to terrorize all Italo-American and American opponents of the Italian Fascist murder regime.

This demonstration is being organized by the Italian-American Committee Against War and Fascism, a united front body. The Workers Party is participating in the demonstration and all its members are requested to be there.

Following are excerpts from the leaflet issued by the committee which gives more detailed information.

"The Italian Fascists are going to meet in Madison Square Garden this Saturday night, Dec. 14 for the purpose of glorifying Mussolini's aggression of Ethiopia and to raise funds to enable the Black Shirt hordes to deprive the peaceful Ethiopians of their independence."

"High American officials, such as Supreme Court Justices Salvatore Cotillo, Ferdinand Pecora, General Sessions Justice John Freeschi and others, are to be found among those who will 'Hell' tyrant Mussolini in Madison Square Garden."

"This Fascist rally was decided upon at a dinner in the Ricciardi Italian Restaurant, on the evening of Friday, Nov. 15, 1935."

"Supreme Court Justices Salvatore Cotillo and Ferdinand Pecora participated."

"The purpose of the Madison Square Garden rally, as the Fascist daily 'Il Progresso ItaloAmericano' informed us in its issue of Nov. 17 is as follows:

"To once more demonstrate that the hearts of the Italo-Americans beat with the heart of the far away Motherland and that each and every national who resides in this Motherland of adoption is ready to give all within his power to help Italy fight the brutal International Coalition led by England with the utmost resistance and give a chance to the Italian soldiers who are now in Africa to write another epic page of glory in the history of civilization."

"The Fascist sheet further stated:

"When the Grand Officer of the Crown of Italy, Mr. Pope, began speaking to explain the purpose of this gathering, the throng which packed the Hall of Ricciardi's Restaurant, which was decorated with flags of the two Nations, the colors which are in the heart of every Italo-American, an impetuous and lasting applause broke out. This stirring applause manifested the spontaneous promise of those present to enthusiastically contribute to the success of the Madison Square Rally, which also must be a warning to those who want to deny Italy her holy and sacred right to live. It must also serve to show that the five million Italian Americans who live in the United States are ready to sacrifice themselves on the altar of their great Motherland and will respond as the Consul General has said with a tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye."

Everybody out—
Give the Fascist vermin the answer they deserve.

Yipsels Unite With Spartacus Find One Scab Truck in Mpls

By ART PREIS

TOLEDO, Ohio—The youth section of the local Stalinists succeeded in capturing themselves and several Y.W.C.A. secretaries at the Toledo Youth Congress held at the Central Labor Union Hall, Saturday afternoon, November 30. Going one better on the Elders of the Church (Stalinist), who held the fort at the recent American League Against War and Fascism conference, the fledglings succeeded in preventing entirely any discussion on the war and sanctions question, which had been introduced into the conference by a joint resolution against support of imperialist governments and their sanctions submitted by the Young Peoples Socialist League and Spartacus Youth League.

Highly advertised and ballyhooed, the conference began on the evening of November 29, with a meeting at the Civic Auditorium featuring a symposium of representatives of the Republican, Democratic, Socialist and Communist Parties on "What Our Party Offers American Youth." For over three hours, the 300 of the faithful who lost themselves in the echoing vastness of the huge auditorium were drenched by the greatest outpouring of reactionary balderdash ever spewed over a helpless audience, saved only by the forthright utterances of Ben Fisher, national secretary of the Yipsels, who openly denounced the chauvinist policies of the Stalinists and attacked the support of sanctions and one's own imperialist government in a war crisis.

The Minimum Is Zero

William Weststone, who represented the Stalinists in the Symposium, completely skirted the entire war question, ducked the direct challenge of Fisher on the C. P. position on sanctions, and confined the greater portion of his remarks to sugary sentimental plea for organic unity between the Socialists and Stalinists. Waldo McNutt, Chairman of the American Youth Congress, one of the two main speakers on the program, distinguished himself in his remarks by declaring the purpose of the Congress to be "the untiring of the youth on a minimum program on which everyone could agree." Everyone agreed on the minimum

On Wednesday, it suddenly became known that several Strutwear stock holders on Nov. 7 had incorporated the "Peacock Knitting Co."

In St. Joseph, Mo. It developed that the Peacock Company had a chattel mortgage on some Strutwear merchandise and machinery, and that a writ of replevin had been issued to recover some $5,000 worth of these goods. U. S. Marshall John J. Farrell takes the dirty job of getting the goods through the picket lines, threatening pickets with "a long stay at Leavenworth."

At a meeting attended by the executive boards of Local 574, the Central Labor Union and the striking hosier workers, AND Meyer Lewis, it became known that Meyer Lewis didn't have one single thing to suggest to stop the federal government's attempt to hurt the strike. Lewis left, after being told, "Well, you're no damned good around here." The three bodies then issued a statement to the press, pledging support to the strike and attacking this latest strikebreaking move.

Local 574 halted the first attempts to move Strutwear goods by threatening strikes at any transfer firm that dares to offer help to the federal government. Several transfer firms who had originally come forward, backed down immediately. Skellett tried to bluff, and a strike now has him tied up. The strikers are asking a new seniority list, that two flunks be fired, and that they get full pay for the time they are out on strike.

After failing to be able to hire any trucks in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Hopkins, St. Cloud, etc., the Strutwear officials and their government marshall finally got trucks from Winona, Minn., who did the moving Friday and Saturday, after being stoned repeatedly. Scores of windows in the Strutwear plant were broken by pickets. One picket, Alfred Russell, was arrested Friday and is being held incommunicado. He was taking pictures of the police and the plant.

The Central Labor Union pledged to call a city-wide mass meeting in support of the Strutwear strike.

Mass Pressure Forces Release of Class War Prisoner

Confronted by a tidal wave of mass protest which has been mounting ever since the formation of the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense ended Angelo Herndon's isolation from the broad labor and radical movements, the State of Georgia has executed its first retreat since the struggle began three years ago.

Judge Hugh M. Dorsey of Atlanta has declared unconstitutional the 1866 "slave insurrection" law, under which Herndon was sentenced to an 18-20 year term on the chain gang. Herndon is now in New York, under $8,000 bail.

The state of Georgia has until Dec. 27 to appeal from Dorsey to the state Supreme Court. If it does not appeal, or if it loses its appeal, the law will be a dead letter, Herndon will be unconditionally free, and indictments now standing against 18 other workers will be null and void.

If the state does appeal, and if the Georgia Supreme Court declares the law to be constitutional, the defense will take the issue back to the U. S. Supreme Court, which twice before refused on technical grounds to hear an appeal. Unquestionably, the defense would be much stronger in legal ammunition this time. It will also be stronger in its mass backing, if every effort is made to build a militant movement not only to save Angelo Herndon, but also to establish the principles and rights involved in his fate.

Judge Dorsey's decision was by no means a concession of any rights or principles. He was forced to release Herndon because, in the face of growing mass pressure, neither the Talmadge faction nor the Roosevelt faction of Georgia politicians wants to go before the workers of the country to justify Herndon's conviction. At the same time, the Judge's decision, declaring the 1866 law to be "vague" in phraseology, suggests to the legislature how it can adopt a law under which any opponents of the existing Bourbon capitalist regime of Georgia could legally be sent to the chain gang.

Dorsey for Rigid Gag Law

In so doing, Dorsey is satisfying the demands of the Georgia ruling class. These were expressed at the recent hearing in Atlanta by County Solicitor Lecraw. He affirmed the need of silencing all radicals by court action now, in order to prevent the growth of militancy to a point where the capitalist forces would have to fight labor outside the courts.

Lecraw's argument was opposed by W. A. Sutherland, Atlanta attorney, who argued that the best way to preserve the existing economic order and the existing "good" relations between whites and negroes in Georgia is to allow a little freedom of speech. By suggesting a new water-tight gag law to the legislature Judge Dorsey shows that he did not take seriously the opportunity to "argue" of Sutherland.

What he did was to accept the scholarly, technical, legal contentions put forward by the New York state attorney, Whitney North Seymour, at the same hearing. The total political situation, measured in terms of the Talmadge-Roosevelt squabble for the title of "friend of the people," and in terms of the pressure organized by the Joint Committee, dictated to Dorsey the decision that Seymour was "correct" and Lecraw was "wrong" on technical points.

Pressure is not yet great enough, however, to "convince" him that there should be free speech in Georgia. He wants an iron-clad law to prevent it.

Herndon's return to New York was signaled by an ovation at the Pennsylvania Railroad Station. The Joint Committee, of which the Non Partisan Labor Defense is an active constituent, is planning a mass meeting on the case. Among the other defense bodies in the Joint Committee are the I. L. D., which controls the defense policy, as well as the L. L. D. and the GDC. Even if this struggle must go through more courts, victory can still be won by the presentation of able legal arguments and above all by a campaign of pressure based upon a broad appeal to militant principles.

The Future of the A. F. of L.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 28.—Comrade James P. Cannon spoke here before a group of more than a hundred workers on the subject of "The Future of the A. F. of L." Many in the audience had never before attended a Workers Party meeting. The gross receipts were more than twenty-five dollars.

Comrade Cannon began his talk by analyzing the historical essence of the A. F. of L. He showed how it had fulfilled the expectations of Mark Hanna, one of the founders of the Civic Federation, who called the A. F. of L. the "bulwark of American capitalism." He went on to point out how the events of the last two years had brought about significant changes which threatened the position of the A. F. of L. At San Francisco, two years ago, the A. F. of L. had been forced to give formal recognition to the principle of unionism. At Atlantic City there had been 11,000 votes for industrial unionism. And a mere speech by John Lewis, himself formerly a member of the Civic Federation, had sufficed to force the withdrawal of Matthew Woll from that organization.

"Into the Unions"

"The impulse of the masses, with the coming of the NRA had been 'into the unions.' The million workers could have been organized at that time. These workers longed for a union—the most elementary organization of the workers. Without a union, the workers felt, they have nothing. But the craft A. F. of L. unions came in between the workers and the employers and betrayed the interests of the workers. This happened all over the country. In Minneapolis, Tobin, President of the Drivers International, tried the same stunt. But he didn't succeed. Applause.)

"In Minneapolis, real organization survived as testimony of the real possibilities in the organization of the workers. What was the answer of the A. F. of L. leadership? In the very days of the June strike when the bosses were trying to wretch out of their agreement with 574, the Teamsters President fired a blast which was printed in the newspapers as a weapon against the union. And no sooner had the union buried its dead, no sooner had the smoke of battle cleared and it had gathered together its wounded, than Tobin comes along and tries to break up the union because it wouldn't allow itself to be cheated and brow-beaten. Tobin connived with Green to show the workers that they might perhaps beat the bosses—but, by God! they couldn't beat the A. F. of L. and its almighty 'principles.' Tobin would show the union that he was better than the Citizens Alliance in busting up unions. Well, he tried. And the score is nothing to nothing for both Tobin and the Citizens Alliance. (Applause.)

Workers Want Industrial Unionism

"Thus, in spite of the accumulated discontent of the workers, the A. F. of L. as such made only the most miserable showing. But the workers, for this reason, didn't say 'to hell with unions!' Instead there was a tremendous pressure to change the form and methods of organization. Every worker reflects this discontent with the old methods and forms. Every discontented worker rallies around any union capable of fighting the incompetency of the old craft unions. Suppose you took 574 to Detroit or Pittsburgh—what unions you would find in rubber, in steel, in autos! You can't fool the workers with craft unionism any more. They don't want it. They want industrial unionism. When the craft unionists come in any try to tell them how to run their unions they revolt. The automobile workers, in their convention, called on the eve of the Atlantic City convention, rejected the proposals of Green. In Akron, the rubber workers elected their own President and rejected the protégé of Green. And then come the teachers—the teachers who have never been known to be radicals—the teachers in Ohio rejected the ultimatum from Green that they reorganize the New York local. The teachers told Green to go to hell. Three times before the Atlantic City convention Green got official rebuffs and defeats—unheard of before! And in Minneapolis, Tobin had also failed.

"All these accumulated forces pressed in on the Atlantic City convention—forces which guarantee that there will be no patching up between the contending forces in the A. F. of L. First, then, there is the revolt from the part of certain of the shrewd leaders. This fear is not unjustified. It is the fear that if the A. F. of L. doesn't quit monkeying around, there will grow up an independent union movement outside of the A. F. of L., leaving the old leaders high and dry without their highly remunerative 'pie cards.' They have seen the handwriting on the wall—these more far-sighted leaders—they have looked across the Atlantic and seen what happened in Europe. Take John Lewis. Lewis is no radical, yet he says that if there are no industrial unions there will be none at all. Hillman, too, in the A. F. of L. conventions made the same point. Thus we find forces pressing for more modern types of organization both within and without the official A. F. of L.

Our Tendency

"While on the surface it may appear that the contest is only between two types of leaders—between the horse-and-buggy unionists—there is also a tendency which is even more progressive than the official sponsors of industrial unionism. This tendency aims at more than merely winning a strike. It aims at the foundation of a workers' republic. (Applause.) This tendency is ours; and it will come more and more to the front.

"The difference between Lewis and Green is one of intelligence and not of radicalism. The old Bourbons never learn anything new. They call the unskilled workers riff-raff; they try to keep the unions small and divided into crafts. These old fossils have lived their time. There are going to be many types of labor leaders before we have a workers' republic in the United States, but you can be sure that the Green-Hutchinson type will be among the first to be pushed aside.

Fear of the Younger Leaders

"The younger leaders know that if you don't organize the strategically situated basic industries you have no organization at all. How can you speak of the American trade union movement when the basic industries are not unionized? These younger leaders are goaded on, also, by another fear—that unless they organize the basic industries first, more radical leaders will come in ahead of them. They don't want to be left on the outside. But they are not radicals, either. They want to deal with the bosses, but in an organized way. The bosses would have liked to cooperate with Meyer Lewis in Minneapolis. But Lewis had no power—he didn't control any unions—so they said to him, 'We're sorry, but we can't do any business.' (Laughter.) The same principle applies to the John Lewis-Hillman-Dubinsky crowd. They know they can't deal with the bosses unless they have powerfully organized industrial unions behind them.

"Now it is one of the nine wonders of the world that John L. Lewis and Co. have been catapulted to the leadership of the movement for industrial unionism. Their record is not so good. Nobody suppressed trade union democracy more ruthlessly than John L. Lewis. Nobody expelled more honest radical workers from the unions. Nobody forced more 'provisional reorganizations' of local unions. Nobody was more violent and unscrupulous in his methods. Yet this man has been projected to the front.

"Nevertheless, his interests and ours to a limited extent coincide.

Manager's Corner

We have received so far a total of 104 new subscriptions in our drive for a total of 1,000. This means that in the remaining few weeks much more speed is imperative.

In New York City branches No. 1 and 3 are ahead and fairly certain to make their quota. The Bronx branch (Branch 5) used to lag in our drives. This last week, however, it has made a good start. Branch 8 is small but shows a good record compared with its membership. It will go over the top easily. Outside of New York City only the Chicago branches, Cleveland and Philadelphia have made somewhat of a fair beginning.

Since our last report we have received a total of 89 new subscriptions distributed as follows:

Our tendency is not that of John L. Lewis. We believe in militancy and our final aim is the foundation of the workers' republic. We don't believe in class-collaboration. We don't believe that the workers can get anything without militancy. But we do stand for industrial unionism because it is a necessary step—because it is a step forward. It is a curious fact that the interests of the most revolutionary and the extremely conservative tendencies coincide to a certain extent. Industrial unionism is objectively progressive. Therefore revolutionists must support it regardless of who is at the head of the movement for its realization. But we must not lose our heads and think that industrial unionism is all. We must forge ahead. We must retain our independent position. We must take advantage of every division between the reactionaries and the conservatives.

"The situation is this. The Lewis clique can't leave the workers organized. In Detroit the first strike of the season was conducted by an independent union consisting of three unions outside the A. F. of L. that came together and amalgamated. This was a warning to the A. F. of L. Minneapolis is also a warning. Here was a deliberate attempt to break up a union and drive it out of the A. F. of L. for 99 years. And this attempt failed. The idea may get into the minds of the workers. To hell with an A. F. of L. charter. Maybe it wasn't the A. F. of L. charter that got us our wage increase. Maybe it was our own organized strength."

"That is the meaning behind the resignation of John L. Lewis. Lewis doesn't agree with Green—who issued a warning to the 'serious consequences' of forming organizations within the A. F. of L. and of entering into relations with non-A. F. of L. unions (except the Civic Federation, or any other boss union). Lewis is just going ahead the same as before.

"What does this mean for us? Now is the time for progressive and militant elements to push forward. Now is not the time to be cautious. Now is the time to press our demands and to get consideration for them. Now is the time to press further and further into the A. F. of L.

What Pushed Lewis to the Lead

"Now you may want to know why it is Lewis rather than the radicals who is leading the fight for industrial unionism. The answer is that in the five years of the crisis, the most radical group, the Communists (Stalinists), left the A. F. of L. They went out of the A. F. of L. and pulled many others out with themselves. That's why when all this upsurge from the ranks is taking place, there have been no militants ready to spring into a place of leadership.

Some contributions to the eight-page weekly have also been received since our last report. Comrade Harvey Walton made a donation very welcome because of its substantial size. The sum of $100 contributed by him aided materially in bringing us nearer to the total amount needed. A friend in New York City contributed an additional $35.00 and from Branch 1 we received a contribution of $2.00. This brings us to a total contribution so far of $946.70. To this we add the amount received in the special drive for 1,000 new subscriptions and we can say that the reaching of this particular goal will assure the launching of the eight-page weekly.

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL, December issue, now on sale, lives up to its usual high standard. Comrade Trotsky discusses in this issue the present position of the I.L.P. in relation to the struggle for the Fourth International. In another article he discusses an assignment executed by Romain Rolland regarding the Kiroff assassination. And of special interest to the readers of the NEW INTERNATIONAL this issue carries a review of "Stalin" by Henry Barbusse and "Stalin" by Boris Souvarine. This issue also contains a reply by John West to Max Eastman and other interesting and educational features.

"That is why, too, we must wherever possible, fight for a policy of unity. But not unity at any price. We won't purchase unity at the cost of breaking up our organizations and of giving up our fundamental rights. We must, wherever possible, go into the A. F. of L. and fertilize it while there is still time with genuine militancy. We must inspire the unions not only to fight for a loaf of bread but to conquer the world or else the world will be taken away from them as happened in Germany.

"In the days of reaction, the Gompers and Green policy of weeding out radicals worked like a charm. But now the workers are disoriented. There is no hope of inciting them against radicals. If you go to a worker and say to him, 'A radical is the leader of your union,' he will answer, 'I'm damned glad to hear that.' The sentiment of the masses has changed. I predict with absolute confidence, for example, that Meyer Lewis will be a complete flop. The victory of 574 is due not only to its own strength but to the favorable national situation. But it will be so decisive that it will put steel and courage into the movement everywhere else. The reactionaries' hands are too full—they have too many trons in the fire. There are too many issues at stake here and elsewhere.

Conquer the World

"We must take advantage of this favorable objective situation. We must push the industrial union struggle forward. But at the same time we must inspire the workers with the revolutionary idea that they must establish themselves as masters of the whole world." (Applause.)

During the questioning period, comrade Cannon, in reply to a query as to what form the cooperation between the revolutionists and the conservative industrial unionists would take, replied that it was dangerous for radicals to make the mistake for one moment that Lewis was a true progressive. It was great folly to believe that salvation could come from people like John L. Lewis. Although our interests coincide to a certain extent, there would not probably be much direct cooperation between us. Rather each side would play its own end of the game for the realization of its own aim. What was important, was for the radicals to press forward their own ideas and to retain their independence. "Certainly, the Workers Party would not do as the Communists were doing. The C. P. is trying to build Lewis up into a second Jesus Christ. They publish front page interviews with him in the Daily Worker. We have no such illusions. We are for industrial unions because they gave us a larger field within which to work. The larger the unions, the more honest workers there will be within them. The better for us. Take 574, for example. It took a lunge when nobody was looking and built up a real organization. It took in workers who had never been in any union before. Now suppose you did the same thing from town to town. It is significant, too, that the same leaders who thus organized the drivers, went ahead and organized the unemployed. The typical American labor leader has no interest in half-starved unemployed workers. That is John L. Lewis' position. The sign of the genuine labor leader is his interest in all the workers. It was no accident that 574 organized the unemployed; and the unemployed reciprocated by rallying to 574's support."

N. Y. Socialist Party Splits

It is possible to draw certain conclusions on the basis of these developments. First of all, the split will not be confined to New York but will be a national split, involving the National Committee and the state organizations. Second, the Thomas-Hoan-Militant coalition, which has a majority on the National Committee, seems to have at last decided to conduct a struggle against the Old Guard and even to throw them out of the party. Peace-pacts between them, especially against the genuine lefts in the party, are still by no means excluded. Third, the leadership in the present struggle comes from Thomas and Hoan, rather than from Militant chieftains. Information from additional sources confirms these conclusions. The initiative in the entire struggle has been given by Thomas and his group. The Militant leaders have tagged along behind him and Hoan. They had made few, if any, preparations for conducting the fight against the Old Guard. The Old Guard's declaration of war took them by surprise, as did the necessity and suddenness of the split. In their lack of preparation for the inevitable struggle and in their passive trailing behind Thomas, the Militant commanders-in-chief again show their weaknesses as political leaders.

Profiteers Clear Decks For Big Drive on Labor

Sloan, Jr. of General Motors gave the lead at this point: "We who have the prime responsibilities of the major policies of industry must first convince ourselves as to fundamentals. Then we must convince the organizations of industry. This applies particularly to the workers within industry. Their welfare is at stake. We must also inform our stockholders—those who own industry. American industry is not selfish. It would be far more just to say it has been preoccupied—preoccupied in producing; but I am convinced that industry's responsibilities cannot longer be adequately discharged by mere physical production." The employers must now get busy and save the country!

They went further in making this clear at the N.A.M. convention by announcing that under "the American System" they were going to fight against various measures by which the government is "hampering recovery," namely: efforts to regulate and control production; efforts to regulate the financing of business (regulation of banks, stock exchange, sale of securities, etc.); governmental measures to regulate hours of work and rates of pay; and governmental efforts to regulate relations between employer and employee which will "lead to political rule over both management and labor."

"Soak the Poor"

When the N.A.M. becomes still more concrete as to what it is going to fight for under the banner of "The American System" it speaks of cutting down the taxes on big incomes, levying an income tax on the lower incomes, extending various forms of sales taxes; in other words, a tax policy of "soak the poor." It speaks also of the need of drastic reduction of government expenditures, particularly for the unemployed in order that "the budget may be balanced" and the intolerable burden on business which, Mr. J. P. Morgan indicated recently, would soon make him a poor man may be lifted. And it attacks the Wagner-Connelly Labor Relations Act and all other measures which even in the slightest degree give or appear to give support to labor in its efforts at unionization.

To put it bluntly, there is a temporary "recovery" under the capitalist system. That means a chance to make profits. And the industrialists announce that they are going to make them all they possibly can. They are going to remove every obstacle in their path if they can. And they are in a determined, fighting, enthusiastic and pious mood about it. For the moment American capitalists have recovered their morale.

Lewis Also for Roosevelt

Space permits only two practical observations: The announcement that the industrialists were going to fight Roosevelt's New Deal policies was greeted by William Green with a notice that this would itself mean that all liberal and labor forces would rally to Roosevelt's support, and John L. Lewis, who at certain points is conducting a spectacular fight against Green, on this matter solidarizes himself with the A. F. of L. president, announcing that he too would support Roosevelt wholeheartedly. Thus these trade union leaders once more try to give to workers a lesson in how not to do things. Industry has indeed, in the words of one of its spokesmen "much against its will been forced in sheer self-defense to enter the political arena or be destroyed as a private enterprise."

But Alfred P. Sloan is careful to explain just what this means: "It is important that we recognize that industry as an institution must not concern itself with promoting the fortunes of any political agencies." In other words, Sloan as well as other intelligent leaders recognize that they can use both the Republican and Democratic parties, especially as long as American workers think they can find salvation by turning now to one and now to another of these parties. Roosevelt saved them in 1933, among other things by persuading the workers and the trade union bureaucrats that he was going to give them a genuine New Deal. He is even now giving fresh help to the industrialists by stating that there will be a "breathing spell" from social and regulatory legislation.

For the present what the industrialists want is to bring still more pressure on Roosevelt in order that they may get a larger and deeper breathing spell. They will by no means decisively or unanimously repudiate him as long as he gives them this and also keeps on building the military and naval establishment of the United States in preparation for that war with the imperialists of other nations which American imperialists clearly foresee. The workers can find salvation not via the proposition of Green and Lewis but by complete repudiation of all capitalist parties, by building up their own independent political strength, by organizing their power for the overthrow of the system which each in his own way, Sloan, Roosevelt and the trade union bureaucrats, seek to maintain.

"Smash the Unions"

Secondly, the main immediate object of the industrialists, hidden behind all the verbiage about "The American System," attacks on the New Deal, etc., is SMASH THE UNIONS. Not the Roosevelt administration, not the Wagner-Connelly Act, not the Labor Relations Board, or any of these agencies but the unions above all stand in the way of the profit-grabbing crusade on which the industrialists have entered. The organized workers can offer resistance to the breakdown of their standards. Besides, if the organized power of the workers grows they can shake the very foundations of the system from which the industrialists derive their profits and their prestige.

The main immediate answer to the employer offensive is labor's offensive: Organization campaigns in the basic industries; strikes for union recognition and against all attacks on labor standards; intensification of labor militancy to answer employer militancy; the building up of a leadership in the unions which breaks forever with the philosophy of collaboration with the profit-grabbing employers and stands on the basis of struggle against them.

prerequisite for the regrouping of the revolutionary forces.

Clarity is equally essential on other matters. Yesterday, the Militants believed that they could live at peace in the same party with the Old Guard. At that time we issued the warning that such an arrangement was politically impossible. Today, the Militants cherish the illusion that they can solidify their bloc with Thomas, Hoan and their like. Even more do they cultivate the illusion that the Socialist Party can be transformed into the revolutionary party of the American workers.

One illusion is as dangerous as the other. Revolutionists cannot remain for long within the same party with municipal reformists like Hoan; opponents of pacifism cannot remain for long in the same party with pacifists like Thomas and Allen. Such antagonistic elements will sooner or later collide with each other as the struggle within the S.P. develops, and fly apart.

The regrouping of the revolutionary forces on a national and international scale should be the fundamental task of all sincere Socialist workers. These forces can be reconstituted only on the basis of a clear and uncompromising revolutionary program. The duty of all Militants, who are revolutionists, is to work out such a program and to fight for its adoption. Only in this way will the split which has just taken place be a progressive one. Only through this road will all the revolutionary elements be united.

TO THE READERS OF THE NEW MILITANT

We beg your indulgence for having missed the last issue. However, this omission will, we believe, hardly be felt since this issue will be in your hands after a lapse of hardly two days. Various obstacles of a purely technical nature compelled us to take this course. Nevertheless we propose to turn the evil into a good by introducing a sorely needed reform. In the future the NEW MILITANT will be mailed on Wednesdays and you will receive it prior instead of after, as was the case until now, the date of issuance. New York branches will have it for week-end distribution and out of town branches before the week-end is out.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

WAR TECHNOLOGY

Modern warfare when it involves the advanced capitalist countries is no longer a matter of winning battles. It is far more the pitting of the national resources and national technologies against each other. The control of coal and iron, of cotton, copper and oil—of the "strategic" materials—becomes of major and decisive importance. The threat made by the rival imperialists to cut off Mussolini's oil supply is a reminder of this fact. It is also a reminder of the careful planning for future war made years in advance by the military arm of each government.

The United States, for example, has its plans laid in the minutest fashion for the complete mobilization of the necessary industries the moment war breaks out. Contracts for all war materials need only to be signed to start, the production schedules already agreed upon with individual factories. The "Commodity Files" division of the United States Army keeps the most up-to-date information on volumes of production of all commodities, the sources of supply, the stock piles in the warehouses, the percentages used for various purposes, etc. This department is entrusted with the task of seeing to it that sufficient supplies can be made immediately available at the outbreak of war to carry on the war for two years even if the country be completely blockaded (an impossibility in the case of the United States) and no outside sources can be tapped. Even more, this department, in collaboration with the navy, sees to it that the necessary ships are sent to keep open the channels of communication with those countries which supply necessary foodstuffs or raw materials. In this connection all of South America comes under the complete domination of U. S. imperialism through its naval supremacy in continental waters. Plans are even ready for the seizure of those countries or parts of countries that produce strategic materials. Canada, with its monopoly of nickel, Bolivia and Chile with their tin, lead and nitrates would fall easy victims.

LABOR AND THE WAR PLANS

An important aspect of this planning is the economic side of production. The allocation of finances in the government budget is based on careful consideration of prices in connection with increased output. Greater production of any commodity can always be stimulated at a price. But this means that the government becomes interested in controlling prices as much as it can in time of war. The calculations of the imperialists and their military subordinates take into account particularly wages. Every strike tends to become a blow struck at the entire plan for making war profitable. Control of production for purposes of destruction means above all to the big financiers who actually run the government, the keeping of a tight rein on the working class. It means the attempt to destroy any organized resistance to the well-laid plans of capitalist profiteers, to check the workers in any effort to maintain their standards of living or to improve them. More than ever the everyday struggles of the workers against the exploiters becomes a menace to the entire capitalist system, since these efforts of the oppressed to better their conditions disturb the smooth functioning of the system at a most critical time. Thus war forces the capitalists—their fears aroused both at home and abroad—to exert the utmost powers of their dictatorship to keep the workers in subjection. The class struggle takes on sharpened form; strikes tend to become political as well as economic battles; the workers who enter into the struggle see more clearly the oppressive role of the government as the instrument of the ruling class. These lessons are being drawn today by the Italian workers. They have experienced terrific blows at their living standards. Mussolini's plans for imperialist conquest are at the same time plans to rob the working class even more than in time of peace. That is the inevitable fate of every working class in time of peace.

WAR IN THE FAR EAST

The situation in North China has reached a critical stage. The Japanese are determined to seize the five northern provinces under the usual fakery of "autonomy," the cherished formula of the Japanese imperialists. But they would like to accomplish their ends with as little fuss as possible, with the "consent," if possible, of Chiang Kai-shek. This plant tool of the Japanese army is, however, in a quandary. He is witnessing the removal from his control of the richest provinces of China, Shanai and Shantung, provinces which supplied him with a lordly income. One hundred million people are being torn away to be exploited by the Japanese war-lords instead of the Chinese. The blow at the "prestige" of this dictator would be great indeed if he submits without a struggle. The utmost pressure is being exerted on him, both from within and from without (America and England) to fight in order to hold off the Japanese bandits as long as possible. There is a split in the Kuomintang, the Nationalist Party of China dominated by Chiang, over this issue of war against Japan. The Japanese are not anxious to see Chiang make the decision to fight and hence they are exerting every form of threat to make him submit peacefully. This is the issue that now hangs in the balance. War now would find the Chinese working class pitted against Japan, but at the same time struggling also against the betrayer, Chiang Kai-shek, to replace his government by one that would truly fight to the end against Japanese and all other imperialism.

YOUTH AND RELIEF

For reasons obvious to all, the bourgeoisie has granted to the miserable of this country various forms of "relief": home relief, WPA, FWA, etc. These forms have affected primarily older workers, those having families.

If we are permitted to digress for a moment we might say that the President's speech in Atlanta on Friday, Nov. 23, gave clear indication that even these meager forms of relief are to be suspended in the near future. Referring to the budget, the President said: "As things stand today, and in the light of a definite and continuing economic improvement, we have passed the peak of appropriations. We can look forward with assurance to a decreasing deficit." And later, "In providing relief we are dealing with properly self-respecting Americans, to whom a mere dole outrages every instinct of individual independence."

Needless to say, and an early experience has revealed, that the forms of "relief" granted is in itself a most brazen mockery of the very word. However meager this relief, workers found that with considerable effort it was possible (barely) to subsist upon these meager grants from the government, the funds for which were obtained from the hides of the starving employed. But for some period of time, after many struggles, relief was finally granted, and the man with the family, the older worker, subsisted—hungry, starving, demoralized—but subsisting nevertheless. But the youth?—ignored.

Up until 1934 the very best that this section of the population received was vermin and disease-ridden "flop-houses." Since then, three institutions of relief have been granted the youth. (We shall give a detailed analysis of each of these in subsequent articles.)

INSTITUTIONS FOR YOUTH RELIEF

1. Transient Camps. In the N. Y. Times of Aug. 14, 1932, C. B. Hurd, giving minimum figure estimates, reports that "there are between two and three hundred thousand youth between the ages of 12 to 20" who roam the country by means of freight trains, hitch-hiking, etc. Since that period the number of youth engaged in this means of livelihood has been increasing until, in the middle of 1934, various sources attributed the number of "roaming youth" to be closer to seven hundred and fifty thousand—a formidable number. The forms of living, the habits of life, deplorable physical, social and intellectual conditions imposed upon them can be most charitably characterized as destructive, demoralizing, and degenerating. To keep some of these youth from stealing, jail houses, certain social centers, and abandoned property for the most part, were designated as "TEMPORARY" shelters and called "transient camps." We do not intend to deal here with the exact nature or the specific faults of this institution. Suffice it to say that without making provision for the overwhelming majority of these "transients" (as they have come to be called), the government has since abolished the transient camp.

2. National Youth Act: The NYA which, according to a confidential despatch of the U. S. Department of Interior, Office of Education, on April 28, 1935, was designed to relieve "the prolonged thwarting of their (the unemployed youth's) natural desires and ambitions (which thwarting) may result either in a rebellious spirit or in a feeling of inferiority from which some of them will never recover."

Hence fifty million dollars has been appropriated for the purpose of relieving two million unemployed and student youth by paying for skilled and semi-skilled labor for a maximum of fifteen hours per week, the generous, scab, maximum wage of $3 per week. Forced to scab at 20c per hour—$3 per week maximum: a happy prospect for the starving youth. At that rate, the government can assure us the production of a fine core of mental deficients and physical incompetents.

But talk of the foregoing on this subject becomes almost extraneous when we learn from authentic

Our Revolutionary Heritage:

Homestead Strike

By Leighton Rigby

Philanthropic Andrew Carnegie has been described as "not only the greatest manufacturer that has ever lived, but the author of a philosophic comprehension of the progress of civilization as wide as can be found in any other writer (!)" Nor is that all. He was "one who loved his fellow-men, who suffered, fought, wept and rejoiced with them as one of them."

But that's the Andrew Carnegie who is being honored by the innocents here and abroad on the occasion of the centenary of his birth. Surely it's not the Carnegie who stubbornly refused to recognize the workers' right to organize. It couldn't be the Carnegie who rendered ineffective most of the many strikes in his plants by cabling to Europe for a fresh batch of unacclimated, slavery-bound workers to live and work in the rotten conditions surrounding his enterprises. Certainly the Carnegie his workers knew was not the philanthropist the speech makers are praising.

In 1890, at the Carnegie Steel Company plants at Homestead, Pa., the company officials and the workers agreed upon a wage scale to extend over a period of three years. When this agreement expired, the substitute offered by Carnegie slashed wages twelve percent. The reason given was that labor-saving equipment had lessened the strenuousness of the work. Naturally, no mention was made of the increased profits derived from the displacement of those workers replaced by the new devices. The answer of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers was a flat refusal to sign the new pact.

Carnegie boarded a boat for his native Scotland, leaving his lieutenant, Henry Clay Frick, to face the approaching storm. His literary mind doubtless recalled that line from Shakespeare: "So foul a sky clears not without a storm." And it was a most furious storm that came, one of the fiercest battles American workers have ever fought against the scourge of capitalism.

Carnegie Off to Bonnie Scotland

Before the clouds were pierced by a lookout, Carnegie dispatched a notice for Frick to post at the Homestead works. It said, in effect, that the company no longer recognized the workers' union and that the plant would be thenceforth strictly non-union. Of course, Carnegie was on his estate in bonny Scotland, safe from harm. Frick did not post the notice. The boss sent letter after letter, about the matter of the notice and plans for starving the workers into submission. This daylight is mentioned as added proof of Carnegie's determination to smash the union. The fact is that, as far as Carnegie was concerned, the end of the three-year agreement was to mean the end of the Amalgamated. A further unfortunate fact is that the Amalgamated was killed indeed, even if it took every man of the Pennsylvania guards to do the job.

When the lockout was ordered, the several Homestead branches of the union immediately elected an Advisory Committee. That body met and issued an announcement that "the committee has, after mature deliberation, decided to organize their forces on a truly military basis." Guards were stationed at every entrance to Homestead, and lookouts kept the committee aware of any person or group approaching the town. The Monongahela river was patrolled by a steamboat chartered by the workers, in addition to numerous smaller boats.

Pinkerton's Are Spotted

The sheriff of Allegheny county admitted his inability to break the power of the workers' committee. As the next best thing, and notoriously more efficient, the company hired a band of three hundred Pinkerton thugs who were towed late at night on a floating arsenal from Pittsburgh. A worker lookout spotted the barge and gave the alarm. Whistles blew, and men, women and children rushed into the streets of Homestead, ready for battle.

Even before the Pinkerton detectives drew up to the landing, they had no difficulty in detecting militancy in the workers, because they heard the crack of gunfire as soon as the barge was discernible to those on the shore. When the Pinkertons attempted to go ashore, they were driven back and forced to get under cover. Both sides were determined—the thugs because they were being well paid, and the workers because the struggle would rather die fighting than starve.

From the opposite bank, two canoes barked, but the discharges did not touch the Pinkerton barge. Rifles and revolvers ceaselessly added to the sound of battle. Dynamite boomed as the fighting workers strove to blast the paid killers out of the river. The Pinkertons would be allowed to continue the battle on land only by "trampling over the dead bodies of three thousand honest workmen." Few engagements in the long history of class warfare, here or anywhere, have been more valiantly fought by the oppressed class.

The Workers Victorious

The boat that had towed the Pinkerton barge was driven off to Pittsburgh, and the Carnegie storm troops, beaten and seeing no other channel of escape, raised the white flag. They were allowed to disembark and entrain for Pittsburgh. The battle of Homestead was over, the workers victorious. The casualties for both sides were ten dead and sixty wounded, several mortally.

After the smoke had cleared away, the workers' committee was voted the power of government in Homestead. Untruthful reports intended for propaganda against the workers were destroyed before they were dispatched to the capitalist press throughout the land. There was classless peace in Homestead, and the dingy shacks suddenly felt like homes, rather than dirty, crawling prison cells.

But the Carnegie influence was greater in Harrisburg than that of iron workers. Though the town was still and the departure of the Pinkertons had assured the end of disorders, eight thousand soldiers pitched camp at Homestead.

Seine District of Socialist Youth Grows Since Their Expulsion

"ONCE EXPELLED YOU WILL BE NOTHING, NOT EVEN WIND, NOT EVEN DUST..."—From a speech of Lagorrette, right wing leader of the Socialist Youth at the Lille Congress.

203 new applications to the Socialist Youth of the Seine, of which 40 are Young Communists and 30 of the "Social Front," bringing our membership up to 1,800.

42 public meetings organized by the J. S.
24 meetings organized jointly with the party.
More than 100 joint meetings in which we participated.
Four new issues of "Revolution," whose circulation has constantly grown.

A new series of leaflets.
A district poster on the events of Brest and Toulon.
A poster on the Italo-Ethiopian war.
Throw-away posters for meetings and public gatherings.
An edition of leaflets on the "People's Front."
A propaganda pamphlet with our slogans.

An issue of "Revolution" confiscated by the government and several comrades victimized by bourgeois justice.

sources that even that which was described as the purpose of the NYA has been flagrantly and criminally distorted. This significant information was revealed when the head of the New York Department of the National Youth Administration resigned his post, giving as his reason, that notwithstanding the passing of over one third of the period of the plan, nothing, absolutely nothing, had been accomplished insofar as aid to the needy youth was concerned.

3. The Civilian Conservation Corps: The CCC is America's military forced labor camps where unemployed youth are conscripted (by economic conditions of course) to do skilled labor UNDER MILITARY DISCIPLINE at $1 per day and keep. So successful has been this "conscription" that the government has by this time increased the number of camps from 1,600 to 2,900, and the number of recruits per period (six months) from some 300,000 to almost 600,000. The gross dissatisfaction with the conditions of our "forced labor camps" is best revealed by the reports almost daily of strikes and demonstrations in the camps against the food, the quartering, and the labor conditions.

Mr. Mitchell's article, favorable to the CCC, appearing in The New Republic of May 20, 1935, states that "perhaps one third of the depression youth will go through the CCC." This statement is of outstanding significance in view of the fact that it is an open secret, admitted by the military officials in charge of the CCC, that the latter is not actually a relief project or a social or industrial enterprise, but that it is (and they make no bones about it) a military affair; an expedient way of training the youth, of preparing them for the war, at army camp wages, for semi-skilled union labor. This explains why, of the three "relief" projects, only the latter thrives.

Hence of the three relief agencies offered the five million or more unemployed youth of this country, the first is abolished, the second is a failure and acknowledged as a mockery by one of its leaders and outstanding proponents, and the third turns out to be a starvation, scabbing forced labor outfit designed to give the youth no relief, but to prepare them for a war in defense of the profits of those who deny them life and who impose upon them conditions of starvation and physical and moral degradation.

To these youth a future can be assured only if they can be reached by the Workers Party through its youth instrument, the Spartacus Youth League, to direct them in the struggles for their needs.

ON THE WAR FRONT

It does not require years of experience or great powers of observation to know that youth today figures as the most serious factor in modern warfare. With the introduction of mass production and the system characterized by it, we have simultaneously the introduction of the system of mass murder, of the cream of the population—the proletarian youth. That youth is primarily to the victory of a nation in war and vital to the victory of an class is known better perhaps by the bourgeoisie than anybody else.

Long before Karl Liebknecht uttered his rich and meaningful slogan, "He who has the youth has the army," King Frederick William of Germany, speaking for the ruling classes, already pronounced in even more explicit terms this identical thought when he stated:

"A civil war needs soldiers who will obey blindly; which is as much as to say that it needs well drilled children and minors. The most loyal recruits are to be found among the kids who have only just left school. Unquestioned faith is a soldier's best ammunition."

And further:

"Youth recently confirmed make the best fighting men."
Hence Van Roon raised the cry: "Away with the Landwehr! Not for the simple increase in the army, but for the creation of an army which should consist mainly of youth."

How loyally the American bourgeoisie had conducted this policy is strikingly illustrated not only by the conditions of its draft laws, by the ages of the individuals comprising the present standing army, but more so upon its specific stress and attention upon those military institutions for civilians which attract almost entirely youth. The size of every military and semi-military youth organization (particularly the National Guards—and the Boy Scouts, Sea Scouts and other children's organizations) has grown tremendously in the past five years. The CMTC (Military training camps for civilians) attracting almost exclusively youth has in the past seven years almost doubled the number of its camps and more than doubled its yearly enrollment which amounts to over one million.

Nor have they neglected the advice given with regards the student. An article in the Chicago Daily Tribune of Aug. 28, 1935, was headlined: "ROTC Already Biggest in U.S.; To Be Doubled." "The Reserve Officers Training Corps, a military institution in the high schools and colleges, is operated under the direct jurisdiction of the U. S. War Department. Aside from its military function in warfare,

Belgian Labor Party Bureaucrats Push Expulsions As Left Wing Adopts Revolutionary Position

The leadership of the Belgian Labor Party (P.O.B.) follows close on the heels of its brother bureaucrats in the French Socialist Party in bounding revolutionists from the organization. They take their cue from the bourgeois police who intensify the repression against revolutionary opponents of war in direct ratio with the imminence of the conflict.

Moreover in Belgium, national unity with the bourgeoisie is already an accomplished fact. Vandervelde, spiritual guide and leader of the P.O.B. is a member of the Van Zeeland cabinet which at this moment is being challenged in its anti-working class monetary policy by the threat of a wide-spread miners' strike. More the reason for the threat of expulsion against the comrades of the Action Socialiste Revolutionnaire, organ of the left wing in the P.O.B.

The following quotation from the A.S.R. is therefore published with great gratification since it indicates that the left wing comrades mean to fight and not capitulate:

"As the leadership of the P.O.B. becomes ever more deeply involved in the field National Union for War it must be foreseen that disciplinary measures—so-called—will be taken against the groups and elements who are fighting against special-patriotism and against the tendency which under cover of the struggle 'against Fascism and war' prepares the workers to participate on the side of their bourgeoisie in the new imperialist war."

"Last week we indicated the attack being prepared in top committee against the Action Socialiste Revolutionnaire. The quarrel which the leadership of the party sought to provoke with the J.G.S. (Young Socialist Guards) depriving them of the subsidy and disciplinary measures, arises from the same causes. Similarly with the first sanctions against the L.I.G.A. (anti-war league under left wing control) which has adopted a position close to that of the A.S.R. on the problem of war."

"The attack unleashed by the leadership of the P.O.B. against the opponents of its policy of National Union with the bourgeoisie for war necessitates a rapid coordination of the left forces, of the revolutionary forces determined to hold high and firm the banner of internationalist socialism, the banner of proletarian revolution."

Ever since the removal of the renegade Spaak who mouthed the most revolutionary phrases only to become a minister in His Majesty Leopold's cabinet in the first serious crisis, and the break with the Stalinist hireling Dr. Marteau, the A.S.R. has moved consistently to the left. The entry of the Belgian Bolshevik-Leninists and their close cooperation with A.S.R. contributed not a little to this leftward movement. We have just received in the mails the latest copy of A.S.R., containing a manifesto on war which takes an outright revolutionary position. Lack of space permits the reproduction of a few excerpts only. Following an introduction in which they explain the causes of the Italo-Ethiopian war and the world war which may follow, they continue:

"Consequently it is necessary to combat and defeat capitalism to obliterate the causes of war and assure lasting peace among the peoples by international proletarian revolution and the institution of the socialist society! In order to put an end to war, it is above all in its own country that the proletariat must fight and defeat capitalism!"

"... As in 1914, the leaderships of the workers' movement—the Second (Socialist) International and the Third (Communist) International—unite on the question of 'national defense' in a capitalist regime, preparing the workers to participate in the new imperialist war on the side of their national bourgeoisie."

"The attitude which they have adopted in the Italo-Ethiopian conflict and which consists in placing the workers' movement at the service of the League of Nations, is proof sufficient. It is not as enemies but as servants of their respective imperialisms that the workers are called upon to act! This road, lauded by the leaders of the Second and Third International, leads directly into national union for war and to a new massacre of millions of human beings for the defense of capitalist interests."

"... 'Fascism means war' is the deceptive formula by means of which the leaders of the workers' movement want to drag you behind the capitalists for the defense of the capitalist fatherland in which you are not and can never be anything but slaves! For the defense of the capitalist interests they propose that you sacrifice your life in case of war. But when your interests are involved they are opponents of the revolutionary struggle against your exploiters! Against external Fascism expressing the imperialist capitalist interests opposed to those of our bourgeoisie, they are partisans of war; but against Belgian Fascism they are opponents of direct action, of the physical and armed struggle of the workers."

"To follow the directives of the Second and Third Internationals on the question of war will, as in 1914, lead directly into a new catastrophe for the international labor movement."

"... No confidence in the League to 'guarantee peace!' It is the den of imperialist bandits, oppressors, of the peoples."

"No confidence in the Van Zeeland government of Belgian capitalism, which has aided and still aids Italian imperialism in its aggression by supplying it with raw materials!"

"Our slogan remains: Not a train, not a boat, not a penny, for Italian imperialism! Immediate boycott by the workers of all production and transportation for Italy! Independent action of the working class!"

"But at the same time struggle against our own capitalists and the government to wrest from it increases in wages, unemployment grants, pensions, in proportion to the rising cost of living!"

"Only by carrying on the struggle on this class basis, can the toilers simultaneously fight war, capitalism and Fascism!"

"Against the policy of collaboration with the class enemy!"

"For a policy of direct struggle of the masses against their exploiters."

"Against 'National Defense' under a capitalist regime, against National Union for war!"

"For revolutionary defeatism and the victory of the revolution through the armed insurrection of the working class!"

"Down with the capitalist regime, cause of misery, Fascism, and war!"

"For the seizure of power by the toiling masses through revolutionary struggle: Mobilize!"

"Long live the dictatorship of the proletariat!"

"Down with the capitalist national states and their frontiers!"

"Long live the Soviet United States of Europe!"

"Long live the international working class revolution!"

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1935

N. West Militants Meet

Seeks Link with A.F.L. Industrial Unionists; Cannon Speaks

AUSTIN, Minn., Dec. 7.—An unqualified stand for industrial unionism and a move to coordinate the independent unions in the north-west with the movement for industrial unionism in the A.F. of L. were the outstanding features of an enthusiastic meeting of the Northwest Labor Unity Conference held here today. Forty delegates from various northwestern points were in attendance. Local 574 was represented by Ray Dunne and Farrell Dobbs. A strong delegation was present from the Independent Union of Packing House Workers at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Other delegates representing independent packing house workers' unions were present from Austin, Albert Lea and Mason City.

After a speech by James P. Cannon of New York City, who had been specially invited to address the conference on the subject of progressive labor policy, a thorough discussion took place in which the majority of the delegates participated. Unanimous opinion was crystallized that the conference must push its campaign for a policy of class struggle and for industrial unionism as a necessary modern form of labor organization.

Hall Movement in A. F. of L.
The movement for industrial unionism which has developed in the A. F. of L. was hailed as a big step forward, which must be supported and encouraged by all progressive unionists, whether affiliated to the A. F. of L. or not. Emphasizing that progressive independent unions must on no account give up their demand for industrial unionism and the democratic right to regulate their own internal affairs, the conference unanimously recommended that, on these conditions, independent unions should declare their readiness to affiliate to the A. F. of L.

It was pointed out in the discussion that the independent auto workers unions of Detroit, now on strike, had taken this position, and the action of the Detroit independent unions was hailed with approval in the adopted resolution. The resolution also calls for a coordination of efforts and activities of the progressive independent unionists with the industrial union movement in the A.F. of L. in order to hasten the day when we will have a truly unified trade union movement organized on an industrial basis.

A motion was unanimously carried to send a wire of greeting to the Packing House Workers now on strike at Oklahoma City, pledging support in their struggle and asking for the establishment of closer communication and co-operation. Organizations represented at the meeting ordered 450 subscription cards to the Northwest Organizer.

It was decided that a full conference be held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on Saturday, February 1. The resolution adopted for consideration by all the affiliated organizations pending the next conference is as follows:

Sanctions End in Scandal

LEAGUE POWERS PLAN PARTITION OF ETHIOPIA

ANGUISHED walls were sent up by pacifists, liberals, social democrats and Stalinists throughout the world last week over the proposal for giving about half of Ethiopia to Italy, which Sir Samuel Hoare, British Foreign Minister, and Premier Laval of France advanced as a basis for peace negotiations between the Fascist aggressor and the last of the independent nations of Africa, fighting to escape just such partition. The League of Nations had been "betrayed" especially by the Baldwin cabinet in Great Britain. The "honor" of Britain had been sullied. This was no way to break into the preparations for the celebration of Christmas, and more of the same kind.

If the Hoare-Laval proposals teach the muddle-heads, and what is more important, the workers, who have been led into confusion by them, something about the true role of the League of Nations, the real character of the modern capitalist state and the anti-working class character of the policy of dependence on the League of Nations which has been followed by the bureaucrats in control of the foreign policy of the Soviet Union, Messrs. Hoare and Laval will indeed have rendered a service!

The League of Nations was never anything but a tool by which certain great powers, especially France and Great Britain, carried out their imperialist designs, an idealistic screen behind which their war preparations could go on. For months after Haile Selassie first appealed to the League against Italian aggression, the League machinery served precisely this function of a screen behind which Italy poured troops into Africa and accumulated supplies for a war. At one point in these negotiations France and Great Britain advanced proposals which in principle were no different from the present ones though offering Italy much less territory than now. The full application of League sanctions, as the NEW MILITANT pointed out, meant imperialist war against Italy. If now the great powers have decided that they are not ready for a general showdown and that therefore the Italo-Ethiopian conflict must somehow be stopped, how else will it be composed except on such terms as the imperialist powers may agree on among themselves? And what should be the function of the League except to give a cover of legality and idealism to this "settlement"? This will still be the underlying truth of the matter even if the Hoare-Laval proposals should be considerably modified or even shelved altogether for the time being.

It is nevertheless quite evident that the plans of the French and British governments, whatever they may have been, did not work with the smoothness which the respective cabinets would undoubtedly have liked. The fact that such abrupt maneuvers are necessary is in itself an indication of how acute the imperialist tensions are at present. Some new threat may have developed from an unexpected quarter about which we shall learn as the plot of the great drama develops. It may well be also that certain "statesmen" have become involved in a particularly juicy bit of intrigue which will not see the light until the workers gain control of some capitalist government and give its secret documents to the world, as Lenin and Trotsky did in Russia in 1917.

The main factors in the situation are sufficiently clear. The application of all sanctions to Italy might produce an "incident" which would lead to open warfare between Italy and England; but England is none too certain just how prompt and efficient French support would be in such a case. Probably a general conflagration would then be well nigh inevitable and the powers are probably not ready to face that. Whether or not Stanley Baldwin deliberately maneuvered to outsmart the Labor Party in the recent elections over the issue of sanctions and League support, the fact is that the National government is in power again, that need of British imperialists has been met, and the government can now turn with more freedom to guard British interests at the most vital points in disregard of "peace sentiment." Possibly the steady progress of Japan in China requires the release of British ships from the Mediterranean.

The recent revolt in Egypt which compelled the British government to restore the constitution of 1923, giving at least a semblance of independence to that country, is only one of many indications that England and France may face serious situations with their colonial possessions and other dependencies if the disturbance does not soon die down. Another ominous (for all imperialists) specter is raised by the fact that the Italian campaign in Ethiopia, what with transport and other difficulties, is not proceeding too smoothly. What dangerous thoughts its collapse would put into the heads of "backward peoples"! In Italy, too, the pinch of sanctions and war expenditures are being felt, and unrest is mounting.

Should Mussolini fail, who and what is to succeed the Fascist regime in Italy? Complications which might flow from that eventuality might shake the entire European capitalist structure. In particular the French Right has probably made it clear to Laval that it will not accept this eventuality without bitter opposition. It is no surprise, therefore, to read coincidentally with the announcement of the Hoare-Laval proposals that diplomatic conversations aimed at an agreement between Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy, are under way. From their own point of view these powers might do worse than come to an understanding among themselves, and to quiet things in Western Europe so as to leave themselves free to carry out their imperialist policies in Asia and Africa and against the Soviet Union.

To the Workers Party the recent developments did not constitute a shocking surprise, a miracle for which there is no explanation, a case perhaps of a bad attack of flu on the eve of a badly needed vacation in Switzerland causing Sir Samuel Hoare to make a regrettable personal mistake. Our policy remains the same:

Exposure of the role of the League of Nations!
Opposition to League sanctions!
Against imperialist war measures!
Defense of Ethiopia and resistance against Italy by the independent action of the working class and its allies!
Struggle against imperialist war by building the movement for the overthrow of capitalism!
Defense of the Soviet Union through building the Fourth International!

Where Is Roosevelt's Relief Program Going?

FACTS AND POLICIES FOR WPA WORKERS

By HERBERT CAPELIS

From the bombastic scheming and prattling that accompanied the introduction of the Works Progress Administration, the naive observer would have been led to believe that the problem of unemployment in the United States was about to be liquidated.

In line with its propaganda campaign, the government acted with startling suddenness. Between Sept. 1 and Sept. 15, 1935, the abolition of the Federal Transient Bureau began and was completed. Relief to roving workers in search of employment was wiped out to the last penny, leaving tens and tens of thousands of people destitute far from their home towns.

On the heels of this move, Federal relief terminated in 26 states by Nov. 15. On that date, also, the remaining states received their final unemployment "dole," thereby casting the unemployed entirely on the tender mercies of the state and municipal relief agencies. As bad as had been the situation of the unemployed before, it now struck new and horrible depths. Worse than in any other section of the country, the conditions in the South fell to unbelievably low levels. Numerous FERA surveys (many of them existing only as secret documents and so entitled) were taken which reveal appalling conditions. Witness: In Atlanta, Georgia, a typical survey of 133 cases at random—only ten were eating "regularly"; 16 existed on one meal a day; dozens were actually found ravaging garbage pails and dumps! For the month of July 15 to August 15, 26 of the families had an income of less than $6 per family for the month! Noted in the survey was the following astonishing statement: "that these conditions are general in the larger cities and yet much better than conditions in the rural communities." One could cite such examples indefinitely—the daily papers carry a fraction of them. Such were the pre-conditions and background upon which flashed the star of the WPA.

II. FACTS

In April, 1935 the Works Progress Administration of the FERA was set up with an appropriation close to $400,000,000. On Nov. 30, the FERA ended, having run out its $3,700,000,000 appropriation as of May, 1935. By Dec. 1, the WPA nationally had taken on 2,225,000 workers: with the largest single section, over 255,000 concentrated in New York alone. (One might add ironically that 40,000 out of 240,000 applicants in New York were turned down as unfit physically for work—glorious tribute to the effects of the crisis on the unemployed!)

The overwhelming bulk of projects put into effect were "labor projects," public works, highway construction, parks, playgrounds, reforestation, etc. While the Roosevelt opposition in the ranks of the capitalists has shouted of "grandiose" boom-bogging at exorbitant rates of pay, the fact is that only 6 per cent of the total number of projects nationally fall into the "white collar" class. Swiftly and chaotically, 2 and a quarter million workers of every sort and variety were transferred from relief rolls over to the WPA—primarily on so-called "unskilled labor" projects (following Roosevelt's formula of "putting the unemployed onto 'useful' work projects").

Conditions? 120 hours a month at wages ranging from $19 to tops of $93 per month. (A small, insignificant fraction, such as foremen, certified accountants, apparatus people, etc. receive higher pay—and generally work more hours.) The South again offers the worst picture: Seven states, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, and the Carolinas offer the magnificent pay of $19 per month on the so-called "unskilled labor" projects. Magnificent pay indeed! 30 hours a week at a little over $4 per week to support a family—and there are complaints that the men do not work hard enough and "there ought to be stricter discipline"! Hovering on the Mason-Dixon line, Baltimore, Md., several Direct Relief Remains Central Issue for Unemployed; Workers' Organizations Must Demand Large-Scale Public Works

By JOHN WEST

The new stage in the Roosevelt relief program began during the first weeks of the last session of Congress, and has now reached its culmination. The publicity agents of the Administration explained their idea as follows:

At the beginning of 1935 there were approximately 5,000,000 persons receiving direct relief (the dole), at least part of which came from the Federal Treasury. Direct Federal relief was to be eliminated. 1,500,000 of these 5,000,000 could be classified as "unemployable" because of illness, old age, or some similar reason. These were to be transferred entirely to the relief rolls of the states and municipalities, and cut off from Federal relief. The remaining 3,500,000 were to be given temporary work at a "security wage" by the Works Progress Administration. This temporary work was to continue for the most part until some time during 1936. By then, the majority of the "employables" would be re-employed by private industry. The rest would be transferred to "heavy" and more permanent public works projects along the lines of the WPA.

Program Not Fulfilled

To accomplish this program $4,880,000,000 was appropriated by Congress. $680,000,000 was to be used to continue direct relief until the WPA program was fully running, and the unemployables sent

Congress of Dutch R.S.A.P. Overwhelmingly Favors 4th Int'l; Defeats S.A.P. Splitters

The convention of the Revolutionary Socialist Labor Party of Holland (R.S.A.P.) held at Utrecht November 16 and 17 overwhelmingly endorsed the steps which had been taken by the leadership of the party in recent months in furthering the cause of the Fourth International.

The Political Committee of the R.S.A.P. on behalf of the party signed the Open Letter for the Fourth International in August of this year. It has participated, together with the other signatories—the International Communist League, the Workers Party of the United States and the Workers Party of Canada—in the preliminary work of establishing a Contact Commission for the Fourth International. The secretaries of the R.S.A.P., H. Sneevliet and P. J. Schmidt, are, in fact, the provisional secretaries of this Contact Commission.

Opponents of the P. C., associated with and largely under the influence of the German Socialist Labor Party (S.A.P.) living in exile in Paris today, conducted a campaign in the party against the P. C. on the ground that in taking concrete steps along with the co-signatories of the Open Letter for the organization of the Fourth International they were violating the fusion agreement which last year brought together the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland and the Independent Socialist Party, the latter being affiliated with the London-Amsterdam Bureau and working there for the Fourth International. The S.A.P. leaders, while paying lip-service to the cause of the Fourth International, have consistently refused to take any concrete steps for its realization and by their criticism of those who were taking these steps, including Trotsky, have sabotaged the movement.

Unequivocally for 4th International
The Political Committee of the R.S.A.P. had contended that though the party maintained a connection with the London-Amsterdam Bureau for the purpose of working openly within it for the Fourth International, the fusion congress had clearly placed the party in the ranks of those who were unequivocally committed to the building of the Fourth International, and that all steps taken by the P. C. had flowed politically and organizationally from this basic position of the party.

The Utrecht convention endorsed this position of the leadership by a vote of 2,500 for, with 250 against and 200 abstentions. The convention decided that the party in the future would establish direct and specific organizational ties only with such parties and groups as stand on the platform of the Open Letter, though fraternal relations will be maintained with any groups which are moving in the direction of the Fourth International. Organizational ties with the emigrant leadership of the German S.A.P. are definitely broken off by action of the convention because of the role played by this leadership in seeking to create turmoil within the Dutch party.

When both the representatives of the opposition who were given equal time at the convention and those of the Political Committee had presented their case to the membership, the membership was so incensed at the political bankruptcy and the organizational measures which had been employed by the opposition that they voted overwhelmingly, against the advice of the Political Committee, for more stringent regulations with regard to taking back into the party those who had been expelled or had left it than the P. C. resolution had recommended.

Of special interest is the fact that, as the organ of the R.S.A.P. puts it, a "crushing majority of precisely those branches mainly composed of former O.S.P. members," namely, the party which had been affiliated with the London-Amsterdam Bureau, voted for the P.C. resolution and solidified themselves in unmistakable fashion with the leadership of the fused party.

The leading editorial in the issue of De Nieuwe Fakkel which reports the convention, concludes with the statement that the convention has cemented the fusion of the former R.S.P. and O.S.P. and in brilliant fashion ratified and strengthened this fusion and the independent party of the Fourth International based upon it.

It is interesting to note that the one voice raised in recent weeks in the parliaments of the European nations for the full Leninist program against war and sanctions was that of H. Sneevliet, Secretary of the R.S.A.P. in a remarkable address in the Dutch parliament.

Progressive Meet in NW

Conference has come into existence in order to bring the progressive unionists in the northwest closer together, to provide a common meeting ground for the discussion of problems and the coordination of the educational activities of its members to unify and strengthen the labor movement.

2. The conference stands for a policy of class struggle and for industrial unionism as the necessary modern form of labor organization. All the experience since the formal launching of the conference a year ago has shown the correctness of this position. In the coming year progressive unionists everywhere must work more aggressively and energetically than ever to popularize these ideas and convince the unions of the necessity to adopt them and put them into practice.

3. The struggle for the industrial form of organization conducted at the recent convention of the A. F. of L. and the setting up of a committee headed by the presidents of several international unions to continue this campaign, are developments of the greatest significance and importance. Progressive unionists are bound to support every decisive step for industrial unionism which alone will make possible the organization of the unorganized millions, especially in the mass production industries, and thus strengthen the labor movement everywhere. Progressive unionists are likewise firm advocates of union unity. Wherever progressive organizations are kept out of the A. F. of L. because of craft union restrictions, or because of expulsion by reactionary officials, they should continue to work for unification without, however, giving up their progressive policies or their right of internal democracy.

4. The development of the big movement for industrial unionism within the A. F. of L. creates the conditions to coordinate the efforts of industrial unionists outside as well as inside the A. F. of L. The conference recommends that non-A. F. of L. unions follow the example of the independent unions of automobile workers at Detroit and declare their readiness to cooperate with the industrial union A. F. of L. forces and to enter the A. F. of L. on only two conditions: (1) indus-

Whither the Relief Program?

And what is the prospect for next year? Is this program going to be fulfilled? It is necessary to answer these questions.

Unemployment Permanent
In the first place, we must always bear in mind that unemployment, and wide-spread unemployment, is not a temporary but a permanent feature of the remaining years of capitalism. "Private" industry is not going to re-absorb the great body of the unemployed. According to the most favorable estimates (in all probability, much too favorable to be true), a maximum of 5,000,000 workers have been re-employed since the low point of employment in March, 1933. This leaves a minimum of 11,000,000 unemployed at the present time. Moreover, these figures take no account of workers on part-time who are not making during a year even a bare subsistence wage, or of the "new" workers coming from the schools, high schools and colleges. It also leaves out of account the highly seasonal character of employment in many of the great industries such as automobiles and textiles. The unemployment figures may be reduced still further by the continuation of the present upsurge in the business cycle; but they will remain at an enormous figure.

Many of these unemployed still manage to live from savings, assistance from relatives, charity, or odd dollars that they pick up here and there. But these sources have been drying up, and "prosperity" is not returning to an extent sufficient to revive them. Of the rest of the unemployed, it is and will continue to be impossible that they can all or even a major part be taken care of by any "made work" or "relief work" or "public works" plan.

Direct Relief Still Primary
Direct relief—the dole—will continue as a permanent feature of declining capitalism. In the chaotic, anarchic conditions of capitalism in its death throes, no rational social planning is possible. It is a futile illusion of middle class imagination-makers to suppose that the dole can be eliminated, an illusion similar to the older dream that a "co-operative commonwealth" can be built up alongside of and within capitalist society.

Important conclusions follow from these facts. Above all, they demonstrate that the problem of direct relief remains and will remain a central issue for the organized unemployed. The programs of the unemployed organizations must continue to have direct relief demands as a primary focus, and must avoid any perspective in terms of the illusory dream that the dole will shortly be eliminated. Moreover, it must be understood by the unemployed organizations that direct relief will continue to be in large part a Federal institution. Mass pressure against Congress and the Administration must be built up to demand not merely a continuation but an increase in direct Federal relief; and these demands must be coupled with the demand to finance the appropriations out of direct taxes in the form of inheritance, corporation, and income levies directed at the higher brackets.

But direct relief is likewise a problem for the "relief workers" themselves, in a double sense. In the first place, the low wage level of relief work (e.g., the WPA) makes supplementary relief in many cases imperative. Secondly, such institutions as the WPA are temporary in character. The projects extend over comparatively short periods of time, and when they are completed the relief workers are again thrown out of jobs. Thus the unemployed organizations proper must take the lead in promoting the organization of the relief workers, and must closely integrate the relief work demands with the unemployed demands in general.

WPA—Attack on Relief Standards
In fact, one of the primary purposes of the WPA must be understood as an indirect attack on relief standards. This must be resisted at every point: by fighting against the wage levels of the WPA itself, by preventing lowering of direct relief in shifting the unemployed from one role to another, by demanding supplementary relief, by insisting on immediate transfer to adequate relief when a project ends, etc.

However, from another point of view, not less important, the WPA program constitutes a major attack on general wage levels, particularly the union levels in the building trades. And in this direction, the WPA, and relief work generally, become a direct problem for the trade unions, as, from the other direction, the WPA is a problem for the unemployed organizations. Thus the trade unions must be brought into the struggle for the organizing and strengthening of the relief workers, and for the lifting of WPA and other relief wages to union levels.

As has already been pointed out, however, the WPA, like any other given form of relief work, is temporary by its very nature. The struggles centering around the WPA, the present feature-point of the Administration unemployed program, must therefore be made part of the broader struggle for the advancement of the position of the unemployed, for higher direct relief, for unemployment and social insurance, and for large scale public works. This last point is of especial importance in looking forward to the next period, and has been seriously neglected by the labor movement generally. It is true that genuine public works cannot be handled in a scientific and large-scale manner by a capitalist state. But sufficient pressure can accomplish at least something in this field. At present, the public works program of the government has receded into the background along with the advance of WPA. The housing program, about which there has been such constant ballyhoo, still remains almost entirely on paper, scattered in confusion among more than a dozen governmental agencies.

The demand for a large scale public works program must be brought forward sharply and forced upon the next Congress. This demand must distinguish public works clearly from temporary relief work, and above all must fight against the conception of "security wages." Its central feature should be low-rental housing directly subsidized by the Federal government. Such a demand, supported primarily by independent class action, will do much to expose the demagogic, hollow and wholly reactionary character of the Roosevelt relief program, and can play a prominent part in a genuine advance for the entire unemployed movement, and through it for the working class as a whole.

Texas Jobless Face Hunger

Talk of General WPA Strike
Against this latest and most vicious onslaught of Roosevelt the 2nd, the unemployed of Texas are struggling manfully in a rather unorganized fashion. All over this vast area, there are occurring small conflicts on projects which are significant of a growing resentment even if they are ignored by the state press. In Shelby County, on the Louisiana border, the workers refused to dig ditches in the sticky mud until they were provided with longer shovels. When relief was temporarily discontinued in Wichita Falls several months ago, the city officials became so alarmed over the prospects of a mass uprising that they dropped all their duties to rustle food and clothing.

On every project of any size in Texas the workers are muttering of a general relief strike. Strike against the shameful wage scale of $33 to $68 per month; reduce the working hours to 70 per month in order that every needy person may have employment—these are the sentiments expressed when the men knock off work to eat their cold, soggy lunches.

Learning Solidarity
Most revealing of all is the increased solidarity between the unions and the unemployed organizations. During the past year, the unemployed have rallied to the picket-lines, preventing the more backward of their number from breaking a successive series of strikes. Negroes, Mexicans and whites, forgetting for the moment the blinding prejudices inculcated by the ruling class, and fighting a common battle—perhaps the first dim outline of the revolutionary pattern!

The younger group in the Texas Federation of Labor is fighting the old guard in a demand for an immediate general strike on all projects, to be reinforced by the collective strength of the trade unions. Spurred by misery as well as the promise of union support, the unemployed of Texas are becoming less demoralized, less ready to acquiesce in the whims of well-paid class workers. They are looking at the future and determining to live!

Pa. Jobless Organizations Unite in Statewide Action

relief administration's jam-crowded lodging arrangements, the delegates slept in the capitol building itself Saturday night. One of the delegates, the father of a family of 13 living on the miserable relief orders, died of a heart attack on the second day. The heart attack was brought on by undernourishment.

Considerable progress along the line of united front action was achieved at the conference despite a number of obstacles due mainly to the usual splitting activities of the Stalinists and their Communist Party-controlled organizations.

The first step toward a statewide united front of the unemployed in Pennsylvania was initiated by the Pennsylvania Unemployed League last September. In a perfectly loyal and correct united front procedure the P.U.L. invited the Pennsylvania Security League, the Allegheny County Unemployed Citizens League, the Communist Party-dominated Unemployment Councils and several lesser organizations to sponsor a joint conference in Allentown on September 11. The conference met, decided on a program of action and voted to reconvene in Harrisburg on September 20. On September 20 a joint committee presented the case of the jobless before the State Emergency Relief Board. On September 21 the conference elected Lester W. Heckman of the P.U.L. as its Continuations Secretary. It was agreed upon adjournment that all further united front activities were to be carried on through the Continuations Secretary.

On October 10 the organization again cooperated in a loyal united front before the Works Progress Administration in Harrisburg. All of these steps, besides helping to build up the sentiment for united action, achieved substantial results for the workers in the form of wage increases on the projects throughout the whole state.

These moves toward statewide unity of the unemployed have been supplemented recently by the negotiations for national unity carried on by the N.U.L. and the Workers Alliance of America. At this point the Stalinists began an open campaign to undermine the progress of the national unity negotiations and to disrupt the united front that had been achieved in the state.

A Stalinist Coup
Through the unemployed organizations they control in Lancaster and York, they pulled off a regular coup d'état in the "Inter-County Unemployed Alliance and Works Division." The latter organization, composed of unemployed units in several Eastern counties, elected as its regular Chairman and Secretary Harry Alexander and Daniel Hartman, respectively.

At a regular meeting of the governing body last month, the Stalinist George Wade of Lancaster and the Stalinist Bernard Child of York simply took advantage of the absence of the regular officers and usurped their places. With Communist Party members representing the Unemployment Councils and the Anthracite Workers Alliance present they decided, unauthorized, to call a state-wide conference in Harrisburg on December 7 and 8.

Without any authorization whatsoever, they added the name of the Pennsylvania Security League, some of whose locals belong to the Inter-County Alliance, as one of the sponsors of the call, besides the Councils and the other organizations mentioned. The P.S.L., caught off guard, apparently allowed itself to be so seduced, having in mind to steal a march in this manner on the Pennsylvania Unemployed League—a much more powerful organization and a more serious competitor than the Councils and the other Stalinist controlled organizations. Both of these organizations, the Stalinists and the Security League, thus agreed disloyally to leave the P.U.L. as well as the Allegheny County Unemployed Citizens League (affiliated with the W.A.A.) out of the picture.

Stalinists Alarm Security League
The Stalinists immediately resorted to their old "united front below" tactic. Individual C.P. members in several of the 86 locals of the P.U.L. brought in the call and moved for the election of delegates to the December 7-8 affair. The Councils displayed frantic activity in a campaign to pack the conference, at which they planned, as was evidenced later, to set up a new state organization. The Security Leaguers became alarmed by this maneuver and at the last minute sent out a hurried call to the P.U.L. and the Allegheny County U.C.L. to come to the conference.

After protesting against the procedure and receiving an apology and an explanation from the P.S.L., the state committee of the P.U.L. decided to send a delegation but informed the locals of the Stalinist maneuver and instructed them not to send any delegates.

The "Daily Worker" of December 6 reported "wide-spread revolt" in the P.U.L. against the action of the state committee, and informed its readers that any number of locals were sending delegates despite the decision. At the conference on Saturday exactly 2 unemployed local delegates, besides the state committee delegation, actually showed up. They were the Stalinist Dan Slinger from Allentown and the Stalinist Solomon from Easton. The "Daily Worker" lied as usual. The "united front from below" resulted in the usual fizzle.

Conference Opens in Disorder
The conference opened on the morning of December 7 amid such chaos and tumult as only the Stalinists can create. The "sponsoring" organizations could not agree among themselves on the selection of a temporary chairman, nor even on an agenda to propose to the conference. Every leading Stalinist in the state was present. Besides the familiar faces of Herbert Benjamin and Pat Tooley there were dozens of other C.P. functionaries. Yet on the very first vote taken, the election of the temporary chairman, the Stalinist Bernard Child was badly beaten.

The Stalinists had come there with an agenda prepared for one of their familiar "People's Congresses," with the usual Labor party plank, etc. The Security Leaguers proposed an agenda of "lobbying" and "petition" activities. Their arrangement committee could not even present a coherent report. Amidst a furious uproar, the conference elected a new arrangements committee, composed of three members of each of the organizations represented, to replace the old one. The new arrangements committee, with the participation of the P.U.L. delegates, worked out an agenda for concrete mass action. This agenda was finally accepted and the conference got down to business.

Mass Action Surprises C.P.
The Stalinists who had come to stage another one of their "people's" masquerades, were consequently entirely unprepared for any proposals for concrete action. This was clearly revealed in the committees, organized by the conference for the detailed work.

In the Special Session Committee, for instance, Anthony Ramuglia, representing the P.U.L., caught them entirely off guard with a proposal for the adoption of the five-point program of action outlined at the head of this article. Despite the fact that mass marches and statewide strikes do not fall in with their reformist line any longer, they were nevertheless not ready to offer any substitute. The Security Leaguers welcomed the lead because such organizations, amorphous in character and loose in policy, cannot help but follow when a positive program is offered. The proposal of the P.U.L. carried unanimously.

In the Resolutions Committee, P.U.L. delegate Sam Gordon offered resolutions in line with the program of action proposed by the P.U.L. The Stalinists Steve Nelson and John Parks argued against the resolutions for a mass march, for instance, on the grounds that this was too radical a step. What the workers needed was a Social Security People's Congress broad enough to bring them the support of the churches, the lodges, etc. Although they had a packed majority of the committee as against the lone representative of the P.U.L., they nevertheless backed down and changed the words "Social Security People's Congress" to "mass action." In the resolution they finally adopted. On the floor they discarded the resolution altogether and fell into line with extra zeal for the mass march to Harrisburg. ("Our line's been changed again.")

P.U.L. for Real United Front
On the question of organization, Gordon proposed a resolution setting up a continuations committee with equal representation for all the major organizations participating in the conference; each organization to have veto power; all decisions requiring a unanimous vote to be acted upon. Here the Stalinists showed their real hand. They proposed a resolution calling for the establishment of a permanent committee, with headquarters in Harrisburg, all decisions requiring a two-thirds majority to be acted upon. In the discussion, the P.U.L. delegate pointed out that the need for the moment was a loyal united front, that mutual confidence needed to be established first of all and that this could be accomplished only by action on which all parties were agreed. The C.P. followers merely railroaded through their resolution, which was in effect an attempt to set up a new state organization with their packed majority, as a competitor to the P.U.L. and the other state-wide organizations. The P.U.L. delegate was denied the right to make a minority report by the Stalinist majority.

When the question was brought up on the floor, this typically bureaucratic procedure of the Stalinists was defeated, the point of view of the P.U.L. being presented to the conference by Gordon. Mrs. Schermerhorn of the Pennsylvania Security League, in a strangely dictatorial fashion for an organization which professes to be democratic in character, rose to order the P.S.L. delegates not to vote on the question of unity at all. Ramuglia, of the P.U.L. followed to explain the stand of his organization. He characterized Mrs. Schermerhorn's stand as cold-blooded in view of the fact that the new problems facing the unemployed with the discontinuation of federal and state relief make genuine unity of action imperative for the workers. But, he went on to say, for genuine unity to be accomplished the establishment of mutual confidence and trust was necessary. That could be gained only by such steps as proposed in the report of delegate Gordon.

Benjamin Changes the Line
The Stalinists continued for a while to press their line of anti-unity machination amid an increasing tumult. It remained for Herbert Benjamin, as a fraternal del-

L.D. Trotsky's Wife Makes New Appeal for Son Sergei

"On June 1, 1935 I addressed a letter to the press in which I stated that my 27 year old son Sergei was arrested at the beginning of the year by Stalin with the sole aim of persecuting him for the political activity of Leon D. Trotsky. My son is a professor at one of the highest technical schools in Moscow. He has never engaged in political activity. He has been absolutely loyal to the Soviet power. He has never even been in correspondence with his father.

"This letter caused uneasiness even among the so-called 'friends of the Soviet Union.' Some of them sent inquiries to representatives of the Soviet authorities abroad and in Moscow. They were told that my son was 'not in prison' allegedly, but was under special surveillance to prevent him from having relations with his parents.

"As a matter of fact no such relations existed (precisely for Sergei's own safety) unless one counts the rare communications from my son and myself confined to matters of health.

"However, it appears that the information that my son is 'not in prison' is absolutely false. During the last three months I sent to the address of my son's wife a very modest sum in a bank check to aid her, if such were possible, in helping Sergei. Having had no receipt from her, I made several inquiries at the bank, all in vain. On November 6 the Norwegian Credit Bank informed me that 'the orders in question were not executed since the recipient could not be found at the address indicated.'

"So they have also arrested my son's wife, who works in a library, who is utterly free of any political activity, and who in recent years has been struggling against tuberculosis. 3 months ago this young woman was still at liberty and she was the ONLY person who could have concerned herself with helping Sergei. The only reason for this arrest could have been my attempt to send her money.

"Any international committee of honest and sincere people could establish without trouble that the arrest of my daughter-in-law was due to no other reason.

"I can only ask myself: How to explain this last arrest? Is it purely and simply out of feelings of vengeance, an arrest which does not have the slightest justification or political significance? Or is it that Stalin finds it necessary to hide from public opinion the REAL fate of my son? I cannot free myself of the thought that taking the new circumstances into consideration, the rumor circulated by the Soviet authorities that my son is 'not in prison' takes on a most fatal and irreparable significance. If Sergei is not in prison then where is he? And where now is his wife?

Our Revolutionary Heritage:

Dorr's Rebellion

By Leighton Rigby

AMERICAN WORKERS! WE MUST UNITE! The struggle for bread has thrown us together, has molded our several interests into common ones. In our fight against starvation we travel the same road. WE MUST BE COMRADES! United we are invincible! Together we can win freedom!

While we are divided, the controllers of wealth are our masters, our rulers. Can we doubt this when city governments always heed the call of the wealthy and send the police to crack our skulls? When the state governments despatch troops to mow us down at factory gates?

They talk of peace on earth, good will toward men. But there can be no peace while workers starve! There can be no good will toward men who force our children to go half naked, half fed!

AMERICAN WORKERS! Our own revolutionary heritage can serve to spur us onward. We have always fought against oppression! Let's shout out: REBIRTH, NOT RELIEF! ONWARD TO THE WORKERS' STATE AND CONSISTENT DEMOCRACY!!

New Oppression, New Revolts

When the workers and farmers who had fought for the "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" returned to their homes at the close of the War for Independence, they were not long in grasping their real position. Those "inalienable rights" were theirs only if they were freemen, had no debts and owned property.

Their oppressors were the money lenders, the land owners and speculators, the slaves and the industrialists. The oppressed were jailed for debts, branded for minor crimes, lashed and enslaved. To tell all the "punitive" measures in use would be to fill several columns.

In New Hampshire, several hundred workers and farmers, armed with muskets and clubs, marched on Exeter. They demanded of the general court a reduction in taxes and paper money with which to pay their debts. Troops drove them away.

In Vermont, Thomas Lee, a veteran who returned home to be quickly jailed for debts, led a march on Rutland, demanding that lawyers be excluded from the court. The marchers further insisted upon cancellation of their many debts and other relief measures. Again troops dispersed the oppressed.

Then came Shay's rebellion and, close on its heels, the "venerable" Constitution. It was not until fifty years had passed that the discussion entered into by the framers of the Constitution was revealed. The document was plainly inspired by the ruling classes to be used in their interests. What was said behind locked doors at the constitutional convention was not made public until after the aged James Madison had died. The reasons are obvious.

Freedom for Property Owners
But the Constitution failed to put an end to rebellions. Oppression still continued, as it does today, even if it was made legal in the prettified words. Slavery, white and black, was not abolished; debtors went to jail; foreclosures were not diminished; and suffrage was still confined to property holders. In short, the Constitution improved the workers' lot not one iota.

Most of the state constitutions, if not all, spoke of man's "free and equal" creation, but their bodies shamefully covered up the implications in the preambles. Property was the basis for the right to vote and hold office. In other words, all men were free and equal if they belonged to the ruling classes.

Dorr's Rebellion was a manifestation of militancy on the part of the non-landholding class in Rhode Island. Led by Thomas Wilson Dorr, this armed uprising brought about what could not have been accomplished in any other way. It brought the right to vote to the mechanics and cotton mill workers of Providence and Bristol, forcing the property holders to accept popular rule. The ruling class today is as unwilling to surrender its position. There is a lesson in Dorr's Rebellion.

Peaceful Action Unsuccessful
At least six peaceful attempts were made to scrap the old colonial charter of Rhode Island in favor of a new constitution. Each time the change was blocked, either by the voters (the property holders) or the legislature. Each try was more militant than the one before it, and by 1841 the workers were fully aroused. Mass meetings were held, and men marched.

Dorr was recognized as the leader of the movement, and it was on his orders that a constitutional convention was held on October 4. A constitution was drawn up and later submitted to the people as a whole. An overwhelming majority of the fourteen thousand who voted on the matter of adopting the People's Constitution cast favorable ballots, and on January 12, 1842, the People's Convention declared the constitution to be in effect.

But the legislature under the charter did not sit idly by through the growing storm. Late in March that body enacted the "Algerine" law, declaring all meetings such as the People's Convention illegal. Fines and imprisonment were provided.

Dual Government in R.I.
Disregarding the Algerine law, the workers held an election on April 18 under the People's Constitution. Dorr was elected governor, and on May 3 he was inducted into office. He delivered his inaugural address in an old foundry building which was the seat of the new govonly one way out.

The Armed Assault

On May 17, four hundred insurrectionists, led by Dorr, gained possession of two cannons and a few muskets. Late at night, they marched to seize the town arsenal. The guards refused admission to Dorr, and a battle ensued. The cannons proved ineffective, either because of mechanical defects or faulty operation. The fighting was mostly hand to hand, with occasional gunfire. Extreme darkness and a heavy fog made identification of opponents difficult. On the following day, Dorr was driven to Connecticut.

Again the workers tried on June 25. But martial law was declared, and the jails bulged with political prisoners. A price of five thousand dollars was put on the head of the People's governor.

Dorr returned to Providence on October 31 of the following year and was immediately arrested. He was faced by a jury made up of "Algerines," naturally hostile to him, and was sentenced to life imprisonment. In 1845 he was released because of popular resentment, although he steadfastly refused to swear allegiance to the state of Rhode Island. His citizenship was not restored until 1851.

The People's Constitution was maneuvered out of existence. Dorr had the satisfaction, however, of seeing a fairly acceptable substitute put in its place. The Constitution of 1843, replacing the colonial charter, embodied most of the things for which Dorr fought. It was drawn up and submitted to the voters because of Dorr's Rebellion, but it is probable that the manufacturers, rather than the workers themselves, had the busiest hands drafting it.

The Lines Cross
Apparently Thomas feels the sharp rightward turn of the Socialists equally bewildering. "Here we are confused," he said, "we are confused by the nature and the magnitude of the change, by the far point in the arch to which the pendulum has swung." As for Browder, the only thing that can be said in this respect is that he adhered to the present "line." In a bureaucratic system where leaders appear, not in their own rights or by virtue of their own political abilities but simply because they are the most consummate and most servile type of mediocrities, sufficiently flexible, however, to fit into this system, nothing else could be expected.

So Thomas argued for the Socialist road, in reality building up a case, not against Communism, but against its Stalinist emasculation. He quoted profusely from the "third period" position of the Socialists. Their official declarations aimed to "break-up the reformist unions," and to "destroy the American Federation of Labor." They "rejected any alliance with Social Democracy." One quotation read: "Therefore, to beat the enemy, the bourgeoisie, we must direct the main blow against its chief enemy of Communism, in the working class, against Social Democracy, against Social Fascism." To this there was no answer from Browder. An honest leader, when departing from such a position and going over to the exact opposite would, in any case, be obligated to admit the falsity of the past and explain to his following the reason for the change. But Browder made no such attempt. He made no attempt to defend the Communist road and he could not do so since the ideological baggage of Stalinism is now entirely devoid of any ideas of Communism.

tomorrow you may be unemployed.

Will they fight together? Yes! It was done before the WPA in the great Minneapolis strike—7,000 FERA and unemployed workers left projects and not only did not scab, but fought it out with the strikers on the picket line. They had their unemployed organization, the Minneapolis Central Council of Workers, with representatives on the Central Trades and Labor Council. In Toledo it was the unemployed and relief workers who salvaged the lost Auto-Lite strike and lifted the trade union movement of that city into its feet in one of the grandest battles in the history of American Labor.

IV. ORGANIZATION

Organization! It is indispensable; it is invincible! In the recent strike in early August in New York, its power carried the first strike of WPA workers to speedy victory—against General Johnson's threat and ultimatum: "This is a strike against the government, against the people of the United States." Result: Reduction of hours so as to bring the rates paid to the level of prevailing union scales. Why these results? Because the strike found instant response and spread—and unions supported it! Electrical workers local 3, carpenters local 2090, painters local 506, and bricklayers local 37. The WPA had threatened to set into motion the trade unions. Deeply, immeasurably significant! Even against the will of the reactionary leadership of the A. F. of L., the unemployment question makes its way into the unions through the WPA. Allentown; one month later: strike! Twenty-five labor organizations including the Central Trades and Labor Council endorsed the strike in public conference. Result: spread strike and won statewide victory of 10 per cent increase in wages and cut of hours from 140 per month to 120 per month.

Already numerous labor bodies have endorsed the fight for prevailing wage rates on the WPA projects. Thus far, it is true, there has been no national tie-up organizationally between the A. F. of L. and the WPA-Unemployed organizations. But in every strike that has taken place (either those led by unions and supported by unemployed-relief workers or vice-versa) delegates have been seated on Central Labor bodies or conferences that created joint executive organs have served the purpose. The logic and life of the struggles themselves solidified and joined the movements programatically and organizationally; and victor resulted almost invariably.

V. WHAT TO DO

How to organize the field? WPA thus far seems to be confined to the eastern and mid-western sections of the country, mostly in the larger cities. Almost universally the project local is the basis of organization—and seems to be the best for the coming period. They are tied up in the unemployed organizations with the unemployed "proper" through the central bodies. The experiences of the Workers Alliance of America and the National Unemployed League—the two large organizations of WPA-unemployed in the country, and the organizations that have led the past militant strikes—indicate that that is the form of organization.

The Significance of the Browder-Thomas Debate for the Revolutionary Movement

By ARNE SWABECK

The complete stenographic report, printed in the Daily Worker for Dec. 14, fully confirms the unusual character of the Browder-Thomas debate, held in the New York Madison Square Garden on November 27. It reveals in some respects a historical reversal of roles of the two parties: The Communist Party now standing on the platform of social-patriotism while the Socialist Party, endeavoring to rid itself of its right wing ballast, is moving in a leftward direction and its representative presenting the important arguments in the debate.

Norman Thomas defended militantly the position of the Socialist Party. It was, of course, not the position of the Social Democracy of 1914 nor the position of the Old Guard. Thomas spoke from the point of view of the Socialist workers who have moved leftward and attacked the perfidious social-patriotism of Stalinism. Undoubtedly he was more to the left than usual, blithely accused by Browder of using phrases in the style of Trotsky. "It is certainly something new in the world when Socialists find obstacles to the united front in a supposed move to the right by the Communists," said Browder. He was bewildered and unable to understand that Socialists could actually have learned from the disastrous international working class defeats and draw certain conclusions tending in a revolutionary direction.

Apparently Thomas feels the sharp rightward turn of the Socialists equally bewildering. "Here we are confused," he said, "we are confused by the nature and the magnitude of the change, by the far point in the arch to which the pendulum has swung." As for Browder, the only thing that can be said in this respect is that he adhered to the present "line." In a bureaucratic system where leaders appear, not in their own rights or by virtue of their own political abilities but simply because they are the most consummate and most servile type of mediocrities, sufficiently flexible, however, to fit into this system, nothing else could be expected.

So Thomas argued for the Socialist road, in reality building up a case, not against Communism, but against its Stalinist emasculation. He quoted profusely from the "third period" position of the Socialists. Their official declarations aimed to "break-up the reformist unions," and to "destroy the American Federation of Labor." They "rejected any alliance with Social Democracy." One quotation read: "Therefore, to beat the enemy, the bourgeoisie, we must direct the main blow against its chief enemy of Communism, in the working class, against Social Democracy, against Social Fascism." To this there was no answer from Browder. An honest leader, when departing from such a position and going over to the exact opposite would, in any case, be obligated to admit the falsity of the past and explain to his following the reason for the change. But Browder made no such attempt. He made no attempt to defend the Communist road and he could not do so since the ideological baggage of Stalinism is now entirely devoid of any ideas of Communism.

"Come to Jesus"

Browder had thoughts only for an escape from the pointed charges made by Thomas. Throughout the debate he reiterated continuously in the most garrulous, cringing and grovelling fashion his plea for unity: "Why can't we unite on a wide campaign? . . . Why can't we work jointly in these mass organizations? . . . Why can't we unite forces to begin building? . . . Why don't we do it?" Why, on why—in the style of the evangelist—why don't you come to Jesus tonight? Only the deepest feeling of revulsion could arise from the cringing tone of this supposed spokesman for communism, repugnant and distasteful to upright, conscious workers.

Browder pleaded for a united front not only for the everyday struggles of the workers, but also for the defeat of the class enemy: "Comrades," he said, "let me put the question sharply: Between today and a future victory of Fascism in the United States there stands historically only one thing—a powerful people's anti-Fascist front, a Farmer-Labor Party."

No, this is false to the core: Between today and a future victory of Fascism there stands first of all the historic necessity of a revolutionary party and a revolutionary policy. Only with this essential prerequisite can a united front defeat Fascism. And whatever may be said in favor of one side, it is certain that neither of the parties whose representatives met in this debate present such a policy or constitute such a party.

Only with this essential prerequisite can a united front defeat Fascism. And whatever may be said in favor of one side, it is certain that neither of the parties whose representatives met in this debate present such a policy or constitute such a party.

People's Front
To Norman Thomas this new "line" of the C. P. appeared bewildering and unreal. He undoubtedly had in mind the frantic pleas for unity. Otherwise the new "line" stood out in a very real sense in every issue touched upon in the debate. The most important of these issues deserve special comment here.

Some caustic criticism of the people's front was offered by Thomas, motivated in the main by his doubts of the "sincerity" of his opponents. The People's Front in France he considered, however, to be a great achievement. In view of this it seems strange that he should find faults with the New York C. P. election platform from which he quoted the demands for "a people's front, uniting workers, farmers, unemployed, professionals, small business men, Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Socialists, Democrats, Republicans." On a small scale, and adapted to the American scene, this platform merely proposed what the people's front in France actually is. The difference is only in magnitude; the policy, with its confusion and deception, is the same. In France the Radical Socialist Party, whose leader is Herriot, one of the senior partners in the Laval government, gives its own peculiar political nuance to the people's front. This party still represents today that political instrument of the big bourgeoisie which is best adapted to the traditions and the prejudices of the petty-bourgeoisie. Its program is the national defense of imperialist France.

The Franco-Soviet Pact

Thomas did assert that it troubled him a little to see his "Communist friends make more love to Herriot than to Leon Blum." This love-making, however, flows from definite political considerations and from the kind of political considerations which have now become the guiding line for Soviet foreign policy under the Stalin regime. In this instance, most particularly, the considerations of the Franco-Soviet pact. Its contradiction with the class interests of the proletariat should be apparent, for Thomas was absolutely correct when he complained about the love making to Herriot. To the extent he did, his criticism of the Franco-Soviet pact he was also correct. But he did not nearly say all that should have been said. He reminded the audience of the Stalin-Laval communiqué to the effect that: "M. Hoare-Laval 'peace' plan for the dismemberment of Ethiopia. Sanctions, in the thieves jargon of diplomacy, means war. And the League of Nations, to which the Soviet Union is affiliated, is beginning to assume its proper function as the general staff of world imperialism."

What were the positions presented on the question of the defense of the Soviet Union? On this point Browder spoke without equivocation. Picturing an attack by Germany and Japan upon the Soviet Union, he asked: "Will the militant Socialists adopt a position of neutrality? Will they advocate the slogan 'Keep America Out of War?' Impossible! In this exclamation Browder nominated himself as recruiting-sergeant for "Uncle Sam"; and it did not make matters any better that he misnamed this as "patriotism" to the cause of the working class, patriotism to the only country of Socialism today."

This only gave Thomas an opportunity to ask: "Since when have Marxists learned the doctrine of the State so as to believe that workers in minority parties can turn capitalist armies into red armies before those armies have been defeated as in Czarist Russia? . . . The chief consideration is to organize the workers against capitalism, against fascism, against war, for world-wide Socialism." Yes, this is the chief consideration. We may ask further, would the United States under any condition enter into a war for the defense of the Soviet Union, for the defense of the country of Socialism? Obviously not. It would enter a war only for its own imperialist purposes, and to take the position, taken by Browder, could mean nothing else but to throw the working class support behind the government controlled by the Morgans and the Rockefellers for the furtherance of these imperialist purposes. These people have entirely forgotten that the enemy is at home. And besides, the only way really to defend the Soviet Union is to fight against one's own bourgeoisie and to organize in the process of this fight the world revolutionary party that will be capable of making an end to capitalism.

On the final question of importance in this debate, namely the proletarian dictatorship, it might be said that Thomas had a certain justification for asking Browder, in view of the latter's boast of "the final and irrevocable victory of socialism on one sixth of the earth," if Russia is still so weak that she cannot extend civil liberties now within her own borders. But Thomas displayed equally the falsity of his own position in regards to this cardinal question of Marxism in arguing against a "party dictatorship." A revolutionary party can have no interests separate and apart from those of the working class and consequently it can have no interests opposed to those of the working class. Nor is this what has taken place in the Soviet Union. On the contrary. The party is strangled by a bureaucracy that has usurped all power to itself. Hence the struggle of the revolutionists is for the rebuilding of the party of Lenin and Trotsky.

The Madison Square Garden debate saw Norman Thomas as presenting the important arguments on every fundamental point, militantly, critical and arguing from the left against the reactionary position of Browder. As said in the beginning of this article, this indicates in some respects a historical reversal of roles of the two parties. But the Socialist Party has so far taken only one step leftward.

Jingo Browder

What were the positions presented on the question of the defense of the Soviet Union? On this point Browder spoke without equivocation. Picturing an attack by Germany and Japan upon the Soviet Union, he asked: "Will the militant Socialists adopt a position of neutrality? Will they advocate the slogan 'Keep America Out of War?' Defense Forces Rally Against Anti-Labor Repression

Appeal Denied Cal. Class War Victims

Stop Limping! Start Walking!

Mpls. Labor Protests Jailing of Al Russel

Norman Mini, Prisoner 57606 in San Quentin, and his fellow-workers who were sentenced with him to 14 years for union activities, is being denied the right to appeal his case, according to a statement just issued by Herbert Solow, Secretary of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee.

Mini, who was charged with criminal syndicalism but was guilty only of union activity and opposition to the existing social order, was the victim of an anti-union drive organized by the California State Chamber of Commerce and the Associated Farmers, Inc. These organizations, which, as the N.S.A.C. has proven, have a secret fund to finance the prosecution of union organizers throughout California, are using their influence on the courts to prevent Mini and the other Sacramento prisoners from upsetting the illegal verdict dictated against them by reactionary forces which controlled the Sacramento jury.

No Transcript Provided

The entire Sacramento appeal is now being held up, no copy of the transcript being provided by the state. As a result, the attorneys in the case can not prepare their briefs and no date has been set to hear the appeal.

The Sacramento trial ended April 1, with the conviction of eight defendants. Immediately after the conviction, Juror Howard S. McIntire gave to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense an affidavit affirming that the verdict was the result of an illegal horse-trade.

Judge Dal M. Lemmon refused a motion for a new trial and sent the prisoners to San Quentin and Tehachapi. The court reporter failed to prepare the transcript within the time set by law, and the judge gave him several extensions. The appeal attorneys could not begin work on the transcript before the transcript was turned over by the court clerk to the country clerk in October.

The law of California provides that the County Clerk should give one copy of the transcript to the Attorney General, another to the prosecutor, and a third to the defendant or his attorney. The clerk immediately sent out the two copies marked for the state officials, but made no move to send a copy to the defense.

I.L.D. Splits Defense

Due to the first refusal of the International Labor Defense to make a joint appeal fight along with the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the appeal is split into two parts. Norman Mini is represented by Attorney Raymond W. Henderson of Bakersfield, California's leading legal fighter against criminal syndicalism prosecution. Henderson is retained by the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, which includes not only the N.P.L.D., but also the League for Industrial Democracy, the General Defense Committee and ten other national organizations.

Several of the other prisoners are represented by Leo Gallagher, who has been retained for their appeal by the I.L.D. The situation is additionally complicated by the fact that a number of the prisoners belonging to the Communist Party and advised on defense tactics by the I.L.D., represent themselves rather than have an attorney.

The Sacramento County Clerk refuses to deliver the one available copy of the transcript either to Gallagher or to Henderson, on the grounds that he would then be responsible for not having delivered it to whichever one he omitted. Moreover, he will not deliver it even to Gallagher and Henderson jointly because, he contends, he might then be held responsible by those I.L.D. defendants who are not technically represented by Gallagher.

Court Nullifies Writ

The court clerk refuses to provide any extra copies of the transcript, and the county clerk, hiding behind the fact that the law says the copy shall be delivered to the defendant (singular) will do nothing to make the court clerk provide extra copies.

With the approval of Attorney Gallagher, Attorney Henderson is now going to the Supreme Court of California in an effort to break open the jam in which the Sacramento Appeal Committee now finds itself.

Henderson recently obtained from the District Court of Appeals in Sacramento a mandamus ordering the county clerk to turn over the transcript to him. The clerk then came to the district court and had the mandamus declared null and void. He argued that he could not determine who is "the defendant" and therefore could not legally turn the transcript over to anybody. The court conceded to him, and he is sitting tight again. Unless Henderson wins his fight in the Supreme Court, the whole case is tied up and innocent men must sit in prison because they are being denied the right of appeal.

Such a situation, somewhat similar in a general way to the situation Angelo Herndon found himself in when the U. S. Supreme Court refused on flimsy technical grounds to hear an appeal, would be very much to the satisfaction of the California employers' organizations who plotted this frame-up in the first place and who are now doing all they can to make the illegal, railroaded convictions stick. Henderson would then go into court and seek to free Mini on the grounds that he is "guaranteed" the right to appeal by the laws of California, but that he is being denied it in effect by the failure of the State to provide Mini or his attorney with a copy of the transcript of trial proceedings.

Whole Defense Affected

Should Henderson win this legal battle at any stage, it would be a great victory for the entire defense. The I.L.D. and its defendants would benefit along with Mini. Should the State of California, pressed by the organized employers, refuse to make an appeal possible, the issue will have to go to the U. S. Supreme Court. In any event, the California bosses are compelling a long delay in the appeal, forcing innocent workers to sit in prison even without due process of law. The judge, of course, has refused bail despite the outrageous delay in the appeal proceedings caused by the attitude of the State itself.

It goes without saying that the employers' gratification at this situation could have been prevented if the I.L.D. had agreed to a unified defense. In that case, all the defendants would have been represented either by one attorney or by joint attorneys, and cooperation would have been simple.

As it is, the fact that Gallagher has agreed to cooperate with Henderson in sharing the one copy of the transcript if they can ever get it out of the county clerk's hands, does not help, because even a joint application by Henderson and Gallagher would be futile, since several of the I.L.D. defendants are technically not represented by Gallagher.

I.L.D. Passive

The obstructive attitude of the I.L.D. is further illustrated by the fact that they play down the news of this hold-up by the State. What little news they print about it is distorted in order to conceal the fact that the N.S.A.C. and Henderson have already gotten busy breaking the log-jam, while the I.L.D. forces remain passive, except for publishing a pamphlet devoted in part to lying attacks on the N.P.L.D., Mini, and his trial attorney, Albert Goldman.

The I.L.D.'s "united front" defense conference does nothing to support Attorney Henderson's fight. In addition to pushing the legal fight on the question of the transcript, the N.S.A.C. continues its work rallying mass support for the Sacramento prisoners. An appeal is being sent to unions throughout the country asking them to adopt resolutions to be sent to the California officials demanding the freedom of the eight Sacramento union organizers.

The Los Angeles branch of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee has just held a mass meeting on the case in Walker Auditorium. A large crowd of workers attended to hear Dr. Harry W. Laidler, chairman of the N.S.A.C. Due to the added legal steps necessitated by the tie-up of the appeal, the N.S.A.C. needs additional funds. Funds and resolutions calling for the release of the prisoners should be sent at once to the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, Room 707, 41 Union Square, New York City.

Stop Limping! Start Walking!

THE class struggle goes on, and the executive arm of the employing class, the State and all its institutions, cracks down on the workers of America.

Sacramento, Minneapolis, Atlanta, Harlan, Fargo, Brooklyn, from coast to coast, police, judges, vigilantes combine to persecute, not only revolutionists, but union organizers, strikers, unemployed asking for relief, and even "Modern Democrats," who dare to buck a Tammanyized city administration in Tampa. Illegal arrests, frame-up trials, denial of appeals on technical grounds, abduction, beating, murder . . . all in the name of justice, democracy, law and order.

The news reports on this page indicate, not only the need for a powerful unified defense movement, but the fact that for the first time in many years some measure of unity is being achieved on defense issues. Joint committees are functioning in the Sacramento, Tampa, Herndon, Harlan and other cases. Each committee includes several working class currents. Some already have signal victories to their credit.

We greet this development as a heartening sign of progress in the defense field. Credit belongs to the N.P.L.D., which we endorse and support, for the important part it has played in promoting this movement. Unified defense activities were initiated locally in New York by the N.P.L.D. in the victorious Robbins-Gras campaign, and on a national scale in the National Sacramento Appeal campaign.

Today there exist a whole series of united defense committees on separate cases. But almost all of them limp a bit organizationally. The I.L.D. is absent from the National Sacramento Appeal Committee because it refuses to unify the defense. The I.L.D. is not on the Tampa Committee because the Socialist Initiators of the Committee have refused so far to invite them. The I.L.D. is absent from the Kentucky Miners' Committee because the Harlan prisoners have not yet forgiven the Communist Party its wrecking tactics in Harlan County a few years ago. Both the I.L.D. and the Socialist defense forces are missing from the Ferrero-Sallitto Committee.

The General Defense Committee (I.W.W.) and the N.P.L.D. alone are in all these joint bodies. This is an intolerable situation. The amputated character of most of these committees detracts from their strength and efficiency. The fact that in a number of the committees—Herndon and Kentucky—the control of the policy is vested in only one organization, with the others acting as auxiliaries, has rendered difficult the coordination of the legal work with all the militant mass campaigns.

Despite these and other weaknesses in organization and policy, the new development of joint defense work is a step in the right direction. But it is time these various committees stopped limping along with one leg shorter than the other, and began to march together toward one unified defense organization.

United Front Proposed on 'Scottsboro'

Moves are under way toward setting up a new joint committee to handle the Scottsboro case in its next stage.

The boys have been reindicted and will be tried in a short time. It seems clear that all or almost all of them have repudiated the I.L.D. as far as legal work is concerned, and have put their faith in Samuel S. Leibowitz, called into the case two years ago by the I.L.D., which was later kicked out by him.

Leibowitz has had the formal backing of the "American Scottsboro Committee," created by him, a group of Negro clergymen, and Publisher Davis of the scab Amsterdam News. The State of Alabama, through its "unofficial spokesman," correspondent John Temple Graves of the New York Times, has offered Leibowitz a deal: the boys will not be killed if all radicals, liberals and northerners get out of the case, and if it is defended as a straight rape case which it never was.

Roger Baldwin of the American Civil Liberties Union has addressed to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense a letter which asks whether the N.P.L.D. will consider an invitation to enter a united front on the Scottsboro case along with the I.L.D., the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, the I.L.D. and the A.C.L.U.

The N.P.L.D. National Executive Board had not yet acted on the invitation at the time of going to press, but when interviewed by a NEW MILITANT reporter, George Novack of the N.P.L.D. Board, made the following statement:

"We will certainly go on aiding the Scottsboro boys in any way we can, and that means considering any invitation to sit in a joint committee. We are anxious to see the exact basis of the proposed committee. On our Board are half a dozen people who were active in the Scottsboro case almost from the start.

"More than two years ago they raised their voices on behalf of the idea of broadening the Scottsboro defense to include Socialists,

Three Harlan Miners Freed

After a four and a half year's fight by the General Defense Committee of the I.W.W., three of the seven Harlan miners serving life sentences in the famous "Battle of Evarts" cases have had their sentences commuted by Governor Laffoon. The three released on parole are eighty-year old Bill Tightower, William Hudson and Elzie Phillips, a Negro miner.

New evidence and affidavits proving the innocence of the men, as well as backed up by a strong pressure campaign upon the Governor, finally forced him to free the prisoners. On announcing the commutations, Laffoon is reported to have said: "I won't do any more on the Harlan miners' cases. Pre-empted the ball rolling by releasing three of the men. Let the next Governor show where he stands."

In other words, Laffoon is passing the buck to his successor. The recently organized Kentucky Miners' Defense Committee, comprising the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the League for Industrial Democracy, the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners together with the General Defense Committee, has launched a drive to make the incoming governor release the other four miners still in Frankfort Penitentiary by Christmas.

The National Executive Board of the N.P.L.D. sent the following telegram to Governor Chandler Monday:

"One important test of the labor attitude of any new Kentucky governor is his attitude toward the four innocent Harlan miners now in Frankfort prison. Our members throughout the country join us in calling for an immediate unconditional pardon. We want the Harlan miners out by Christmas."

All labor organizations are urged to send similar telegrams to Governor Harry Chandler, Frankfort, Kentucky. Only further organized effort and persistent mass pressure can turn the partial victory into a complete one.

Once all the joint committees include the four defense organizations—the N.P.L.D., the L. and S. D., the I.L.D. and the G.D.C.—everybody with a sense of the practical would begin to think about centralizing the work of these various bodies. If the combined forces of these groups could first be thrown together into the struggle on behalf of these outstanding cases, on the basis of a twin policy of sound legal action and organized mass support along militant lines, the American working class would come a long way forward from the state of internal disunity in the defense field which accompanied "the third period" of Stalinism.

The eventual creation of a militant mass defense organization, embracing all the organized groupings in the labor movement, has been advocated by the N.P.L.D. for almost two years. We have supported their efforts to build such an organization from the very first.

Who, then, is blocking the road? First of all, the Communist Party. Without going into the past, let us look at the present. Last week the Daily Worker carried an editorial hailing the triumph of the united defense movement in the Herndon case and urging the extension of this defense unity to the Tampa, Terre Haute and Scottsboro cases, cases in which the victims are members of the Socialist or Communist parties.

But the Stalinists failed to mention the skeleton in their closet, the Sacramento case, in which Norman Mini, a member of the Workers Party, is involved. Can anyone take seriously the Stalinist call for defense unity so long as they continue to slander and split the defense movement in the Sacramento case?

The Socialist Party must also bear part of the responsibility for the present chaotic state of affairs. In the first place they refuse to admit the Stalinist defense forces into several joint committees. In the second, they violated, without explanation, the agreement they had signed with the N.P.L.D. and other labor groups, for the creation of a non-partisan labor defense, and proceeded to form a partisan "Labor and Socialist Defense Committee."

The drive for industrial unionism, if it is seriously pushed, will bring with it in the not far distant future a new outbreak of labor struggles. Workers will be hounded. Defense will be needed. If the working class is to be in the best possible position to handle these problems, the existing cooperation among the various defense bodies must be extended and the policy tightened up in the direction of militant action.

In the Theatre Union's drama, "Mother," the Russian workers sing:

"Good! We have the crust,
But where's the loaf?"

We believe we speak for every class war prisoner when we say just this about the state of the defense movement today.

Mass Meet to Fight Danger To Herndon

The State of Georgia having filed an appeal against Judge Hugh M. Dorsey's decision upsetting the chain-gang sentence in the Angelo Herndon case, the Negro victim of the Georgia reactionaries, is again in danger.

The fight on Herndon's behalf launched by the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense, of which the N.P.L.D. is an active constituent, is being continued. A mass meeting has been called for Friday night, Dec. 20, in St. Nicholas Arena, Sixth Ave. and 66th St., at 8 P.M. Herndon will be one of the speakers. Julius Hochman, chairman of the Joint Board of Dressmakers, will preside.

The action of the State of Georgia in appealing against Dorsey's decision that, because of "vagueness," the 1896 insurrection law used against Herndon is unconstitutional, reflects the intensity of political differences within the ruling class of Georgia itself.

Dorsey's action took place against a background of mass agitation which became effective after the I.L.D. decided to abandon its monopoly on the Herndon case and call in aid. The Joint Committee brought new elements into action for the first time, and the Herndon issue began to be popular.

Neither the Roosevelt nor the Talmadge faction of the Georgia Democratic Party wants to take the responsibility of Herndon being on the chain gang when the fight for the 1936 Presidential nomination, which each one covets in the name of "liberty," begins seriously. Consequently, Dorsey, while maintaining that there should be a law on the statute books which, because it is the opposite of vague, will put all radicals and labor organizers on the chain gang, let Herndon go.

The State solicitor, representing a rival faction, appeals the case. Each faction is trying to put on the other the onus of keeping Herndon on the chain gang. The liberty of an innocent man is thus nothing but a political football for Georgia demagogues.

His freedom can come only through the pressure of the masses.

Resentment Nationwide in Tampa Case

TAMPA, Fla.—With labor protests throughout the country pouring in on him, the mayor of Tampa has suspended six policemen and one fireman involved in the murder of Joseph Shoemaker, and the sadistic beating of S. D. Rogers and E. F. Pouliot, Socialists and members of the Workers Alliance, unemployed organization.

Organized by the Committee for the Defense of Civil Rights in Tampa, the labor protests included a warning by President William Green of the A. F. of L. that the next union convention, scheduled for Tampa, would be moved elsewhere if the outrage is whitewashed. To put teeth into this warning, the Committee is contacting all international and local unions for passage of resolutions directed at the Tampa authorities.

Taking no stock in promises of an investigation by local authorities, the Committee for the Defense of Civil Rights in Tampa has sent its own investigators to the spot.

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the League for Industrial Democracy, the General Defense Committee, the Dressmakers Joint Board and other organizations are the constituents of the Committee.

Reverse Fargo Convictions

FARGO, N. Dakota.—The State Supreme Court has reversed the convictions of three Fargo teamsters' union leaders, but upheld the convictions of fifteen union members, in a long-delayed decision handed down last week.

The eighteen trade unionists had been convicted on the charge of rioting, arising out of a bitterly fought strike last winter and spring. On the pretext of seeking pickets who had violated the local ordinance, police and vigilantes attacked the union hall with tear gas and guns and arrested over ninety strikers. The North Dakota House of Representatives subsequently adopted a resolution denouncing the raid and those judges who had granted injunctions in violation of the state anti-injunction law.

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense provided attorneys and funds to successfully fight the injunctions. Francis Heisler, noted Chicago attorney, was provided by the N.P.L.D. as chief counsel representing the strikers in numerous cases, and carried to the Supreme Court an appeal against the conviction of the eighteen union members.

President William Cruden, Secretary Austin Swalde, and Hugh Hughes of Local 173 were those whose sentences were reversed. A new trial has been ordered.

This is the first time in four years in any state, that there have been any reversals in a labor rioting conviction.

FARGO, N. D., Dec. 15.—At a meeting of the Fargo Branch of the N.P.L.D. today it was decided to give full support to the fight of the convicted Fargo strikers for freedom. The fact that the Supreme Court has reversed the sentences against the three leaders of Local 173 does not satisfy the workers of Fargo or the N.P.L.D., which organized the defense fight. An appeal will be made for a rehearing of the case. Attorney Francis Heisler will have charge of the legal work. It is believed that the prosecution, angered by the resistance of the workers, will try to re-convict the three union leaders freed by the Supreme Court. The union leaders and rank and file, however, are solid in this fight for the liberation of all the strikers.

Russell Sentenced To Four Months in Hosiery Strike Case

Ellis and Swanson, Strutwear Strikers, Get Six Months in Workhouse; N.P.L.D. To Appeal Cases

BULLETIN
(By Wire to New Militant)

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 23.—Labor Judge Molyneux sentenced Al Russell to four months in the work house and Ellis and Swanson, Strutwear strikers to six months each for their militant activities in the strike.

All cases are being appealed by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the legal representative of the defendants.

Vernon Simonson, Strutwear striker, was arrested today and is being held on charges of criminal contempt.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 23.—On Thursday, Dec. 18, the trial of the three arrested Strutwear pickets (David Ellis, Lawrence Swanson and Al Russell) got under way in the Federal Court building in Minneapolis, with Judge Molyneux presiding. All three young boys are charged with the same offense, criminal contempt of court, growing out of the November 29 disturbances at the Strutwear hosiery plant, where federal marshals attempted to move merchandise from the struck plant to a railway siding, where the goods were to be shipped to the bogus "Peacock Co." in St. Joseph, Mo.

But a day or so before the trial commenced, a bill was introduced in the state legislature calling for an appropriation of $100,000 to investigate strikes and riots in Minneapolis. It is considered unlikely that any such bill will pass this session. Later the city council of Minneapolis passed by a vote of 14 to 11 a motion calling for a congressional investigation of circumstances surrounding the federal replevin action of the Peacock Knitting Company against the Strutwear strikers. "In which a writ of replevin was obtained through an alleged fraud on the court to permit the Strutwear Co. . . to evade the anti-injunction law and the Wagner-Connelly act, and to deprive strikers of their legal rights."

Russell Supporters Pack Court
When the trial opened Thursday morning, the courtroom was packed with workers and leading figures in the local labor movement. Dozens of Strutwear striker buttons were seen in the audience. Attorney Francis Heisler of Chicago, who, with Attorney Gilbert Carlson of St. Paul, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense had secured to defend Al Russell, addressed the court for an hour or so, asking that all charges against the pickets be dropped, on the grounds that the jurisdiction of the court had been obtained by fraud. Attorney Heisler gave the background of the so-called Peacock Company in some detail, citing the fact that this company was formed on Nov. 8, that none of the three stockholders knew much about it, that it had no official residence, etc. Heisler charged that the writ of replevin was entered into to circumvent the anti-injunction act and the Wagner labor disputes act. "There has been an offense committed against this court," he said, "but not by the defendants in this case." In denying the motion, the judge admitted that there may have been fraud, but held that even so, the U. S. marshals had been ordered by the court to move the goods, and that any attempt to interfere with this process was a criminal offense.

In the afternoon various federal marshals testified to having seen the three defendants at the scene of the disorder. They claimed that 126 pickets had stoned the three trucks as they were being escorted into the plant by eight deputy marshals, six police squad cars and

A Xmas Gift for A. Sloan

Ohio Chevrolet Workers 'Thank' G.M. Head for Empty Christmas Tables

To the accompaniment of blaring newspaper publicity, General Motors has climbed on the Christmas bandwagon and out of the generosity of its great strike-breaking, labor-hating heart, has presented its employees with a $25 Christmas bonus. The 900 laid-off employees of the Toledo General Motors Chevrolet plant have written the following letter of Christmas cheer to Alfred Sloan for his magnanimous deed:

"Dec. 23, 1935

"Sir: It is with extreme satisfaction that we have learned through every channel of publicity possible of your act of incredible generosity in giving a $25 Christmas bonus check to the men now employed in the Chevrolet Motor Ohio Co. plant here.

"There are those who unkindly have termed this bonus for Xmas as a sort of bribe (you know that it is the first time that General Motors has ever given any Xmas present to its employees in Toledo) in your alleged drive to split unionism in the Toledo plant and make those who are now working forget those of us who you recently laid off and are now outside your gates as a result of your 'economy' program. This, you will of course say, is all wet. It would not be either, of course, the fact that wages in your plant are so low that the $35,000 you are giving as a gift to the 1,400 men in the Toledo plant represents but a fraction of the amount you have saved as a result of the speed-up and the General Motors low wage-scale. You could afford to spend untold sums to break our strike last April rather than give us a slight increase in wages, and spend $5,000,000 as 'gifts' now. But a five per cent wage increase last spring was an 'impossibility,' wasn't it? Nevertheless, we are genuinely happy that the 1,400 men now working in the Toledo plant are receiving this $25 Xmas gift because everybody knows that they are in dire need of it after a month's lay off and the low wages they are now receiving.

"Since you are getting so much publicity on this act of generosity, we feel that it is only your just due for us to inform the public of that other Xmas gift you have given 900 other Chevrolet employees in the Toledo plant. We, whom you recently threw on the streets in order to break our union, wish to publicly thank you for our Xmas gift. As we gaze at our empty Xmas tables, our kids whom no Santa Claus will visit, our eviction notices, we will bless you for a most Merry, Merry Christmas. You have a heart of gold, yes solid gold.

Yours truly,
COMMITTEE OF 900,
(signed) JAMES HOLLY,
Secretary,
Former employees of Toledo Chevrolet Ohio Co."

500 in NY Hear Max Shactman

Cannon to Speak on Labor War in Mpls., Jan. 5th

More than 500 workers attended the regular weekly lecture of the Workers Party, held in Irving Plaza last Sunday, to hear Max Shactman who just returned from a nation-wide tour, tear to shreds the Stalinist argument that the "People's Front" as constituted in France, can stop Fascism or war in France or elsewhere.

Thoroughly analyzing the program and tactics of the "Front Populaire," comrade Shactman showed that it was copied from the social-patriotic class-collaborationist and coalition government program of the Second International at its worst—1914-18. Quoting from Stalinist documents beginning with the Sixth Congress right down to Olgin's pamphlet on "Trotskyism" printed last June, Shactman proved to the hilt that the present social-patriotic course of the C. I. had in the past been roundly denounced from a principle basis by its present protagonists.

The next lecture of the series will be held Sunday, Jan. 5, when James P. Cannon, who has just returned from Minneapolis, will speak on the struggle in the A. F. of L. and the labor war in Minneapolis.

Independent Auto Unions Amalgamate

900 Auto Men Act In Toledo

Organize Vigorous Campaign to Save Chevrolet Union

TOLEDO, O., Dec. 23.—The 900 men, who have not been recalled to the Toledo Chevrolet plant, keen with resentment, that after six weeks, the Chevrolet union has taken no action to protect their jobs, and has allowed the union membership to become demoralized, have taken vigorous action at a special meeting last week of a number of the so-called "outside" 900 men, to protect their interests and to "Save the Union."

Forming into a "Committee of 900," they elected a membership committee of seven to act in their behalf, with James Holly as secretary for the group.

On Dec. 16, there appeared a statement in the Toledo press, over the signature of James Holly, secretary of the "Committee of 900" that "the automobile and auto parts manufacturers are carrying on a deliberate and well-planned drive to destroy our union organization in Toledo. General Motors took the lead some six weeks ago when it moved part of its Chevrolet transmission machinery to Saginaw, Mich., and Muncie, Ind. It is obvious that not only do we 900 Chevrolet men face the prospect of pauperism and dependence on public poor relief but also the remaining 1,400 Chevrolet men who are today temporarily employed, as well as thousands of other union automobile workers, will soon be thrown on the streets to become public charges."

"We wish to make it clear," the statement concludes, "that anyone who at this time deserts the union or attempts to create out of the troubled situation a dual or competitive union in the Chevrolet plant will meet the most determined resistance from our ranks."

Following through on their campaign, the Committee of 900 held an open meeting on Wednesday, Dec. 18 at the plant gates of the Toledo Chevrolet plant, where they explained to a crowd of 500 Chevrolet men the necessity for strike action.

Union Leadership Weak
In this troubled period, when General Motors is clubbing the union on the head, determined to wipe it out, the leadership of the union proved to be amateurish and weak. The confidence and aggressiveness which revolutionary elements in the union had provided during the previous strike was sadly lacking. Six weeks ago, when General Motors was first preparing to move out its machinery to other cities, the Workers Party gave the warning that decisive action was necessary and that the whole membership must be aroused to the danger facing the union. But the executive committee marked time; allowed itself to be seduced by the fair promises of General Motors and did nothing.

When the plant reopened, and the management announced that

Detroit Convention Launches New Organization with 100 Delegates Present

BULLETIN

DETROIT, Dec. 22.—About 100 delegates from Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Defiance, Pontiac, Chicago and other cities, representing the three independent unions: the Mechanics Educational Society of America, the Associated Automobile Workers of America and locals of the Automobile Industrial Workers Association came together Saturday night for a "constitutional convention" at the Fort Wayne Hotel here in Detroit to amalgamate into one independent union representing the Automobile and Metal Workers of America. A telegram from Richard Frankenstein, president of the A.I.W.A., was read to the convention to the effect that the A.I.W.A. promises to cooperate with the amalgamated union, but was not yet ready to enter the convention. Boos greeted this hypocritical declaration. It is understood that both Frankenstein and Morris Fields backed out at the last moment, because they feared that they would lose the jobs which they now hold. It is understood that eight locals of the A.I.W.A. voted in favor of the amalgamation as against five that voted against. In spite of this disruptive action by the officers of the A.I.W.A., a solid delegation of the A.I.W.A., representing the Motor Products local and the Pressed Steel local, attended the convention and voted to amalgamate to the new union.

After a day and a half of deliberation, a constitution and preamble were adopted, stating that the final objectives of the new union were "the complete industrial and political freedom of all workers and to this end we dedicate our lives." The amalgamated union is to be called the Automobile and Metal Workers Industrial Union of America (A.M.W.I.) and its temporary officers are to be Tice Woody of Pontiac, president, Mathew Smith, secretary and Arthur Greer treasurer.

Another meeting is to be held on Feb. 1 at which time dues books will be issued, permanent officers elected, financial arrangements completed and an organizing campaign planned.

The convention pledged continued support of the Motor Products strike and pledged solidarity with the battle.

The mass meeting of the Motor Products strikers was held at Schiller Hall following the convention. Mathew Smith reported on the successful amalgamation of the unions, to the enthusiastic applause of the strikers. The Toledo delegates, Brothers Becker, president of local 4, Crookes, secretary, and Burke Cochran of the Mather strike advisory committee, local 4, then addressed the strike meeting and pledged the support of Toledo for the Motor Products strike.

Rap Ferrero Mini Defense Deportation In New Move

In a last-minute appeal to save Ferrero and Salitto from deportation on Dec. 28 to Italy where death probably awaits them, a delegation representing the Ferrero-Salitto Defense Conference had a hearing on Monday with McGrady of the Department of Labor. The delegation consisted of Ulisse De Dominicis, manager of the Baltimore Joint Board of the A.C.W.A., Rose Pesotta, national vice-president of the I.L.G.W.U., Albert Strong, secretary of the Defense Conference and member of the Journeymen Stonecutters Union of North America; William Taback, delegate to the conference and formerly a member of the Boilermakers Union.

During the previous week protests from over 100 A. F. of L. and independent unions and from hundreds of prominent individuals all over the country had poured in on McGrady's desk as a result of the drive for such mass protests just started by the Defense Conference. These, with personal letters, telegrams and phone calls from many including John L. Lewis, Norman Thomas, Frank Morrison, secretary of the A. F. of L., Samuel Dubinsky and Luigi Antonini of the I.L.G.W.U., Joseph Schlossberg of the A.C.W.A., had convinced McGrady that the labor movement of the country was mobilizing in the defense of Ferrero and Salitto.

McGrady, as usual, passed the buck, claiming that the charges against Ferrero and Salitto could not be dropped and that the fight, (Continued on Page 2)

Toledo Projects Organize

O.U.L. Backs New WPA Set-up After Unity Efforts Prove Fruitless

TOLEDO, O., Dec. 23.—Real progress is being made in the organization of the 11,000 WPA workers here into the WPA Workers Union, affiliated to the Lucas County Unemployed League.

The much ballyhooed WPA program originally scheduled to be under way as far back as last June, has already slithered down into a weak imitation of the old FERA program, but on a much less stable basis. Originally scheduled to employ 18,000 men in Lucas County, it has to date given jobs to only 11,000 workers on the relief rolls. Approximately 14,000 families are still dependent upon direct relief and face the prospect of outright starvation with the withdrawal of all Federal relief funds, on Dec. 1.

The Lucas County Unemployed League, alive to the possibilities inherent in this situation, realized the necessity for a swift and aggressive campaign to organize these thousands of WPA workers into a stable organization for the achievement of better working conditions, continuous employment, trade union wage-scales; the ability to get back on relief as the WPA projects are demobilized; and for the realization of united action between the organized unemployed and the trade union movement.

Unity Efforts Fruitless

In order to create the broadest possible basis for this work the Lucas County Unemployed League proposed at the start of the WPA program here to the Workers Alliance of Lucas County to set up a joint committee for the purpose of jointly organizing the WPA workers. But all attempts to achieve joint action with the Workers Alliance have thus far proven fruitless. Some of the Socialist Party members holding leading positions in the local W.A.A. organization have united with Communist Party unemployed leaders who have officially liquidated the Unemployed Councils, have joined the W.A.A. and are using every means to sabotage and prevent any joint action between the W.A.A. and the U.L.

The confusion in the organization of the WPA project workers in Lucas County, which the leaders of the Lucas County Unemployed League predicted would ensue, cannot be exaggerated. Because of this hundreds of WPA workers will undoubtedly be lost to both organizations and the strength of the unemployed organizations considerably lessened due to the factional warfare that exists.

U. L. Organizes Project Union

The Lucas County Unemployed League, finding joint action impossible at the moment, sponsored and helped organize an independent organization, the WPA Workers Union. This union is an independent organization, has elected its own officers, set its dues at 25c per month and has proceeded to organize the WPA workers on the basis of project stewards and project committee subdivisions. Class Struggle Issues Arouse West Coast Maritime Unions

By C. CURTISS

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 18.—The issue of job action has assumed great proportions on the West coast.

The recent convention of the maritime federation (organization of all waterfront crafts on the coast) has attempted to resolve this question of job action, with what success remains to be seen.

Job action is a term that describes a multitude of activities. But speaking generally it is action taken right on the job by the men involved in order to gain a demand or a set of demands.

Above all the seamen have been forced to take recourse to job action. The "award" they received some time ago has proven to be a cruel farce, and in order to maintain conditions of living and safety, the seamen have been compelled to utilize job action as an ultimate weapon.

The conditions under which the seamen live and work are described by Harry Lundberg, leader of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, and president of the Maritime Federation:

Conditions of Seamen
"The seamen are still working 56 hours a week or more for an (Continued on Page 4)

New Zealand Seamen's Union Adopts Revolutionary Position on Sanctions

(Editor's Note: The following resolution, carried at a stop-work meeting of the Seamen's Union in New Zealand, speaks for itself and shows that the New Zealand seamen are well aware of the illusions that are being spread by those who would capitalize the League of Nations in the present international crisis. We heartily endorse the attitude of the New Zealand seamen and hope that seamen in the U.S. will follow their position. The resolution is quoted from "The Militant," monthly organ of the Fourth Internationalist Workers Party of Australia.)

"That in the opinion of the members of the Federated Seamen's Union the international situation is as follows:
"In 1914 the majority of the the world safe for democracy, to end war, and to overthrow German militarism for ever. Emphasis was laid on the importance of safeguarding international law against treaty breakers such as Germany and on the certainty, if Germany were allowed to do as she pleased, that there could be nothing but international anarchy throughout the world.

"Influenced by their hatred of the tyranny of German militarism, the working class supported its capitalist governments. But when the war was declared the evils of British and French militarism were immediately added to those of German militarism; and at the end of the war, British, French, Italian, and American militarism were triumphant, and democracy everywhere was either greatly weakened or wiped out of existence. In this manner the capitalist system managed to survive the conflict between the two great capitalist powers, Great Britain and Germany, and after the war profit (Continued on Page 2)

Our Revolutionary Heritage:

The Debs Rebellion

By Leighton Rigby

The Pullman strike of 1894 has been called "Debs' Rebellion." Taking root in Chicago, that great conflict quickly spread to twenty-seven states, from Cincinnati to San Francisco. Indeed, hardly a section of the nation failed to feel the terrific force of the impact. Led by Eugene Debs, founder of the American Railway Union, the struggle forced the ruling class to bring into play all the means of defense it could muster.

The American Railway Union was organized in 1893, and some of the more generous contemporary authorities estimated its membership at one million in the following year. Although some of the locals may have departed from the national policy, the union made no racial or occupational distinctions between the railroad workers. Firemen, brakemen, trackmen, telegraph operators—all were invited to join.

About 2,500 members of the American Railway Union worked in the Pullman shops and lived in the "model town" of Pullman. Competition (or more accurately, the necessity for maintaining profits) "compelled" the Pullman Parlor Car Company to drastically reduce wages in the spring of 1894. In addition, scores of workers were thrown out of work. There was, however, no reduction in the rent the workers were obliged to pay for the "model homes" they occupied. As the result of these circumstances, the Pullman employees quit work on May 11.

Company Refuses to Negotiate

The company officials refused to negotiate with representatives of the union and declined to submit the matter to any form of arbitration whatsoever. They stated that the matter of manufacture was a question of fact and did not lend itself to arbitration. (And therein, comrades and fellow workers, lies a general truth. Profits are the lifeblood of capitalism, and capitalists will not willingly or otherwise commit economic suicide by entering into agreements that would stop the flow. No number of peaceful conferences or "settlements" can change the basic contradictions of capitalist production. Capitalism must be overthrown!)

On June 21 the members of the American Railway Union voted to cease handling all Pullman cars on any of the twenty-four railroads entering Chicago, and on the 26th they voted a sympathetic strike.

This action, a splendid example of working class solidarity, transformed the strike at Pullman from a localized struggle into one of national prominence and significance. A Wall Street paper bemoaned the situation: "It is impossible to contemplate the action of the many thousand railway employees in blindly following the mandates of an irresponsible leader, without a feeling of wonder and astonishment." The truth is that the workers were not so much inspired by the leader as by their feeling of sympathy for their Pullman comrades. The ruling class always stands amazed at the comradeship between workers.

Cleveland Calls Out the Troops

Chauncey M. Depew, president of the New York Central, pleaded in the interests of those travelers who were hurrying to the bedside of dying mothers, wives and children. In short, no stone was left unturned by the ruling class to whip up general public indignation against the striking workers. But the strike continued and spread with every hour.

On July 4 President Cleveland ordered two thousand federal troops to Chicago under the command of General Miles. At first Miles' authority was somewhat limited or undefined, but on July 8 the President issued a proclamation declaring the necessity for severe action and cautioning all "law abiding" citizens to keep clear of the scenes of riot. This proclamation virtually placed Chicago under martial law. It is interesting to note in passing, that Governor Altgeld had sent a vigorous protest to Cleveland when the federal troops were first directed to move on Chicago.

In the meantime, the workers were becoming more and more militant. As far west as California the blockade was almost complete. State militias and deputies were pitted against determined workers all over the middle-west and far west. There were many clashes, not confined to the railroads. In Michigan, two thousand ore miners were striking. Ten companies of state troops were guarding the Pratt mines in Alabama after riots. Others were out in Colorado and elsewhere.

Solidarity of Soldiers and Workers
A most interesting thing happened at Tacoma, Washington. Troop A of Sprague, consisting of sixty men and said to have been a crack cavalry unit, refused to ride on trains manned by non-union crews. The soldiers were placed under arrest and locked in a boxcar. These men, not being professional soldiers, were, in reality, workers and had the same interests in common with the strikers.

The Chicago Typographical Union appropriated $1,000 for the relief of the Pullman workers and sent a demand to Cleveland that he withdraw his support from corporations.

As far east as Boston mass meetings were being held, and the workers were cheering their western comrades. In New York City, all police vacations were cancelled in view of the growing number of protest meetings.

The leadership in the labor unions was far from reactionary in most cases. While Gompers warned the members of the A. F. of L. to stay out of the strike, President McBride of the United Mine Workers predicted civil war if Debs was arrested. Secretary Hayes of the Knights of Labor (by then fading rapidly) said the workers would be asked to form military companies.

The Injunction

On the grounds that the railroad strike was interfering with the transportation of the mails and was, therefore, a matter involving interstate commerce, U.S. Attorney General Olney ordered the federal authorities in Chicago to obtain an injunction against the strikers. The strike, he held, was a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust laws. Injunctions were obtained, not only in Chicago but at other points.

On July 17 Debs was arrested, and on December 14 a federal court found him guilty of contempt and sentenced him to six months in prison. The U. S. Supreme Court later upheld the lower court. Although Debs demanded a trial by jury, the court held that the jury was unnecessary.

As the reader knows, the sixth amendment to the federal Constitution states that "in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed." The celebrated "bill of rights" guarantees rights to workers if they can be given without stepping on the toes of the ruling capitalists.

Rap Ferrero Deportation

It continued, must be fought in the courts. The Defense Conference is determined to carry through the struggle until the end, up to the Supreme Court of the U. S. if necessary. Upon the surrender of the two men, mandatory upon Ferrero this week, writs of habeas corpus will be sued out and the case taken for the first time before the courts. The protest campaign, hitherto directed to Frances Perkins and McGrady, must now be redoubled upon the District Court in New York before which the cases will be tried. Already over 7,000 protest blanks have been sent out. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, the I.L.D., the General Defense Committee of the I.W.W., the L.L.D., all participating in the Defense Conference, and the Greater New York Federation of Churches have sent out appeals on their own letterheads to their members to send in protests. Auxiliary defense committees in San Francisco, Chicago and Philadelphia are spreading the campaign over the entire country.

The growing realization of the significance of the cases of these two innocent men, persecuted by the government as part of a covered attack on the press of the working class, is shown by the threat of William Randolph Hearst to make the case a national issue in his papers.

Electrical Worker Flays Stalinists
For Use of Forgery in Local Union

(Editor's Note: The following article is written by a member in good-standing of Local 3, Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, for the last fourteen years. His revelation of the utter corruption of Stalinism is another indication that this bankrupt movement which scrapes and howls before the bureaucracy does not hesitate to employ the vilest methods against revolutionists in the trade union movement. The editors are not quite sure as to what Brother Forman means by a "pure revolutionary party" but they are quite certain that if he draws the correct conclusions from his own remarks he will take a long step in the right direction.)

By ANDREW FORMAN

(Member, Local 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers)

For three years, prior to July 1934, a movement of the Rank and File developed in opposition to the reactionary and corrupt officialdom of Local 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The movement grew in spirit, strength and numbers to such proportions that, had it not been for a "sell-out" by such "oppositionists" as Moe Smith, Sam Rosenthal and John Sullivan, who were in strategic positions, there is no doubt that the reactionary officialdom of Local 3 would have been ousted and the control of the Union would now be in the hands of the rank and file and not in the hands of a few corrupt individuals as it is today.

It is not difficult to understand that after such bitter experience the opposition movement would tend to decline. What remained of the opposition movement was more or less a class-conscious politically inclined element.

Maneuvering for Control

Just about this time, November 1934, several members of the opposition disassociated themselves from the Communist Party and joined the Communist League of America (Trotskyists). From that time on slander, bickering and dissension were the outstanding characteristics of the opposition meetings of Local 3. At times arguments reached such heights that the belligerent elements, "Trotskyists" and "Stalinists" virtually settled it with fists; this gave one the impression of being at the regular local union meeting. Of course, this sort of action, which seemed to me at the time to have been created by both factions, was due to strategic maneuvering for control of the opposition. Finally the entire affair was consummated with the understanding that there could be no collaboration between the two factions.

Although not being a member of any political party and disagreeing with both factions as to certain policies, I nevertheless decided to work with the "Stalinist" faction, hoping that I would eventually succeed in my efforts at reforming the members of the C. P. (By the way, I do not pretend that I am above politics, but it is my sincere conviction that both the Communist Party and the Workers Party are devoid of what I consider the correct approach to the international working class. However, I am willing to collaborate with a pure revolutionary party should one come into existence.)

When working together with the Stalinists for a few months an old "sympathizer" of the C. P. brought with him to one of our meetings a certain Leon Green. Although I had heard of Leon Green previously, this was the first time I had actually met him. At that meeting I was one of a committee of three selected to draw up a leaflet for distribution at the regular meeting of the Union protesting against the proposed increase in officers' salaries. This arrangement, however, was not carried out due to the bureaucratic and high-handed methods of the Stalinists.

Anything Goes

In September the progressives not dominated by the Stalinists issued their first number of "Labor Truth" to 1,500 members of the Union. The Stalinists were in a quandary; they must break the growing influence of "Labor Truth". But how?—They must seek the advice of their "leader."

In October a meeting of some Stalinists and "sympathizers" was held at 1 Union Square. Sam Nesin, the Stalinist "leader" of a new fangled Stalinist "trade-union-committee" insisted that the "Trotskyist renegades" must be exposed and an "opposition" bulletin must be issued at once... a thousand bulletins "if necessary"... Completely disgusted with the Stalinist clap-trap I stated the fight must be directed against the corrupt administration of Local 3 and not against the "Trotskyist faction." The Stalinists, however, did not issue this bulletin until a special situation occurred.

When Leon Green decided to join a group he made overtures to the "Trotskyist" faction; when he found he could not use them as a "stepping-stone" he went over to the "Stalinists" who were only too eager to accept him with open arms, because together with them he was willing to issue a forged copy of "Labor Truth" slandering the "Trotskyists" instead of taking up the fight on vital issues pertaining to the local union. It is significant to note here that in the fight against the corrupt officials of Local 3, which was fast and furious, these staunch Stalinist "revolutionaries" were not to be found. They were not seen or heard from; and if they were present at the meeting, they were probably hiding under the seats or in the balcony, reviewing the fight, while those whom they today attack as "Trotskyists" were always in the thick of the fight.

Now that a certain degree of democracy has been obtained by the rank and file through struggle against the corrupt officials the Stalinists want to rule the opposition. They want to rule regardless of their own competency. One cannot rule others by merely wishing to do so. One must possess the ability and qualifications that make for leadership.

Not a Word on Union Matters

Surely from what I have witnessed the Stalinists lack all of these qualities. By their vulgar, short-sighted and narrow minded policies they have frightened away not only the conservative element, but the liberal and progressive as well. The continuous turn-over in the membership of the C. P. is unquestionable and is positive proof of the party's malicious doings. The submissiveness of the Party rank and file in relinquishing their democratic rights to the bureaucracy is positively nauseating.

On November 14, at a regular meeting of Local 3, two copies of "Labor Truth" were handed to the members as they entered the meeting; one by the progressives and the other—a forged copy—by the Stalinists. The forged copy of the Stalinists attacked the "Trotskyists" but did not contain a single word against the proposed increase of the officers' salaries. At a subsequent meeting of the Stalinist "group" I protested most vehemently against the vulgar Stalinist procedure. I was then told that if I wanted to "get along with the Stalinists" I should join the Communist Party. I replied that I did not wish to prostitute myself.

It is necessary to bring out one more point: In the recent W. P. A. strike the Stalinists in the union were conspicuous with their absence; one of them, Frank Flatley, continued to work on W. P. A. for more than six weeks during the strike and stopped only one week before the settlement for fear that he would be called before the executive board of the Union and charged with scabbing. Another, Sam Rivian by name, a member of Local 3, was employed in a hat factory, and though willing and ready to expose the "Trotskyists" nevertheless continued to work in a hat factory and displayed a blase ignorance of the strike situation. The truth of the matter is that the Stalinists in the local are not there to take part in strikes or to build the progressive movement; their pet obsession is the "important" task of fighting the "Trotskyists."

Thus the Stalinists saw fit to issue a forged copy of "Labor Truth," organ of the progressives of Local 3. For this special task they found it possible to use a stooge—Leon Green by name.

Falsification and forgery is nothing new to Stalinism. When the workers of the world will have destroyed Stalinism—and the members of Local 3 will lend a hand—history will record the fact that falsification and forgery had received their deadliest blow...

Toledo WPA Is Organizing

great response on the part of the WPA workers to the three-week old organizational campaign of the WPA Workers Union is conclusive proof that the WPA workers are anxious for organization and that a separate organizational form for them is vitally necessary to achieve numerical strength rapidly.

From the start the WPA Workers Union has moved decisively on the vital issues raised by the WPA workers themselves. By its aggressive attitude and the constant pressure it has exerted on the local WPA administration the union has already won major concessions for the WPA workers in Lucas County: all pay checks are now mailed direct to the workers' homes in place of the old system, where WPA workers would spend days waiting in line to receive their checks. Through the formation of a committee on the Canal Boulevard project which employs several thousand men, the union has secured the right to fire on all open jobs the administration has agreed to supply the fuel and to erect shelter houses for the protection of the men. The union, at the present time, is engaged in a campaign to have all workers paid for any time they may lose on the job, through no fault of their own. It is common in Lucas County for thousands of WPA workers to be laid off projects and wait as long as two to three weeks for transfers and reassignment. This cuts their monthly minimum pay to as low as $25, and is the biggest issue and the greatest concern of all WPA workers in Lucas County.

County-wide Drive for Conditions
The WPA Workers Union is mobilizing all resources and has requested the aid of the Lucas County Unemployed League, to which it is affiliated, to initiate a county-wide campaign aiming at forcing the local WPA administration to pay the full minimum monthly wage-scale with no deductions for any cause which the WPA worker is not responsible. This drive will reach a focal point in a mass meeting to be held on January 5 where the local WPA administration will be on the platform to address the WPA workers and fix the responsibility for the breakdown of WPA projects and deductions in the pay and answer the union's demands publicly point by point.

The union realizes that the WPA program is temporary and will not last for more than another three months in its present form. For this reason the WPA Workers Union has adopted the taxation program of the Unemployed League, providing for the establishment of large-scale, socially useful public works, such as housing, public recreation buildings, labor temples, etc., to be financed by taxes on high incomes, corporation profits, capital levy, etc., etc. The union also realizes that its membership is in reality still on relief, although the form is temporarily that of work relief. In several months they will undoubtedly be faced with the necessity of again fighting for direct relief. The Lucas County Unemployed League has had three years of experience in handling these problems and in organizing the unemployed. During that time it has led hundreds of demonstrations and won immeasurably higher standards for all of the unemployed of Lucas County.

Because of these reasons the relations between the WPA Workers Union and the Lucas County Unemployed League are necessarily solidified. The union is continuing its work with the firm conviction that as the organization of the WPA workers progresses the pressure of the men themselves will become irresistible for the achievement of joint action on the unemployed field.

Two weeks ago the executive committee split under the pressure from the 900 men. A minority of three, headed by James Roland, chairman, recommended to the union membership strike action, and a majority of five, headed by Joseph Ditzel, S. P. member of the executive committee, recommended continued negotiations for another thirty days. A union membership which had been led white with inaction and no resistance to the blows of the enemy, who had been listening to gloomy reports for weeks from a bewildered and dazed leadership, voted for the majority resolution.

Quick Action Vital

With every passing week the union has grown weaker and the membership has become more terrorized. Other manufacturers in Toledo are already speaking of moving their plants to other unorganized cities, and it is becoming almost impossible to organize new men into the unions today as they fear the manufacturers will immediately move out of town. A strike of 425 men called by the M.E.S.A. at the Mather Spring Co. some seven weeks ago has been turned into a lockout, and the plant is still standing idle. It is obvious that unless the Chevrolet union is rearmed within the next few weeks, and strike action taken to rearm the 900 men, the Chevrolet union will be dealt a mortal blow and automobile unionism in the whole city of Toledo will have been set back for many months.

The Progressive group of local 18384, realizing the danger which they are all facing, have already

THE MANAGER'S CORNER

Subscriptions are coming in but not at all fast enough to speak about it in enthusiastic terms. Our total to date is 223. We do not disparage, however, and have no reason to do so inasmuch as a couple of hundred new readers are always welcome.

Since our last report 59 new subscribers have been added and if the party convention date had not been changed slightly we would still be a good distance from our goal of 1,000 new subscribers. Now we have a little more time and should be able to make it.

The New York branches have by far the best record in this drive. Most of them should be able to reach their quota. But we still have a number of branches which have not yet gotten into motion or which have made only a very small beginning. Strange to say, this is the case of several branches the members of which are otherwise participating very actively in the general labor movement.

Among such branches, and those which have a large quota, the Allentown branch has not yet managed to send in a single new subscription. The San Francisco branch has sent in none; the Detroit, Toledo and Pittsburgh branches have sent in one new subscription each; the Newark branch has sent in two, the Boston branch three and the Minneapolis branch has sent in five. Comrades too often forget the necessity of building up a circulation for the party press, of spreading the ideas we stand for, as the most important means of really making their activities in the class struggle effective and fruitful. We would not maintain that this is the case in Minneapolis. On the contrary, in Minneapolis our comrades have already a substantial mailing list built up. But this question is too often lost sight of elsewhere.

If all of these branches which are still not in the running, and also those which have made only a small beginning, now speed up on their activities to get new subscribers, we will reach the goal set in this campaign.

Since our last report the new subscriptions received together with the quota of the various branches stand as follows:

naking and the state policies required to back profit-making were re-established almost as if there had been no war, and today the state of international anarchy, despite the League of Nations, is worse than that of 1914.

"The present Italian-Abyssinian situation is the natural outcome of the exploitation of labor and the international fight for profits. Great Britain and the other dominant imperialist powers are as much to blame as Italy and the weaker ones, and the very nations we may be asked to fight have been in part armed by British firms in the ordinary course of capitalist trade.

"Once again we are being asked in almost identical phrases, except that the word Fascism is substituted for German militarism, and Abyssinia for poor bleeding Belgium, and the League of Nations for 'scraps of paper,' to give our lives and murder our fellow-workers in order that one set of exploiting imperialist powers may prevail over another set.

"That our support is asked in the sacred name of the League of Nations does not alter the situation, for the League, despite the adherence of Soviet Russia, is still what it has been since its formation, an instrument of the dominant imperialist powers against the weaker ones and an extremely effective means of once again hoodwinking the working class.

"We therefore refuse to be misled by the specious appeal to oppose Fascism, for we realize that wars between capitalist powers are not waged on account of forms of government, but for capitalist profit—and further we know that once war is declared, all British democratic governments will and must introduce the necessary means of crushing opposition and will thus become, for all practical purposes, Fascist governments. Actually the British government in India is of this type today.

"We know that Fascism is not some totally different political system, alien to British traditions, but that it is merely the name now popularly given to capitalist governments when under pressure of war or economic crisis, they can no longer govern by misrepresentation and ingenious falsehood under democratic forms but must resort to the prison, the concentration camp, and the machine gun. The record of the New Zealand government in the great war, as disclosed in the late Mr. Holland's pamphlet, should dispel any illusions that may be held about New Zealand democracy.

"We, of course, sympathize with the exploited people of Abyssinia and strongly resent both the contemplated military attack by the Fascist government of Italy and the contemplated selling or dividing up of their country among British, American and other capitalist interests. We sympathize with them just as we do with the Indian frontier tribes, who are being bombed by our British Royal Air Force, but we definitely assert that the way to free the Abyssinians or the Mohammedan or Indian masses is not to participate with British or New Zealand governments in a peaceful cutting up of their territory or in its administration under the League of Nations or to take part in a national war against the Italian workers, 'our gallant allies' only a few years ago. Our duty is not to fight our foreign fellow-workers, but to call on all workers in all countries to resist their own exploiting and war-making governments with the object of obtaining political power for the working class, of instituting social ownership of the means of production, and thus in the only possible manner putting an end to wars by removing their causes.

"We therefore oppose any war-making activities of the present government, declaring that the present situation does not differ fundamentally from that of 1914 and we refuse to be again deceived. We will in no circumstances transport war materials or troops or in any way assist any war governments and we call upon all working class organizations to join with us in resistance to this shameful endeavor, hidden under deceptive League of Nations phrases, once again to set the working classes of the world at each other's throats in order that capitalist profits may be protected and to ensure the continued exploitation of labor."

upon them to return to work Monday and "be loyal to the government."

Police and sheriffs were already organized for strike-breaking activities and jobless workers who happened to be idle the morning following the conference were questioned. Secrecy as to the definite time the strike will be called still has the politicians and WPA officials jittery. On many projects workers report that there is a let-up in the slave-driving tactics used by the bosses. Discharged WPA workers are also being placed back to work.

The League of Stalinist Agents for Social Patriotism

A Political Analysis of the Lovestone Group And its Reactionary Role

Some comrades are inclined to view the present Brandler-Lovestone group's whitewashing of Stalinist social-chauvinism as merely the latest of the long series of situations in which Stalinism has found a loyal attorney in this so-called "Communist Party (Opposition)." They see in the present Lovestone "line" nothing more than a continuation of six years of Lovestone attempts to return to the Communist International at any price. They consider the Lovestoneite apologies for the new Stalinist line as similar to that group's defense of the Anglo-Russian Committee's role in defeating the British General Strike of 1926; to its defense (even today!) of the Stalinist line in China which has been so successful that, with not even a glance at the disorganized masses, Chiang Kai-shek gives up North China to Japan; to the Lovestoneite alibi that the Stalinists were justified in capitulating to Hitler without a struggle since the previous mistakes had resulted in a situation that made it inadvisable to fight, etc., etc.

To those who take such a view, we wish to point out that all the necessary conclusions must be drawn from the fact that the 7th Congress was an open break with revolutionary principles, and particularly with a revolutionary principle tested on an international scale in 1914: the revolutionary struggle against war.

The Test of Events

It is true that the Stalinist theory of "socialism in one country" (and no other), which became the official doctrine of the Comintern, and sharply separated the Left Opposition from both the Stalinists and Lovestoneites, was also a break with the revolutionary internationalism of Marx and Lenin. Nevertheless, the full practical consequences of this theory were not immediately apparent to even the most advanced workers. For many years it seemed to them a highly abstract issue. It took ten years of defeats and downsliding under Stalin's leadership, culminating in the German catastrophe, before the revolutionary faction of the Comintern could announce the death of the Comintern as a revolutionary instrument, and the necessity of building a new international.

Even after Germany, many advanced workers said to us: "Your analysis is still only a hypothesis. After all, the Comintern has not formally broken with those fundamentals of Marxism which are generally viewed as the revolutionary position—such as the revolutionary struggle against war."

The Seventh Congress marked the formal and explicit passage of the Comintern over to social-chauvinism. There is no longer anything "abstract" about our differences with the Comintern. In gory pages, the role of social-chauvinism is written into the history of the working class during the last war. Those who continue to support or apologize for social-chauvinism, either as C. P. members or as "loyal oppositionists" like the Lovestone group, are acting as social-patriots and agents of social-patriots.

The Seventh Congress

The official blessing given to social-patriotism by the Seventh Congress confronted the Lovestone group with an inescapable decision. The Seventh Congress was not merely another incident. They had to choose: Either break with the social-patriotic Comintern or capitulate to it. Capitulation meant, this time, capitulation on fundamental principles with no nonsense about "disagreeing but continuing our work for unity." The Lovestone group had either to say that the Comintern had gone over to social-patriotism and was no longer a revolutionary organization, to break with it and take the road which, in spite of their past, would lead them toward unity of all revolutionary forces. Or, if they remained a faction of the Stalinists, having capitulated on the fundamental question of social-chauvinism, they would thereafter have to perform even greater prodigies of betrayal as agents of the Stalinist chauvinists.

This all-important question produced a crisis in the Lovestone group. The proof of the significance which we attribute to the issue of the Seventh Congress for the Lovestoneites, is supplied by their own testimony. For a few weeks, they teetered back and forth on the edge of breaking with Stalinism. In those few weeks, they clearly indicated what the issue was. Then—they turned back and, ever since, as we shall show, they demonstrated that to remain a "loyal opposition" after the Seventh Congress, requires an entirely new level of subservience to Stalinism; requires, in fact, nothing less than a whitewash of social-patriotism and to play the role of Stalinist agents for organic unity. We shall demonstrate this in detail.

Lovestoneites Caught Unawares

The Stalinist turn to social-patriotism caught the Lovestone group unawares. Their diagnosis of what was wrong with the Com-intern was that it was ultra-leftist. We, on the contrary, have always contended that the ultra-left swing of the C. I. (1928-1934) was only one side of Stalinism, that Stalinism veers right or left in obedience to the temporary requirements of the Soviet bureaucracy. Witness the right-wing zigzag of 1924-1926. Denying our contention, the Lovestoneites were left open-mouthed when the chauvinist actions of the Comintern began to pile up. The Lovestoneite paper had, in fact, been full of gleeful items about the gradual improvements in the Comintern line when, overnight, they had to face the fact that the Comintern had gone over bag and baggage to social-chauvinism.

The first spontaneous reactions of the Lovestone group was to estimate the Comintern actions in fairly accurate terms. Even Lovestone himself gave a speech on July 12, 1935, entitled "Shadows of 1914 Over the Comintern." The same title served for a report from Brandler. The difference in character between previous differences with the Comintern and the latest was put quite sharply by E. D. Wolfe, on August 10, in an article entitled, "The Comintern in Danger of Degeneration." Under the heading, "A Question of Principles," Wolfe declared:

"Here are no mere tactical differences such as separated the Comintern and the Opposition till now. The International is actually in danger of breaking with revolutionary principles. . . . If it does not speedily, decisively reverse its path, it is headed for the gravest crisis in the history of the International, so grave that 1928-1935 will seem insignificant in comparison."

In the draft thesis for their national convention, the National Committee of the Lovestoneites characterized the Comintern line in these terms:

"Such a policy would be open social-chauvinism no matter under what banner it would be conducted."

In the Workers Age of August 24, M. S. Mautner said:

"Dominant in the Comintern today is the Social Democratic (chauvinist) trend. This policy has not yet been sanctified by decision of the Seventh Congress, nevertheless all arrows point in that direction. . . . There is left no doubt but that this program of opportunism and social-chauvinism has become the line of the Comintern."

"The leadership of the C. I. is deserting the most elementary principles of class struggle," declared Barney Herman.

Presumably in consonance with these estimates of the social-patriotic degeneration of the Comintern, the National Committee of the Lovestoneites proposed that the coming convention drop the name of "Communist Party Opposition" and, striking out independently, adopt the name "Communist Labor League."

Drawing the Conclusions

None of the leaders of the Lovestoneites explicitly drew any conclusions from the situation. It remained for a younger member of their group to put the problem in clearer terms. After summing up what all the others had said, Jesse Lane declared (August 31):

"All of this is true but not one takes up the question of this desertion of principles in relation to the future of the C.P.O." Now, Lane pointed out, unity with the Comintern would first require that it repudiate chauvinism. If the Seventh Congress line is carried out, said Lane, "we will have to declare that the Communist International is no longer the revolutionary international."

But in the same issue in which Lane's article appeared, it was already clear that Lovestone himself had no intention of breaking with the Stalinists. In an article whose cynical legalism has seldom been paralleled in the labor movement, Lovestone began to build a bridge back to Stalinism over the unfortunate remarks about "chauvinist degeneration," "social-patriotism," etc. Naturally, after what he himself had said about "shadows of 1914," he had to retrace his steps slowly. But what he said was plain enough:

The Road Back

"To conclude that the beginning of this tendency, on the part of the Comintern, towards a Social Democratic position in regard to democracy is already the full adoption by the C. I. of the attitude of the Second International, would be the worst of folly."

There was a struggle in the Lovestone group, but Lovestone had his way at the convention, even the opposition voting for his shameful resolution on the Seventh Congress. This resolution explicitly denies that the Stalinists have become social-chauvinist, and in fact gives it a clean bill of health, saying that "there can be no talk of 1914 for the Communist International." As a face-saving device, there is a perfunctory remark in the resolution that if the Comintern line is continued it is "bound to lead to outright social-chauvinism and reformism." The convention also dropped the idea of changing the name of the group to Communist Labor League, and continued the old name.

If the remark that the C. I. line was "bound to lead to outright social-chauvinism" were seriously meant, rather than the main line of the resolution's defense of the Comintern, this would have expressed itself in systematic, sharp polemic against the social-chauvinist line, as it continued and deepened. Instead, however, the issues of the Workers Age published since the convention resolution appeared on September 14, have shamelessly continued to build the bridge back along the line that Lovestone began. A few examples must suffice.

Wolfe's Somersault

B. D. Wolfe, who, on August 14 had spoken of "chauvinist degeneration," has the brass, by November 30, to politely term the Stalinist line a "modification by the Comintern International of certain aspects of its traditional position!" The same Wolfe declares, on Dec. 7, "Stalin's actual stature, if truthfully reported, is gigantic enough without falsification." Lovestone develops the theory that the "sole" deviation of the C. I. is on the question of "mixed wars," and that even this deviation arises from the laudable desire to protect the Soviet Union! As if every chauvinist did not declare that he supported capitalist governments from the laudable desire to protect working class organizations from the foreign enemy; and as if there could be any but "mixed wars" (involving the Soviet Union) in this epoch!

The most ludicrous aspect of the Lovestone somersault is their attempt to lay a theoretical foundation for their capitulation, based on the false analogy from mechanics of a swinging pendulum. They assert that the Comintern's chauvinism is merely a compensating extreme right swing from the previous left swing. As Lovestone puts it (Nov. 16): "opportunist deviations now being made by the Comintern sections in their paucity flight from ultra-left sectarianism." This preposterous idea of a swinging pendulum pervades all their material on the Comintern.

Another theoretical buttress for the bridge back beyond those unfortunate few weeks when the Comintern line was characterized in near-accurate terms, is the invention of the "uncertainty" of the Seventh Congress. Lovestone discovers non-existent distinctions between what Thorez and Cachin said before the Seventh Congress and what Dimitroff said at the Seventh Congress! This deception goes so far, for example, as a headline in the Nov. 9 issue asking (about some particularly flagrant Stalinist chauvinism): "Is This Dimitroff's Political Line?"

And concluding the article by saying, "No, it isn't Dimitroff's line." Wolfe (Nov. 9) says the Seventh Congress has not "spoken clearly on the French and Czechoslovak errors" and that the Seventh Congress has "tried to correct some of them by just dropping them without analysis." What could be clearer than the brazen affirmation, deepening, and universal application by the Seventh Congress of the chauvinism of the French and Czechoslovak C.P.? What errors

By JACK WEBER

GERARD ON RADICAL "DOG-HUNT"

James W. Gerard, former U. S. Ambassador to the Kaiser's Germany, wants to introduce the terrorist methods of German Fascism into America. This agent of the capitalist ruling class sees the class struggle assuming more open, more sharpened form here too in no distant future. Hence he takes the opportunity in an address of "welcome" to some newly naturalized citizens in Jersey City to inject the proper note of terrorism against the militants of the working class into his speech. He warns that "those who will not conform to the institutions of this country, who seek to overthrow our government and substitute some foreign communism, will soon be hunted like mad dogs in our streets." What the upholder of American capitalism means by "conforming" is obvious. He means that the employed workers shall submit to the wise guidance of the bosses when they deem it necessary to cut wages and lengthen hours; that they shall not attempt to better their lot by daring to organize into unions and to strike against the oppressors and exploiters. He means that the eleven million unemployed shall starve patiently on the miserable dole given in a spirit of Christian Rooseveltian charity, without making too much of an organized nuisance of themselves to disturb the parasitic upper crust of capitalist society. Gerard would exterminate the Marxian vanguard, those "mad dogs" who might spread the virus of revolt among the other "dogs" the working and toiling masses. Gerard's fears, needless to say, arise not because of any foreign importation of communism into America from abroad, but because the same struggle for power by the proletariat is inherent wherever the capitalist system exists, in the United States as well as in Europe. And when the struggle becomes clear to the workers, they will know how to defend themselves against the "dog hunters," how to answer the Fascist white terror of the Gerards. They will set up their own institutions and their own standards of conformity.

slightest interest in the Ethiopians or in anything but the power and the pocketbooks of English capitalists. The resignation of the Foreign Secretary does not mean in any sense that the intentions of Baldwin have changed or that the actual proposals to give Italy half of Ethiopia were "wrong." All it means is that the necessary amount of diplomacy, i. e., of sham and fraud, will have to be used to cloak these real designs and to cloud them in secrecy. The game will be played with greater astuteness by the left-over Edens and Chamberlains as a result of the fall of Hoare. He is symbolic of the power of British cant and hypocrisy whose roots extend deeply into the labor movement as well as into bourgeois circles. Only those who really represent the deepest interests of the masses are not interested in fooling the masses. Only, that is to say, the Marxist vanguard.

OUTER MONGOLIA

The visit of important officials of the Soviet government of Outer Mongolia to Moscow is but a sign of the ominous nature of the situation in the Far East. However extended the theater of war, when it breaks out, between Japan and the Soviet Union, Outer Mongolia will be an important part of it. The Japanese army has long declared its intention of strangling the Soviet maritime provinces by cutting off their communication with Russia and the Ural region. This could be best accomplished by means of a campaign through Outer Mongolia to cut the Trans-Siberian Railroad. In self defense against the Japanese bandits the Soviet government has been laying tracks parallel to those of the Trans-Siberian, but further north. In addition railroad lines are being laid by both Japan and the Soviets to be ready to pour troops into the Mongolian sector. The seizure of North China by the Japanese robbers has the two-fold aim of laying the basis for the further gobbling up of China, and for more extensive preparations for invading Siberia. War in the Far East seems only a matter of the briefest time. If Japan invades Outer Mongolia—and this seems to be the intention of the Japanese army—the incident will be provided that will set the world ablaze in a war of intervention against the Soviet Union. European repercussions would not be long in following. All the moves made by England with respect to Italy have as their dark background the next stage of developments, with Hitler Germany preparing to strike at the Ukraine. England would like to see a solid front of Germany, France, Italy and herself against the Soviet Union, with Hitler acting as the spearhead of conquest and reaction. Workers must be on the alert to aid in the defense of the Soviet Union.

HOARE'S FAUX PAS

The ex-Foreign Secretary of Great Britain has been sacrificed by the reactionary Baldwin government to prolong the life of the present cabinet. Hoare failed to act with that proper savoir faire, that hypocritical ease in saying pleasant nothing while committing evil deeds that is the recognized hallmark of bourgeois diplomacy. The great crime of Hoare is to have revealed in brutal nakedness just what the Baldwin government meant all along. The elections having passed, Hoare felt it unnecessary to pretend any further that British imperialism has the were corrected? None, of course; this is merely a dishonest attempt to build up a fake distinction between what the Communist parties are doing and what the Seventh Congress said.

We began this article by saying that the present Lovestoneite whitewashing of Stalinist social-patriotism cannot be viewed as merely a continuation of the old Lovestone line; that, instead, it means that by capitulating on these fundamental principles, the Lovestoneites stand ready for the most nefarious services on behalf of Stalinism. This we can now prove to the hilt.

Explain This Away—Lovestone!

On June 15, in the period when the Lovestoneites were undecided on what position to take toward the C. I. chauvinist line, a long article appeared in their paper, by George F. Miles, certainly an authoritative spokesman, on the question of organic unity. The article vehemently denounced the French Stalinist proposals for organic unity. It speaks of the principle of the organizational independence of the revolutionists, and will have nothing to do with those who wish to destroy this principle. It speaks passionately of the differences between revolutionists and chauvinists, "principled differences which expressed themselves in veritable rivers of blood." It describes the fundamental gap between reformists and revolutionists, and concludes: "As long as this condition remains, he who comes before the proletariat and promises organic unity is a charlatan, is misleading the working class, for such is impossible."

Once the Lovestoneites capitulated to the Stalinists on the question of the Seventh Congress line, however, the opposition to organic unity disappears, and instead, these gentlemen, who have so often in the past stressed the distinction between unity and the united front, and demanded precise terms on these questions, now are developing a barrage for "unity." "Working Class Unity is Need of the Hour," says Will Herberg (Nov. 9), and declares that "the movement for unity is forging rapidly forward, making great headway on every front." The article is a fantastic confusion of the problem of organic unity and the problem of united fronts; and deliberately so, since the Stalinist line on war makes it impossible to speak of a united front between pro-Socialists and anti-Socialist Socialists. Herberg throws overboard the whole theory of principled united fronts on specific issues, and calls for united fronts on the war question between Socialists and Stalinists; and Herberg has the gall to do so without once mentioning the social chauvinism of the Stalinists! How is it possible for two utterly different lines on war to be reconciled in one united front? Herberg supplies an answer which deserves to be printed in acid on his brassy forehead; like the attorney for Stalinism that he is, he advises the Socialists that it is not necessary to unite on a correct or revolutionary program, and for this unprincipled position he offers as bait the backwardness of the masses.

Herberg's "Masterly" Contribution

"In order to be really fruitful, Socialist-Communist cooperation must be cemented on such a basis and on such a program as will most effectively mobilize the organized labor movement for action. The question is not how 'correct' or how 'revolutionary' a program or a slogan may be but how reasonable an appeal it makes to the trade unionist who is beginning to feel keenly the need of doing something about the danger of war," etc. (Our emphasis.)

On the key question of revolutionary policy, the war question, Herberg does this! Who can be possibly be serving, except the Stalinists who, knowing that the backward workers, imbued with bourgeois ideology and otherwise unassisted, would move toward social-patriotism, desire to stifle the revolutionary Socialists in a "broad, united front" in which they could propagate their social-patriotism.

The Tacit Admission

When we published an article exposing the political role of the Lovestoneites as Stalinist agents, in which we emphasized the development of the line exemplified by Herberg's article, the Lovestoneites hysterically denounced us. But their very denunciations provide additional proof of their role as Stalinist agents. They say the Trotskyists aim "to obstruct all efforts aiming at the unity of all class-conscious elements as a basis for a broad and all embracing united labor front." Since the second half of the sentence speaks specifically of a united labor front, presumably something else is meant by "unity of all class-con-

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

M.F., BOSTON—

Question: Does not the granting of independence to the Philippines by the Roosevelt government show that there is a fundamental difference between American imperialism and European imperialism?

Answer: The question itself indicates that the Roosevelt strategy, which is that of deception, and is intended to aid him in the coming election, has a certain measure of success. What essentially is changed by the "independence" of the Philippines? Control of the island in both an economic and military sense remains as firmly entrenched as before in the hands of American finance-capital. The formal rights which have been granted the Philippines may be compared to the formal democracy which the workers have under capitalism: Every so often they cast their ballots for certain people, but nothing is essentially altered, regardless of how they vote; the real control remains in the hands of the masters, the finance capitalists.

Because its economic and financial superiority and control is in itself sufficient to cope with competitors in its colonies, American imperialism is able to forego direct military and political control of such spheres of influence, e.g., Cuba. (A large navy deters other imperialist powers from attempting to offset their economic deficiencies by military means, and the same guns can be used against revolting masses.) This particular circumstance, the absence of American troops from certain of its colonies, permits Yankee imperialism to take on a liberal coloration which it attempts to use in its own interests. At the present time the strategy is to use the formal "independence" of its own colonies as a stepping stone towards advancing the slogan of the "independence" of the colonies of the other imperialists, particularly those of Great Britain, i.e., to make these colonies independent of British but dependent upon American capital. "Independence" was thus granted the Philippines because American imperialism, attempting to establish a territorial base in China, is preparing to advance the slogan of the "liberation" of India in case of a conflict with Great Britain.

The weapons and methods may vary but there is no fundamental difference between Yankee and European imperialism: bandits remain bandits.

FRED B., BROOKLYN—

Question: What principled argument is there against the slogan of a "labor party" if the latter is really composed of honest, militant elements?

Answer: Even were it possible to grant the abstract thesis concerning the "honest, militant elements" which contradicts the reality as to who would dominate a labor party in this country today, the slogan would still remain false.

Insofar as it would not stand for revolution but would fight for the interests of the workers, a "labor party" must necessarily be a political party which confines its struggles to the immediate demands of the workers, and to the achievement of reforms for the latter, within the framework which capitalism will permit. Such a party could realize its aims and justify its existence thereby, only if capitalism were still in its progressive stage, and thus capable of granting such reforms. To advance the slogan of the "Labor Party," therefore, is to put forth the concept that capitalism is still in its progressive stage and the international revolution a thing of the distant future.

We proceed from the Leninist thesis, however, that capitalism, imperialism in character, is in a state of decline; that the capitalists, far from being able to grant "reforms" to the workers, can exist only by increasing the latter's misery; and that even the "immediate" needs of the workers can be attained only by an overthrow of capitalism. From this flows the necessity, not of a party of "immediate demands" but, against the latter, a revolutionary party for the struggle for power.

The slogan of a "Labor Party" is the negation of the slogan of a "Revolutionary Party," and it is no accident, therefore, that the adoption of the "Labor Party" slogan by the Communist Party coincides with the latter's adoption of a reformist position generally, and correspondingly, a move for organic unity with the Socialist Party.

CANNON SPEAKS ON LABOR WAR IN MINNEAPOLIS

James P. Cannon, who has just returned from a stay in Minneapolis, will speak on the labor war in Minneapolis and the struggle in the A. F. of L. He will give a first-hand account of the heroic struggle of Local 574 against Green's "Red Purge."

The meeting will take place Sunday evening, Jan. 5, at Irving Plaza, Irving Place and 15th Street. We call to the attention of our readers in New York that there will be no public meeting held on Sunday, Dec. 29.

Vol. 1 DECEMBER 28, 1935 No. 52

Labor Defense Unity Vital!

The Herndon mass meeting in New York City Friday night turned out to have a deeper meaning than most defense rallies. At the same time that it was a greeting to Herndon on his temporary escape from the chain-gang, and a pledge of renewed support to his fight, it was also important for what some of the speakers said about the need for defense unity in general.

Those political groups supporting the Non-Partisan Labor Defense have always stood for defense unity. They have tried to collaborate with the I.L.D. since the N.P.L.D. was organized almost two years ago and, despite the I.L.D.'s sabotage they have compelled the I.L.D. to collaborate in several instances. The N.P.L.D. has also collaborated with the General Defense Committee of the I.W.O. With the Socialist Party it carried on extended negotiations when it was in a provisional stage, trying to get the S. P. to join with other forces in launching a non-partisan defense.

The N.P.L.D. and its supporters have never abandoned the fight for unity. Indeed, they have been the only ones to work seriously and concretely toward this. What was said about unity at the Herndon meeting, for example, came on the heels of an editorial in these pages advocating defense unity. And at the Herndon meeting itself, Julius Hochman's words on behalf of defense unity were more than echoed by the N.P.L.D. representative, who got a rousing reception when he stressed the need for a militant, unified class struggle defense organization.

Anna Damon of the I.L.D. also seconded Hochman's suggestions for unity. But Damon did not speak at all about policy. She would be content to have unity, and pay no attention at all to the question of program, principles, policy and tactics.

No Gratitude to Dorsey
That is not our idea of class struggle defense policy. Nor is it our understanding of defense that we owe any gratitude or honor to the judge who turned Herndon loose. How devoted Judge Dorsey is to "liberty" and "justice" may be seen from the fact that his decision includes a recommendation to the legislature that it enact a law which will be ironclad so that future Herndons may be sent to the chain-gang without any technical difficulties. As we see it, Dorsey let Herndon go because the exigencies of the Talmadge-Roosevelt faction brawl in the Democratic Party of Georgia make it uncomfortable to have a political prisoner on the chain-gang now that the Joint Committee to Aid the Herndon Defense has succeeded in making the Herndon issue popular with broad masses of workers and sympathizers. The decisive factor in freeing Herndon was the organized mass campaign which made a popular—and politically important—issue of the case.

It is important that things like this be understood in order that defense be properly planned, with its roots in a mass movement of trade unionists, unemployed and sympathizers. Only such a movement, backing up able attorneys (not professional admirers of the existing order), can win victories for the workers when they are attacked by the capitalist state. A unified defense movement must have such an attitude, be founded on such a program of class struggle—or the unity will be worthless to the class.

It is, of course, well understood that when we speak of the need for a militant class struggle program in defense work, we mean nothing like what passed for that with the Stalinists during their unlamented Third Period. Our comrade, Norman Mini, now prisoner 57966 in San Quentin, is paying every day for the kind of disruptive, provocative tactics which the I.L.D. brought into the Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial. There the I.L.D. attorney was neither able nor militant; he was a wild ratter who told the jury to its face that he did not speak for their benefit, but for the benefit of the four-score Stalinist spectators in the courtroom. There the broad masses brought no pressure because the C.P. drove them away . . . and the I.L.D. substituted for mass pressure the antics of a bakers dozen of its members who came into the court.

Avoiding intemperance and provocation on the one hand, simple legalism and opportunism on the other, a unified defense movement would be a great boon to the working class in these days of intense class struggle.

Questions of organizational steps are important. Hochman, for example, speaks of basing the unified defense movement on the trade unions. It is, of course, most desirable that unions affiliate to a defense body. But what is essential is a mass of individual members of the defense organization. The latter must be based on local branches of active militants, including trade unionists and others. Once such an organization is started, broad support may be sought and won from unions which affiliate, collectively. This and other organizational problems must be thrashed out.

But before organizational discussion is begun, questions of program must be clarified. In this connection we cannot do better than quote from the program of the N.P.L.D., the section on activities and methods:

The N.P.L.D. Program

1. Defense in Courts. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense will provide counsel who will serve under the direction of the organization, and will be formally bound to accept its direction. Defense in the courts will be conducted according to the following principles:

a. Legal Aid. The full utilization of every legal right and action for the benefit of the defendant. Here, as everywhere in its activities, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense will fight to secure and extend every democratic right granted under the present social system. It recognizes fully the great limitations of these rights as applied to workers; it will neither condone nor foster any illusions concerning them. But it will not commit the folly of being contemptuous of such rights as workers have, or of surrendering them—recognizing that they represent partial victories wrested from those in power by long and bitter struggles.

b. Presentation of Basic Labor Issues. The courtroom defense will be planned to bring out, as far as possible, the fundamental labor issues involved. Every effort will be made to reveal the role of the defendant as a fighter and victim in a cause in which all workers have a stake, and his persecution as a blow aimed against all. This will be done for the purpose of winning the sympathy of the jury for an acquittal and for providing inspiration for the organization of mass support and defense outside the courtroom.

2. Organized Mass Support. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense will conduct systematic campaigns to organize the weight and influence of masses of workers and others to secure the release of the defendant, through protests, public meetings and demonstrations, etc. United front bodies will be built, wherever possible, in which organized groups will be united on a commonly agreed program of action. Throughout, the chief organizational objective in building the mass defense will be to secure the active support and participation of the trade unions, fraternal and other labor organizations.

3. Publicity and Educational Activities. These will include promotion of defense aims and activities in the press, lectures, speakers' bureaus, publication of a bulletin, etc.

4. Aid to Prisoners and Defendants. Systematic campaigns to protect the rights, improve the living conditions and give material comfort to labor prisoners and other imprisoned victims of reactionary persecution; and to provide aid for their dependants.

Prepare to Don Khaki For 'Our U.S.'—C. P. Says

By M. JOERGER

According to Bittleman of the C. P., "The Left Socialists are endeavoring to arrive at a revolutionary policy of peace. We must try to help them overcome these difficulties." (Daily Worker, Dec. 6, from recent plenum of C.C. of C.P.)

Left Socialists may well question the authority of Bittleman to expound on this question. Isn't it a fact that in the special address of the Executive Committee of the Comintern, to the membership of the Communist Party of the U. S., in 1929, the minority faction and Bittleman in particular were accused of "sliding down to petty bourgeois pacifist slogans," in connection with the war danger?

It could however be pointed out that much that was pink and shady in 1929 has been graduated to become the official line in 1935. This is true to such an extent that the latest pronouncements of Bittleman reeking with the vilest chauvinism, are typical of official Stalinism.

In line with coalitionism, sanctions, and the other fruits of the Seventh Comintern Congress, the C. P. has just discovered the dangers of "isolation." The liberal pacifist illusion is propagated that pacts between American imperialism and other powers are progressive steps for the maintenance of "peace."

Bittleman expatiates abstractly on this question of "isolation," as if it meant one and the same thing to all classes. He develops the essential implication that the C. P. hopes for a pact between American imperialism and the Soviet Union, on the style of the recent Franco-Soviet Pact. In doing this, Bittleman lumps together the interests of the masses and the exploiters of this country.

He tries to convince the left Socialists and the masses generally of the "defensive" position of "this country," in the Far East. He says that it is clear "that the present war in the Far East directly threatens the peace of the United States." (My emphasis, M. J.) This is counterposed to "Japanese aggression."

"The peace of the U. S.!" As if American marines in the Yangtze are there to compete in an Olympic contest!

The best indication of the extent to which the Comintern has fallen into the mire of social patriotism is the frequency and regularity with which jingo phraseology appears in its official statements and resolutions.

For example, Bittleman says: "Every American knows that the Far East concerns this country very closely." Also . . . "or that Africa is still less of concern to us." (My emphasis—M.J.) "Every American," "this country" and "us" are terms deliberately used to bury the class struggle and replace it by class-collaboration.

The old trickeries that Lenin mercilessly exposed when they were manifested by the heroes of the 1914 betrayal are now being revived by Stalin's faithful lackeys.

The defense of the "Fatherland" against a foreign invasion is further developed. Bittleman points also to the possibility of an Anglo-German imperialist front "against the U. S." And come to think of it, poor American imperialism, which only recently paraded its huge naval forces in the Atlantic and Pacific . . . "is not yet ready for war," according to this Stalinist parrot!

For the enlightenment of the Left Socialists who have "not yet understood" it, the Leninist slogan of "transform the imperialist war into civil war" is now "shelved" by the Stalinists.

General Line of Betrayal
Under the slogan of "Defend the Soviet Union" and "Defend the peace of the U. S.," the C. P. becomes the recruiting agency for Wall Street.

To the masses of Great Britain the C.I. issues the war slogan, "Support the sanctions policy of the government."

To the exploited of French imperialism is issued the call to arms "to defend the republic against Hitler."

To the oppressed masses of the Central European vassal states—"Fight for your national independence against the German aggressor." . . . This, and more, ad nauseum.

Thus in unison do the Stalinists and the Second International prepare the mass basis for a new world imperialist carnage. All this in the name of "Defend the Soviet Union."

Lenin Castigates Bittleman
Lenin long ago asked, "How was it possible that the most eminent representatives and leaders of the Second International betrayed Socialism?" . . . The most primitive theory," says Lenin, "seems to be the one that points at an 'offender' state. 'We have been attacked,' 'we defend ourselves'; 'the interests of the proletariat demand resistance to the disturber of European peace.'" (Page 16, "War and the Second International.")

Instead of "European peace" substitute Bittleman's "peace of the U. S." and you have the American edition of 1914.

Bittleman has the gall to link Lenin's name to this Stalinist formula of applying "Marxism to the present world situation." He dubs this latest expression of social-patriotism the "Lenin-Stalin" method.

The unconditional tie-up of the proletariat to the chains of the capitalist state forces is precisely what is meant when Bittleman and Browder exclaim: "... the Communists of all countries will call upon the toilers to insure the victory of the Red Army over the armies of the imperialists by all means and at any price."

Gold—Recruiting Sergeant No. 1
Michael Gold is quick to dramatize the official line in his column in the Daily Worker of Dec. 9: "If the line-up is such, they," the Socialists, says Gold, "will fight in the American army if it is allied to the Soviet Union."

The next imperialist slaughter has thus found its masks in these valiant defenders of the "peace policy of the Soviet Union!"

Bittleman comes to his climax. He waxes dramatic . . . "the left Socialists," he says, "should ask themselves: 'Are we going to be neutral?' 'Will we advocate a policy of staying out' or will we say: 'Work by all means and at any price to insure the victory of the Red Army?'"

Hearst, Cahan, and now Bittleman. The logic of social betrayal has tied them into one knot. Can one discern a shade of difference in their appeals?

"Phoney and funny," says Bittleman in reference to Hearst. "Phoney" but not funny is the social content of the scribbles of the Bittlemans and their ilk. Such hypocrites and war mongers rant and howl at "Trotskyism."

Build the Fourth International is the answer to them.

The Workers Party alone uncovers the layers of this social demagoguery in this country by pointing to the only path of struggle against war, the way of Lenin and Trotsky. Only the road of revolutionary defeatism, the relentless civil war against "our own" imperialism, is the way of struggle for peace, and the "defense of the Soviet Union." "This is our base, our starting point, understand this and the rest will follow. . . ."

Russell Gets Four Months

several sheriffs' cars. On Friday morning the testimony was again resumed before a packed courtroom. Police officers testified against Russell, claiming that he had deliberately broken a milk bottle on the driveway leading into the plant. Late in the morning came some of the most interesting testimony, presented by Capt. Martin Steffen, acting, he claimed, for Adjutant General Walsh as an observer. Under cross-examination by Attorney Green (who is defending Billis and Swanson) and Attorney Heller, Steffen admitted that he had been a member of the National Guard for 17 years; that on Nov. 29 he mingled with the crowd of pickets; that he went into strike headquarters; that he talked with every police officer at the scene; that he went inside the Strutwear plant and asked the janitor, a labor spy named Carl Hanson, for the names of some of the pickets in the crowd. Despite the efforts of the judge, it was clearly brought out that Steffen is a common stool pigeon working under the guise of a "military observer." His testimony against Russell conflicted at several important points with the testimony given by the police officers. Late Friday afternoon, Judge Molyneux announced that the trial would be continued over to 9:30 Monday morning.

Strike-breaking Courts

The Non-Partisan Labor Defense has announced that it means to fight this case to the end. The issue at stake is: are employers now to be permitted to use the federal courts and United States marshals as strike-breaking agents, through the granting of fraudulent writs of replevin and similar actions? To permit such an act to go unchallenged would be a crime against America's working class—for if the Strutwear bosses got off scot-free in this particular case, it would be no time at all before bosses all over the country would resort to such dodges in their attempt to crush the growing union movement. Certainly there has been a tendency on the part of the reaction in this country for the past year or so to resort more and more to the courts in order to hold the working class in its monstrous poverty and bondage.

The work of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense—its mobilization of wide-spread interest and support of the Russell case—together with the courtroom work of attorneys Francis Heifer and Gilbert Carlson, has unquestionably won many friends for the N.P.L.D. in the past week. Labor leaders who formerly have been rather cool to the idea of a nation-wide labor defense organization have been frank in expressing their admiration for the effective manner in which the N.P.L.D. has functioned in the Strutwear case.

Class Struggle Issues Arouse West Coast Maritime Unions average pay of $60 per month. No holidays for the seamen. It is only natural and just that they have a demand to claim overtime pay after working these long hours instead of time back.

"The living and eating quarters of the seamen as a rule are in terrible condition, poor heating and ventilation systems, rotten sleeping quarters, messrooms so small that men must wait in turn for another to eat. This condition and many others exist on most of the ships. The only way these conditions were remedied was by the action of the men themselves, refusing to live and work under such conditions. This action the men were forced to take, as the new existing labor relations board never was able to get anything for the men. The shipowners always manage to stall and block action."

The Portland local of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, for example, in a letter sent to the "Voice of the Federation," organ of the Maritime Federation, has the following to state, in part:

Job Action Gets Results

"After the 1934 strike the men were forced to job action practically all of the time, in order to force the shipowners to give them their due rights. On the strength of the united action of various ship crews, the owners and the government were finally forced to hand down the present award, which they so recently have broken by denying the men collective bargaining. Job action forced the American Hawaiian, the Shepard Line, and various other companies to recognize the I.S.U."

"We could name hundreds of other cases where job action was the only weapon whereby the seamen got their just rights."

Let us quote from another letter sent into the "Voice," this time by a member of the American Radio Telegraphers Association, and approved by the Seattle local of that union.

"These articles were written in answer to an editorial published in the 'Voice' giving the pros and cons of job action. The editorial was entitled 'Job Action, or Else!'" "Job action is not the spontaneous demonstration of the will of the crew as the author of 'Job Action or Else!' states. It is rather the last resort of men who have fully acquainted the ship operators or owners with a condition they do not care to sail under. After being refused the request, the crew has no alternative but to use job action."

"Following is the case of the crew of the S. S. Suweld of the Nelson Line. The crew of the S.S. Suweld knowing the ship not to be any too seaworthy, decided that they wanted the added protection of radio in the event an S.O.S. should have to be sent. For the information of those who do not know, the Nelson line has been operating a fleet of ships in the intercoastal trade. It has carried as many as nine passengers on a ship without radio equipment. None of the Nelson ships are very modern seacraft. Out-moded laws have no jurisdiction over the specific case mentioned above. The steamship companies will tell you that they do not carry radio on ships where there are less than fifty lives aboard. In point of law they are right. But how about the crew? Have they no right to state under what conditions they will take chances with a watery grave?"

"The case of the Suweld is no isolated one in job action. The crew were granted their just demands. Wireless apparatus was installed and a competent radio officer was placed in charge of the equipment."

One thing becomes clear from the above extracts, and that is that in the opinion of the men themselves (and who should know better than they) JOB ACTION GETS RESULTS.

Yet job action has been under steady attack by right wing elements as well as by Stalinists, who under guise of being for "organized" job action, steadily oppose the virile action of the seamen, and emasculate job action.

Lundberg Answers Conservatives

Harry Lundberg, representative of the seamen, in answer to the editorial "Job Action or Else!" has the following to state:

Objection: "They (opponents of job action) believe that indiscriminate, unorganized job action will prove a boomerang. That it will not only fail, but that it will definitely harm the maritime workers' front Worker" also states that this movement."

Reply by Lundberg: "Job action is never indiscriminate, unorganized or unjust. As long as the men mutually agree, they have a just grievance which cannot be adjusted otherwise than through job action."

Objection: "Job action, like any other spontaneous elemental effort on the part of men goaded to extremity, has its drawbacks. Where emotion and antipathy can occasionally dilute cool reason, mistakes are bound to occur."

Reply: "Job action is not spontaneous. Neither is it emotional. The men who use job action are the men on the job who are discriminated against. Who knows better than the man on the job. Surely not the committee which in most cases slowing up or holding back the progress of the seamen."

"There are elements within the Maritime Federation who fear the organized mass movement of the workers. These are the right wingers who, basing themselves upon some of the better situated sections of the maritime workers, now find themselves in the position where they are in deadly fear of any disturbance of the status quo and their position. In answer to the demands of the underpaid, overworked elements for better conditions, they lift an admonishing finger. That there are dangers in job action is true, but these dangers must not blind us to the correctness (as proven by the effectiveness) of the seamen's position for job action."

Stalinists on Reactionary Side

Opposition to job action is perfectly understandable from the point of view of a right wing bureaucrat who fears motion of the masses as the devil himself. The Stalinists, however, have also come out against job action, by coming out for "organized" job action. (The seamen stood for "unorganized" job action according to these worthies.) In the final analysis, this means no action at all, as proven by their attacks upon picket lines (stewards) of the seamen, who had come out in favor of crews taking action. For their pains the Stalinists received the following reply by Chas. Cates, second patron of the Seamen's Union:

"The editor of the Waterfront Worker, the anonymous organ of the C. P. on the waterfront, has taken it upon himself to ridicule and condemn the actions taken by the patrolmen of the Sailor's Union."

"He (the editor of the Waterfront Worker) also states that this job action was taken without the consent of the rank and file.

"Now this action was taken right on the job by the men themselves with one idea in mind. And that idea was to get the full support of the Sailor's Union, and not a lot of scares and threats that they would be breaking the award and probably be the cause of a coastwise strike."

"It was proven that job action is bringing results."

"I say instead of discouraging such action, steps should be taken to encourage job action."

About the same time as the article appeared in the Waterfront Worker an editorial appeared in the Western Worker, organ of the Communist Party, attacking Harry Lundberg, leader of the elements standing for job action. The heading of this editorial is entitled "We Need Maritime Unity—Not Beef Squads."

Workers Slam Stalinists

Harry Lundberg answered this editorial in an article that was unanimously endorsed by the Sailors' Union.

The following is the heading of this statement by Lundberg, "Sailors' Union Condemns Editorial."

"The following answer to the vicious attack appearing in the Western Worker received the unanimous and enthusiastically acclaimed endorsement of the Sailors' Union at their last meeting."

The statement then went on to sharply condemn the attack on Lundberg, giving a picture of what actually took place rather than the distorted piece of fiction of the Western Worker.

In reply to this sharp statement made by the sailors, the Western Worker published a snivelling, creeping, crawling article of which the main theme was that an attack on the Western Worker is support for the shipowners.

In answer to this hypocritical statement let us refer that paper to an article written by two seamen, panning the little brother of the Western Worker, the Waterfront Worker:

"The San Francisco Chronicle, the American Seaman, organ of the official right wing in the Seamen's Union, both took the same stand as the editorial in the Waterfront Worker in condemning job action. SO WHAT? In our opinion this is certainly no compliment to the Waterfront Worker, or any other so-called rank and file publication. Instead of questioning the sincerity of the writers of these three men (patrolmen who pushed job action) we believe that the sincerity of the writers of the article in the Waterfront Worker should be questioned."

The Stalinists in this crucial question are following the logic of their extreme right turn. Within the mass movement they are a fetter upon its development. The Stalinists will have to be removed as well as the right wing in order for the union to make any further steps in advance.

Maritime Federation Resolution Ambiguous

A number of weeks ago the controversy was laid over for solution to a specially called convention of the Maritime Federation. The Maritime Federation has issued an ambiguous resolution, which generally supports the Stalinist version of job action—organized job action. Let us quote the resolution:

"Whereas, we believe and have demonstrated on numerous occasions that job action rightly used, with proper control, has been the means of gaining many concessions for the maritime workers on the Pacific coast, and

"Whereas, in as much as job action is and should be action taken when any group of maritime workers desire to gain a concession without openly resorting to a strike, and

"Whereas, in order to eliminate confusion and insure coordination of efforts in the best interests of all maritime groups concerned, it is apparent that an organized method of procedure for job action be laid down by this convention, therefore be it

"Resolved, that the term job action shall mean only action taken by any maritime group in attempting to gain from their employers some concessions specifically provided for in their respective agreement or awards and shall also mean action taken to enforce the award or agreement to the best interests of the maritime groups concerned, or to prevent employers from violating agreements or awards, and be it further

"Resolved, that job action should be confined to a job such as a ship, dock, shop, or warehouse, unless otherwise agreed by all maritime groups affected or liable to be affected should be notified and the issue in question be placed before them, and be it further

"Resolved, that a committee of all maritime groups affected on the job be formed on the job to consolidate action and prevent misunderstandings; such committees' authority not to exceed the constitution of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast, and be it further

"Resolved, that when job action reaches a point in the opinion of the majority of the maritime groups affected by having their members pulled off the job, and that to go further may jeopardize the Maritime Federation as a whole, the matter shall be referred where and when possible to the district council for further action or adjustment."

Instead of a sharp statement endorsing any action taken by the seamen in order to maintain and better their conditions, this resolution, endorsed by the Stalinists, comes out with a lot of ifs and whereases. In reality, this resolution does not answer any question and leaves the important question still open: will the maritime leadership wholeheartedly support job action or will it try to spend its time proving to the San Francisco Chronicle, and the "good" shipowners how level-headed and sane they are.

For a Class Struggle Policy

Unqualified support of any group of workers struggling to better their conditions! No conditions must be given to this support! A class struggle policy, not a class-collaborationist policy will benefit the worker on the waterfront as a whole. And as part of the solution of this question we must present the following: the need for an industrial union on the waterfront instead of a federation of unions. The Maritime Federation was a progressive step over the lack of unity previously the rule on the waterfront. The first step should be followed by a second one: the organization of a Marine Transport Industrial Union. The conflict between one section and another section of the workers will then be done away with. The present situation with a number of agreements and awards, instead of one agreement, is a many of the drawbacks of craft unionism.

It is necessary to also point out that the role of the Stalinists as progressives is a false one. Posing as left wingers, as rank and filers, their action has proved that in the final analysis they are an obstacle in the workers' struggle. In reality they are closer to "progressives" of the John L. Lewis and Gorman type than to the rank and file. The creation of a genuine left wing union movement, free of Stalinist influence, is on the order of the day.
